2 And the people [d]cried unto Moses; and when Moses [e]prayed unto the LORD, [f]the fire [‡]was quenched.

3 And he called the name of the place [§]Taberah: because the fire of the LORD burnt among them.

4 ¶ And [g]the mixed multitude that was among them [l]fell a lusting: and [h]the children of Israel also [*]wept again, and said, [i]Who shall give us flesh to eat?

5 We remember [k]the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick:

6 But now [l]our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all, besides this manna, before our eyes.

7 And [m]the manna was as coriander-seed, and the [†]colour thereof as the colour of [n]bdellium.

8 And [o]the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and [p]baked it in pans, and made cakes of it: and the [q]taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil.

9 And when [r]the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.

10 ¶ Then Moses heard the people [s]weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and [t]the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; [u]Moses also was displeased.

11 And Moses said unto the LORD, [x]Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant? and [y]wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them, that thou shouldest say unto me, [z]Carry them in thy bosom (as a nursing-father beareth the sucking child) unto [a]the land which thou swarest unto their fathers?

13 [b]Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh, that we may eat.

14 I am [c]not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me.

15 And if thou deal thus with me, [d]kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy sight; and [e]let me not see my wretchedness.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Gather unto me [f]seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders trumpet, and be engaged to fight their battles; let all the people take notice of it, and be encouraged to fight his, as David, when he heard "a sound of a going upon the tops of the mulberry trees."—Henry.

GOVERNMENT OF THEIR MARCH.—After the Israelites had continued nearly a year at mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 1, to settle every thing respecting their future worship, they began their march to Canaan; whither they might speedily have arrived, had they not renewed their rebellions. This might typically teach us, that, though true religion often begins with the knowledge of the holy law, and humiliation for sin; yet we must not always abide there, but go on towards perfection in an acquaintance with Christ and his gospel, and those effectual encouragements, motives, and assistances to holiness, which it proposes. Previously to the removal of the cloud, the people seem to have had an express command to set out on their journey. In consequence of this we may suppose, that they got all ready for their march; when the removing of the cloud gave the signal for their actually setting off. And in general we must suppose that they had time allowed for these purposes.

JETHRO.—It is most probable that Jethro was the same person with Reul, or Raguel; and that Hobab was his son, and Moses' brother-in-law, who had remained with Moses and Zipporah, and the Israelites, when his father departed from them; or had come to them afterwards. Though the people were under the immediate direction of God in their march, yet in respect of the conveniences or inconveniences of the places through which they passed, they might receive profitable cautions and instructions from a person acquainted with the desert. Some, however, translate the words rendered, "thou mayest be unto us instead of eyes," in the past tense, and interpret it as a thankful acknowledgment of the advantages which Israel had derived from Hobab's counsel and direction, for which they could make him no amends, except he would go with them, and share the kindness which the Lord had in reserve for them in the promised land, whither they reasonably expected soon to arrive. But others interpret the words to signify that (like his father Jethro) he might be very useful to Moses, by his advice, and should be admitted among his select counsellors, if he would continue in the camp. We may suppose that Hobab was withdrawn from his first purpose and accompanied them. We shall hereafter read of his posterity; and it is probable that an inheritance was assigned them in Canaan.

CHAP. XI. MURMURING.—"The people were as complainers;" that is, they murmured against Moses, and against the Lord.—When we consider the wonderful works wrought for Israel before their eyes; the excellent laws which they had received; the mild government under which they lived; the manner in which their camp was victualled, watered, guarded, and guided; and the tokens which they enjoyed of the Lord's special presence and favour; we are apt to inquire what grounds of complaint they could have. But some would be dissatisfied, that they and their friends were excluded from the government and the priesthood; some would murmur at being kept so long in the wilderness; others would be weary with marching three days together without resting, except merely to take present refreshment; and various occasions of discontent would be found among so vast a multitude. Since the sin committed in respect of the golden calf, the people had appeared obedient and tractable, and the rulers liberal and cheerful in affording assistance: but their evil dispositions, though overawed, were not slain; they therefore speedily revived, and produced more fatal effects than ever. The Lord being thus provoked made them sensible of the power of his fiery indignation. Probably many were destroyed, as Nadab and Abihu had been, by fire from the Lord, or by flashes of lightning, perhaps from the fiery pillar. Though they had several times before murmured, they had not been thus punished; for, not having known so much of the Lord's will, nor seen so much of his glory, nor experienced so much of his kindness, they were before more excusable than at this time.—Yet even now the fire seems only to have consumed some of those, who resorted to the uttermost parts of the camp, to associate with the mixed multitude. The lusting for other food than manna began among the mixed multitude; but it seems to have speedily spread among the Israelites, and to have anew excited their impatient lamentations and murmurings. They were not on this occasion merely guilty of discontent, and an inordinate desire of flesh to eat; but they limited the power of God, as if it were impossible for him to give them it in their present circumstances. The subsequent particulars are mentioned concerning the manna, in order to illustrate the goodness of the Lord to Israel, in giving them, without trouble or expense, so suitable, nourishing, and palatable a food; and which afforded them variety also, by the different ways in which it might be prepared. Thus the ingratitude and unreasonableness of the people in their lustings were strongly marked.—It is no where intimated that they were sickly or feeble, through feeding continually upon manna; though the greediness of their appetite after other food drank up their spirits, and caused "their soul to dry away."—It would not indeed have been proper for them to have slain all their numerous flocks and herds, nor would the whole have satisfied their lustings; yet, had they not been too covetous, or too desirous of dainty meats, they might from time to time have feasted upon flesh, by presenting peace-offerings to the Lord. But to their dissatisfied mind, every thing appears worthless, in comparison of the Egyptian diet, which they speak of particularly, and with great regret; though probably of the people, and [h]officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee.

17 And [i]I will come down and [k]talk with thee there: and I [l]will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and [m]they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.

18 And say thou unto the people, [n]Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: (for [o]ye have wept in the ears of the LORD, saying, Who shall give us flesh to eat? for [p]it was well with us in Egypt:) therefore the LORD will give you flesh, and ye shall eat.

19 Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days;

20 But even [s]a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, [q]and it be loathsome unto you: because that ye have [r]despised the LORD which is among you, and have wept before him, saying, Why came we forth out of Egypt?

21 ¶ And Moses said, The people, among whom I am, are [t]six hundred thousand footmen;[1] and thou hast said, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month.

22 Shall [u]the flocks and the herds be slain for them, to suffice them? or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, to suffice them?

23 And the LORD said unto Moses, [v]Is the LORD'S hand waxed short?[2] [x]thou shalt see now whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not.

24 ¶ And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the LORD, and [y]gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle.

25 And the LORD [z]came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and [a]took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, [b]they prophesied, and did not cease.

26 But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the spirit rested upon them, (and they were of them that were written, but [c]went not out unto the tabernacle,) and they prophesied in the camp.[3]

27 And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp.

28 And [d]Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered, and said, [e]My lord Moses, forbid them.

it was nothing better than the most ordinary food of the very poorest of the people!—Scott.

MOSES PROVOKED.—Moses needed not to be in care to provide quarters for them, or victuals, God did all. And if any difficult case happened, he needed not to be in any perplexity while he had the oracle to consult, and, in it, the divine wisdom to direct him, the divine authority to back him and bear him out, and almighty power itself to dispense rewards and punishments. He is not so sensible as he ought to be of the obligation he lay under, by virtue of the divine commission and command, to do the utmost he could for his people; he suggests that, because they were not the children of his body, therefore he was not then concerned to take a fatherly care of them, though God himself, who might employ him as he pleased, had appointed him to be a father to them. He takes too much to himself when he asks "Whence should I have flesh to give them?" ver. 13, as if he were the housekeeper, and not God. "Moses gave them not the bread," John vi. 32. Nor was it expected that he should give them the flesh, but as an instrument in God's hand; and if he meant, "Whence should God have it for them!" he too much limited the power of the Holy One of Israel. He speaks distrustfully of the divine grace when he despairs of being "able to bear all this people," ver. 14. Had the work been much less, he could not have gone through it in his own strength; but, had it been much greater, through God strengthening him, he might have done it. It was worst of all passionately to wish for death, and desire to be killed out of hand, because just at this time his life was made a little uneasy to him, ver. 15. Is this Moses? is this the meekest of all men on the earth? The best have their infirmities, and fail sometimes in the exercise of that grace which they are most eminent for. But God graciously overlooked Moses's passion at this time, and therefore we must not be severe in our animadversions upon it, but pray, "Lord, lead us not into temptation."—Henry.

ELDAD AND MEDAD.—The seventy elders being endued by the Holy Spirit, either praised God with such fervency and in such exalted strains, or they spake in so fluent [illegible] edifying a manner, in exhorting the people, and were so raised above themselves in [illegible] and utterance, that all around them were sensible they spake by a divine [illegible] perhaps they likewise foretold future events. These gifts were a divine sanction [illegible] ointment, as assistants to Moses in governing the nation. The words rendered [illegible] may be translated added no further. They prophesied on that occasion, [illegible] they were [illegible] monially unclean; but others think that they humbly declined so arduous an office, or were reluctant to engage in it. The Spirit of God, however, singled them out in the camp, and there they prophesied.—Scott.

QUAILS.—The great people were gratified with flesh in abundance, ver. 31. "A wind" (a south-east wind, as appears, Ps. lxxviii. 26,) "brought quails." It is uncertain what sort of animals they were; the psalmist calls them "feathered fowl, or fowl of wing." They were greedy of this flesh that God sent them; they "flew upon the spoil" with an unsatiable appetite, not regarding what Moses had told them from God, that they would surfeit upon it, ver. 32. Two days and a night they were at it, gathering flesh, till every master of a family had brought home ten homers (that was ten ass-loads) at least. David longed for the water of the well of Bethlehem, but would not drink it when he had it, because it was obtained by venturing; much more reason these Israelites had to refuse this flesh, which was obtained by murmuring, and which they might easily perceive, by what Moses said, was given them in anger; but those that are under the power of a carnal mind will have their lusts fulfilled, though it be to the certain damage and ruin of their precious souls. They paid dear for their feasts, when it came into the reckoning, ver. 33. "The Lord smote them with a very great plague;" some bodily disease, which probably was the effect of their surfeit, and was the death of many of them, and those, it is likely, the ringleaders in the mutiny. Note, God often grants the desires of sinners in wrath, while he denies the desires of his own people in love.—Henry.

CHAP. XII. MIRIAM'S SIN.—Moses had at this time been so long married to Zipporah, that there is some difficulty in understanding how his conduct in that respect should at length give occasion to Miriam and Aaron to oppose him: yet there is no intimation that Zipporah was dead, or divorced, or that he had married another woman; and it is utterly incredible, that after the giving of so great a part of the law, he should himself take a stranger to wife. The word rendered "an Ethiopian woman," signifies "a Cushite," which properly means "a descendant of Cush," Gen. x. 6—8, but it is used with some latitude; and it is generally supposed to include other tribes, besides the posterity of Cush, either in Asia, or Africa. It is probable that Zipporah was a descendant of Abraham by Keturah; now the different tribes, which sprang from Abraham by her, inhabited some parts of Arabia, and were greatly blended with the Ishmaelites, and [illegible] also with some of the race of Cush. In this large sense, Zipporah might be [illegible] when this was said of her at first contemporaries, [illegible] according to the common way of speaking [illegible] to be mentioned first, as the leader in [illegible]

Strabo says, that in Margiana, and other places, the vines were so big that two men could scarce compass them; and that they produced bunches of grapes two cubits long. Olearius tells us, that not far from Astracan, in Persia, he saw vines that a man could hardly grasp with both arms. And Huetius affirms, that in Crete, Chios, and other islands of the Archipelago, there are bunches of grapes from ten to forty pounds in weight. — STACKHOUSE.

16 These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called [s]Oshea the son of Nun, [h]Jehoshua.[1]

17 ¶ And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way [i]southward, and go up into [k]the mountain;

18 And see [l]the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many;

19 And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strong holds;

20 And what the land is, [m]whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein, or not: and be ye of [n]good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. (Now the time was the time of [o]the first-ripe grapes.)

21 ¶ So they went up, and searched the land, [p]from the wilderness of Zin unto [q]Rehob, as men come to [r]Hamath.

22 And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron; where [s]Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were. (Now [t]Hebron was built seven years before [u]Zoan in Egypt.)

23 And they came unto the [*]brook of Eshcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two[2] upon a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs.

24 The place was called the [†]brook [‡]Eshcol, because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down from thence.

25 And they returned from searching of the land after [x]forty days.

26 ¶ And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Paran, to [y]Kadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and shewed them the fruit of the land.

27 And they told him, and said, We came unto the land whither thou sentest us, and surely [z]it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it.

seems that the Lord had on some occasions spoken not only by Aaron, but also by her; and probably it was thought that Zipporah, and her relations, had too much influence with Moses. The name of Aaron had not been mentioned in the appointment of the seventy elders; and this might give umbrage to him and Miriam. Perhaps there had been some private jar between Miriam and Zipporah; though no blame at all is laid on the latter in the narrative. But, probably, it was a general opinion, that Moses' wife, being a foreigner, was a disgrace to him and the people; and that he ought to put her away, and marry an Israelitish woman.—Scott.

THE HONOUR OF MOSES.—Moses was honoured with clearer discoveries of God's mind, and a more intimate communication with God, than any other prophet whatsoever. He shall, 1. Hear more from God than any other prophet, more clearly and distinctly; "With him will I speak mouth to mouth," or "face to face," Exod. xxxiii. 11, "as a man speaks to his friend," whom he discourses with freely and familiarly, and without any confusion or consternation, such as sometimes other prophets were under; as Ezekiel and Daniel, and St. John himself, when God spake to them. By other prophets God sent to his people reproofs, and predictions of good or evil, which were properly enough delivered in dark speeches, figures, types, and parables; but by Moses he gave laws to his people, and the institution of holy ordinances, which could by no means be delivered by dark speeches, but must be expressed in the plainest and most intelligible manner. 2. He shall see more of God than any other prophet; "the similitude of the Lord shall he behold," as he hath seen in Horeb, when God proclaimed his name before him. Yet he saw only the similitude of the Lord, angels and glorified saints "always behold the face" of our Father.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. THE SPIES.—Here we have, 1. Orders given to send spies to search out the land of Canaan. It is here said, God directed Moses to send them, ver. 1, 2, but it appears, by the repetition of the story afterward, Deut. i. 22, that the motion came originally from the people; they came to Moses, and said, "We will send men before us;" and it was the fruit of their unbelief. They would not take God's word that it was a good land; and that he would, without fail, put them in possession of it: they could not trust the pillar of cloud and fire to show them the way to it, but had a better opinion of their own politics than of God's wisdom. How absurd was it for them to send to spy out a land which God himself had spied out for them; to inquire the way into it, when God himself had undertaken to show them the way! But thus we ruin ourselves, by giving [illegible] to the reports and representations of sense than to divine revelation; by [illegible] by [illegible], whereas, "if we will "receive the witness of men, [illegible] doubt, "the witness of God is greater." The people making this motion to Moses, he (perhaps not aware of the unbelief at the bottom of it) consulted God in the case, who bade him gratify the people in this matter, and send spies before them; "Let them walk in their own counsels." Yet God was no way accessary to the sin that followed, for the sending of these spies was so far from being the cause of the sin, that, if the spies had done their duty, and the people theirs, it might have been the confirmation of their faith, and of good service to them. 2. The persons nominated that were to be employed in this service, ver. 4, &c. "One of each tribe," that it might appear to be the act of the people in general; and rulers, persons of figure in their respective tribes, some of the rulers of thousands or hundreds, to put the greater credit upon their embassy: this was designed for the best, but it proved to have this ill effect, that the quality of the persons occasioned the evil report they brought up to be the more credited, and the people to be the more influenced by it.

THEIR SURVEY AND RETURN.—They took particular notice of Hebron, ver. 22, probably, because near there was the field of Machpelah, where the patriarchs were buried, Gen. xxiii. 2, whose dead bodies did, as it were, keep possession of that land for their posterity. To this sepulchre they made a particular visit, and found the adjoining city in the possession of the sons of Anak, who are here named. In that place where they expected the greatest encouragements, they met with the greatest discouragements. Where the bodies of their ancestors kept possession for them, the giants keep possession against them. We are informed that "they ascended by the south, and came to Hebron," that is, "Caleb," says the Jews, "in particular," for to his being there, we find express reference, Josh. xiv. 9, 12, 13. But that others of the spies were there too, appears by their description of the Anakim, ver. 33. They brought a bunch of grapes with them, and some other of the fruits of the land, as a proof of the extraordinary goodness of the country. Probably, they furnished themselves with these fruits when they were leaving the country and returning. The cluster of grapes was so large, and so heavy, that they hung it upon a bar, and carried it between two of them, ver. 23, 24. The place whence they took it was, from this circumstance, called the "valley of the cluster;" that famous cluster, which was to Israel both the earnest and the specimen of all the fruits of Canaan. Such are the present comforts which we have in communion with God, foretastes of the fulness of joy we expect in the heavenly Canaan. We may see by them what heaven is.

THEIR BAD REPORT.—The major part discourage the people from going [illegible] to Canaan; and justly are the [illegible] for [illegible] by putting [illegible] [illegible] in the judgment of sense, [illegible] the word of God by 29 The [c]Amalekites dwell in the land of the south; and [d]the Hittites, and the Jebusites, and the Amorites, dwell in the mountains; and the Canaanites dwell by the sea, and by the coast of Jordan.

30 And [e]Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it.

31 But the men that went up with him said, [f]We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we.[3]

32 And they [g]brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched unto the children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to search it, is a [h]land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are [g]men of a great stature.

33 And there we saw [i]the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants: and [k]we were in our own sight as grasshoppers,[4] and so we were in their sight.

CHAP. XIV.

AND all the congregation [a]lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night.

2 And all the children of Israel [b]murmured against Moses and against Aaron; and the whole congregation said unto them, [c]Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or, would God we had died in this wilderness!

3 And wherefore hath [d]the LORD[1] brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that [e]our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

4 And they said one to another, [f]Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

5 Then Moses and Aaron [g]fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel.

6 ¶ And [h]Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, [i]rent their clothes.

7 And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to search it, is [k]an exceeding good land.

8 If the LORD [l]delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey.

righteous thing with God to give those up to strong delusions, who will not receive his truth in the love of it. Observe their report. 1. They cannot deny but that the land of Canaan was a very fruitful land; the bunch of grapes they brought with them was an ocular demonstration of it, ver. 27. God had promised them a land flowing with milk and honey, and the evil spies themselves own that it is such a land. Thus even out of the mouth of adversaries will God be glorified, and the truth of his promise attested. And yet afterward they contradict themselves, when they say, ver. 32, "It is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof:" as if, though it had milk, and honey, and grapes, yet it wanted other necessary provisions: some think that there was a great plague in the country at the time that they surveyed it, which they ought to have imputed to the wisdom of the Divine Providence, which thus lessened the numbers of their enemies, to facilitate their conquests; but they invidiously imputed it to the unwholesomeness of the air, and thence took occasion to disparage the country. For this unreasonable fear of a plague in Canaan, they justly were cut off immediately by a "plague in the wilderness," chap. xiv. 37. But, 2. They represent the conquest of it as altogether impracticable, and that it was to no purpose to attempt it. The people are strong, ver. 28, men of a "great stature," ver. 32, "stronger than we," ver. 31. The cities are represented as impregnable fortresses, they "are walled," and "very great," ver. 28. But nothing served their ill purpose more than a description of the giants, which they lay a great stress upon. "We saw the children of Anak there," ver. 28; and again, we "saw the giants," those men of a prodigious size, the "sons of Anak," which "come of the giants," ver. 33. They spake as if they were ready to tremble at the mention of them, as they had done at the sight of them. "Oh, these tremendous giants! when we were near them 'we were in our own sight as grasshoppers,' not only little and weak, but trembling and daunted."—Henry.

CHAP. XIV. MURMURING OF THE PEOPLE.—Nothing can be conceived more absurd as well as rebellious, than the whole conduct of Israel on this occasion. Surely it had been at least as eligible to have fallen soldier-like, sword in hand, in attempting to conquer Canaan, as to have died slaves in Egypt, or by famine or pestilence in the wilderness! Had it been possible for them to have reached Egypt, they might have expected much more severe treatment than that which had formerly extorted their doleful groans. But that must have been absolutely impracticable; for, could they expect to be miraculously guided, victualled, and watered, in their rebellious retrograde march? Yet, without this, such a company could never have traversed that waste howling wilderness, but, without any immediate judgment from God, must inevitably have perished. The whole was a strong indication of the most horrible ingratitude, blasphemy, and rebellion. The Lord was directly charged with an intention of bringing them out of Egypt, by alluring them with the most encouraging promises, on purpose to destroy them and their families: and the whole present government, of his express appointment, was to be set aside, and a new leader chosen, in opposition to him, and in defiance of him; nay, it seems one was actually appointed. Such is human nature! and such counsellors are discontent and passion!—Scott.

CALEB AND JOSHUA.—No reasoning could be more pertinent and pathetical than theirs here, ver. 7—9, and they spake as with authority. 1. They assured them of the goodness of the land they had surveyed, and that it was worth venturing for, and not a land that "ate up the inhabitants," as the evil spies had represented it. It is an "exceeding good land," ver. 7, it is "very, very good;" so the word is; so that they had no reason to "despise this pleasant land." Note, If men were but thoroughly convinced of the desirableness of the gains of religion, they would not stick at the services of it. 2. They made nothing of the difficulties that seemed to lie in the way of their gaining the possession of it. "'Fear not the people of the land,' ver. 9. Whatever formidable ideas have been given you of them, the lion is not so fierce as he is painted; 'they are bread for us,' that is, "they are set before us rather to be fed upon than to be fought with; so easily, so pleasantly and with so much advantage to ourselves, shall we master them." Pharaoh is said to have been given them for meat, Ps. lxxiv. 14, and the Canaanites will be so too. They show, that, whatever was suggested to the contrary, the advantage was clear on Israel's side. Though the Canaanites dwell in walled cities, they are naked, "their defence was departed from them;" that common providence, which preserves the rights of nations, has abandoned them, and will be no shelter or protection to them. The other spies took notice of their strength, but these of their wickedness, and from thence inferred that God had forsaken them, and therefore "their defence was departed." No people can be safe when they have provoked God to leave them.—Henry.

INTERCESSION OF MOSES.—In this earnest prayer, Moses does not in the least excuse the sin of Israel, or object to the justice of the awful sentence, or argue that such a conduct would not consist with the Divine truth and goodness; but he pleads the appearance which it would have, and the construction which the Egyptians and neighbouring nations would put upon it, in their communications with each other. They had witnessed, or heard of, the miracles which God had wrought for Israel, and the promises which he had made to the nation, and would never think of ascribing their destruction to the true cause, but conclude that he was unable to fulfil his engagements. He there-had another spirit with him, and hath [q]followed me fully, him will I bring into the land whereunto he went; and his seed shall possess it.

25 (Now [r]the Amalekites and the Canaanites dwelt in the valley.) To-morrow [s]turn you,[1] and get you into the wilderness, by the way of the Red sea.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

27 [t]How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur against me? [u]I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel, which they murmur against me.

28 Say unto them, [x]As truly as I live, saith the LORD, [y]as ye have spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you:

29 Your [z]carcases shall fall in this wilderness; and [a]all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me,

30 Doubtless ye shall not come into the land concerning which I [b]sware to make you dwell therein, [c]save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

31 But your [d]little ones, which[e] ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know [f]the land which ye have despised.

32 But as for you, [g]your carcases, they shall fall in this wilderness.

33 And your children [h]shall [i]wander in the wilderness [k]forty years,[3] and [l]bear your whoredoms, until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness.

34 [m]After [n]the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, (each day for a year,) [o]shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and [p]ye shall know my *breach of promise.

35 I the LORD have said, [q]I will surely do it unto all [r]this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.

36 ¶ And [s]the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing up a slander upon the land,

37 Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, [t]died by the plague[4] before the LORD.

38 But [u]Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to search the land, lived still.

39 And Moses told these sayings unto all the children of Israel: and the people [v]mourned greatly.

40 ¶ And they [w]rose up early in the morning, and gat them up[5] into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the LORD hath [x]promised: for we have sinned.

41 And Moses said, Wherefore now [y]do ye transgress the commandment of the Lord? [z]but it shall not prosper.

42 [a]Go not up, for the LORD is not among you; that ye be not smitten before your enemies.

43 For [b]the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword: [c]because ye are turned away from the LORD, therefore the LORD will not be with you.

44 But [d]they presumed to go up unto the hill-top: nevertheless [e]the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and Moses, departed not out of the camp.

45 Then [f]the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto [g]Hormah.[6]

The law of sundry offerings, 2. The sabbath-breaker stoned, 32. The law of fringes, 37.

AND the LORD spake[1] unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [a]When ye be come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you,

3 And [b]will make an offering by fire unto the LORD, [c]a burnt-offering, or [d]a sacrifice in *performing a vow, [e]or in a free-will-offering, or [f]in your solemn feasts, to make [g]a sweet savour unto the LORD, of the herd, or of the flock;

4 Then shall he that offereth his offering unto the LORD bring [h]a meat-offering of a tenth-deal[2] of flour, mingled with [i]the fourth part of an hin of oil.

5 And [k]the fourth part of an hin [l]of wine for a drink-offering shalt thou prepare with the burnt-offering or sacrifice, for one lamb.

6 Or [m]for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meat-offering two tenth-deals of flour, mingled with the third part of an hin of oil.

7 And for a drink-offering thou shalt offer the third part of an hin of wine, for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

8 And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt-offering, or for a sacrifice in performing a vow, or [n]peace-offerings unto the LORD:

9 Then shall he bring with a bullock [o]a meat-offering of three tenth-deals of flour, mingled with half an hin of oil.

fore prays that the Lord would show his great power; not in their immediate destruction, but in sparing them, and in performing his promises to them. He further pleads THE NAME OF THE LORD, which had been proclaimed before him; and the examples of his former forgiveness, from the departure of Israel out of Egypt to that day; thus he argues, that, consistently with his character, God could do it; and that former experience encouraged him still to expect it. Moses referred to the very words, in which the NAME of the Lord had been proclaimed; though some expressions might seem unsuitable to his purpose. But it is probable, he did not expect to prevail so entirely, as that all, even the most guilty, should be exempted from punishment; or that the nation should not be visited with lighter judgments, descending even to their posterity; but only, that they should not all be consumed in a moment, or the nation entirely disinherited. No doubt Moses was convinced that the glory of the justice and holiness of God was concerned; and that it was necessary to show, by some decisive measure, that he would not suffer his commandments to be trampled upon, his promises despised, or his threatenings disregarded; yet he pleaded that the honour of his power and faithfulness, in the view of the nation, required him to mitigate or defer the punishment of Israel; and that he could magnify his mercy without dishonouring his justice.

CALEB'S CHARACTER AND BLESSING.—Caleb, perhaps, took the more active part on this occasion; and as Joshua was designed to be Moses' successor, Caleb is the more frequently spoken of, though Joshua was as evidently intended, ver. 30. Caleb had "another spirit with him," even a spirit of faith and holiness; he therefore "followed the LORD fully," (literally, fulfilled after me:) that is, he had faithfully discharged the service to which he had been called, and was ready for any service, however perilous or self-denying, to which the Lord should call him; for he simply believed his word; embraced his promises; observed his directions; obeyed his commandments; depended on his faithfulness, power, and goodness; and confidently expected that matters would eventually take place exactly as he had said, notwithstanding difficulties and improbabilities. This he did with perseverance and courage; notwithstanding influence, example, terrors, and sufferings, combined to divert him from his course; and he was willing to venture or endure whatever was necessary in so doing. In consequence, he at first met with hatred, reproaches, and dangers; but he survived his enemies, and their opposition, and at length had honour from God and man, much comfort, and a valuable recompense. The posterity of the rebels inherited Canaan; but Caleb and his posterity inherited Hebron, where the Anakims dwelt, whom he and the other spies had seen: but they were discouraged, and he was not. The passage may be rendered, his seed shall expel it, that is, the race of Anakims.—Scott.

THE TERRIBLE CURSE OF UNBELIEF.—1. They should not see the promised land, ver. 23, nor "come into it," ver. 30. "He sware in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest," Ps. xcv. 11. Note, Disbelief of the promise is a forfeiture of the benefit of it. 2. That they should immediately "turn back into the wilderness," ver. 25. Their next remove should be a retreat; they must face about, and, instead of going forward to Canaan, on the very borders of which they now were, they must withdraw toward the Red Sea again. 3. That all those who were now grown up to men's estate, should die in the wilderness, not all at once, but by degrees. They wished that they might die in the wilderness, and God said Amen to their passionate wish, and made their sin their ruin, "snared them" in the "words of their mouth," and "caused their own tongue to fall upon them," took them at their word, and determined that their "carcases should fall in the wilderness," ver. 28, 29, and again, ver. 32, 35. 4. That, in pursuance of this sentence, they should wander to and fro in the wilderness, like travellers that have lost themselves, for forty years; that is, so long as to make it full forty years from their coming out of Egypt to their entrance into Canaan, ver. 33, 34. Thus long they were kept wandering, (1.) To answer the number of the days in which the spies were searching the land. They were content to wait forty days for the testimony of men, because they could not take God's word; and therefore justly are they kept forty years waiting for the performance of God's promise. (2.) That hereby they might be brought to repentance, and find mercy with God in the other world, whatever became of them in this. They were made to groan under the burthen of their own sin that brought it upon them, which was "too heavy for them to bear." (3.) That they might sensibly feel what a dangerous thing it is for God's covenant-people to break with him. "'Ye shall know my breach of promise,' both the causes of it, that it is procured by your sin," (for God never leaves any till they first leave him,) "and the consequences of it, that will produce your ruin; you are quite undone when you are thrown out of covenant." (4.) That a new generation might in this time be raised up, which could not be done all of a sudden. And their wandering so long in the wilderness would make Canaan at last the more welcome to them.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. MEAT-OFFERINGS.—In the wilderness, whilst the people had neither corn-fields, nor vineyards, nor oliveyards, but lived upon manna, they could not easily bring meat-offerings and drink-offerings: and these seem not to have been then required.—The meat-offerings before prescribed were offered separately: but those here described accompanied all animal sacrifices, except that of doves. The Jewish expositors say, that the whole of these oblations was burnt on the altar: but this is not enjoined

A. M. 2514.—B. C. 1490.

10 And thou shalt bring for [p]a drink-offering half an hin of wine, for an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

11 Thus shall it be done for one bullock, or for one ram, or for a lamb, or a kid.

12 According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one, according to their number.

13 All that are born of the country shall do these things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

14 ¶ And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD; as ye do, so he shall do.

15 [q]One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, [r]an ordinance for ever in your generations: as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the LORD.[3]

16 One law, and one manner, shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [s]When ye come into the land whither I bring you;

19 Then it shall be, that, [t]when ye eat of the bread[4] of the land, ye shall offer up an heave-offering unto the LORD.

20 Ye shall offer up [u]a cake of the first of your dough for an heave-offering: as ye do [x]the heave-offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it.

21 Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the LORD [y]an heave-offering in your generations.

22 ¶ And [z]if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments which the LORD hath spoken unto Moses,

23 Even all that the LORD hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the LORD commanded Moses, and henceforward among your generations;

24 Then it shall be, [a]if ought be committed by ignorance, [†]without the knowledge of the congregation, that all the congregation shall offer [b]one young bullock for a burnt-offering, for a sweet savour unto the LORD, with his meat-offering, and his drink-offering, according to the [‡]manner, and [c]one kid of the goats for a sin-offering.

25 And [d]the priest shall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and it shall be [e]forgiven them; for it is ignorance: and they shall bring their offering, a sacrifice made by fire unto the LORD, and their sin-offering before the LORD, for their ignorance:

26 And it shall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; seeing all the people were in ignorance.

27 ¶ And if [f]any soul sin through ignorance, then he shall bring a she-goat of the first year for a sin-offering.

28 And [g]the priest shall make an atonement for the soul that sinneth ignorantly, when he sinneth by ignorance before the LORD, to make an atonement for him; and it shall be forgiven him.

29 Ye shall have [h]one law for him that [§]sinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born among the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them.

30 ¶ But the soul that [i]doeth ought [‖]presumptuously,[5] (whether he be born in the land, or a stranger,) the same [k]reproacheth the LORD; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

31 Because he hath [l]despised the word of the LORD, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off: [m]his iniquity shall be upon him.

32 ¶ And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man [n]that gathered sticks upon the sabbath-day.

33 And they that found him gathering sticks [o]brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.

34 And they [p]put him in ward, because it was not declared what should[6] be done to him.

35 And the LORD said unto Moses, [q]The man shall be surely put to death: all the congregation shall [r]stone him with stones without the camp.

36 And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the LORD commanded Moses.

37 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

38 Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them [s]fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband of blue:

39 And it shall be unto you for a fringe,[7] that ye may look upon it, and [t]remember all the commandments of the LORD, and do them; and that [u]ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to [x]go a whoring:

40 That ye may remember, and do all my commandments, and [y]be holy unto your God.

41 I am the LORD your God, which [z]brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD your God.

in the law itself; and perhaps only a portion was burnt, and the remainder was eaten by the priests: and the drink-offering was disposed of in a similar manner. The sacrifices not only typified Christ, with all fulness of spiritual blessings in him for our use, all which is well-pleasing and honourable to the Father; but they likewise shadowed forth the pleasure which a reconciled God takes in the services of his redeemed people, and the delight which they take in communion with him. This is represented under the notion of their feasting together; and therefore all those things were directed to be brought, which were of general use at feasts; and in due proportion, according to the kind or number of the sacrifices.—A tenth-deal was the same as an omer, or about five pints; an hin is computed by some to have been twice as much.

SINS OF IGNORANCE.—This law concerning sins of ignorance, being entirely diverse from one before considered, occasions considerable difficulty. Some explain that law as relating to sins of commission, this to sins of omission: others explain the one of inadvertent violations of the moral law, and the other of the transgressions of the ceremonial law: and some think that related to the whole nation, this to any one tribe; or that to the bulk of the nation, this to the rulers and elders. The Jews say that the former law referred to such national transgressions through heedlessness, as consisted with the maintenance of the prescribed worship in the main: but that this especially respected the case of the nation, when through inattention, and the example and authority of wicked rulers, they had turned aside and committed idolatry, or conducted their worship directly contrary to law; yet through a culpable ignorance, and not in presumption. This was evidently the case under several of their kings, and the explanation seems well grounded. The law concerning individuals, who sinned through ignorance, does not so materially differ from that before given. The marginal references may assist the student, in forming his judgment on the several interpretations before stated; but the difference of sentiment, on such a subject, does not at all interfere with the practical instructions of the passage.

SINS OF PRESUMPTION.—To do ought presumptuously, implies that it is done wilfully, deliberately, in contempt of the authority of God's word, in defiance of his justice, with a high hand, and in direct rebellion. Such conduct "reproacheth the LORD," as if his commands were needless, unreasonable, and inimical to man's happiness; as if his authority were only fit to be trampled under foot; his favour not desirable, or his wrath not to be feared; in short, as if it were more advantageous to rebel against him than to serve him. Many crimes will be found to be sins of presumption, which did not appear such to the offender at the time when he committed them. Whenever we set our own inclinations in opposition to the known command of God; and when God saith, Thou shalt not, our conduct replies, But I will; we are guilty of sins of presumption: and though the matter be in itself trivial, yet the daring rebellion is exceedingly atrocious. For an offender of this kind, no sacrifice was appointed: he was condemned to bear his own iniquity, and to be utterly cut off; in most cases by a public execution, in others by the immediate judgment of God.—Scott.

SABBATH BREAKING.—1. The offence was "gathering sticks on the Sabbath-day," ver. 32, which, it is probable, were designed to make a fire of, whereas they were commanded to bake and seethe what they had occasion for, the day before, Exod. xvi. 23. This seemed but a small offence, but it was a violation of the law of the Sabbath, and so was an implicit contempt of the Creator, to whose honour the Sabbath was dedicated, and an incursion upon the whole law, which the Sabbath was intended as a hedge about. And it appears by the context to have been done presumptuously, and in affront both to the law, and to the Law-Maker. 2. The offender was secured, ver. 33, 34. They that found him "gathering sticks," in their zeal for the honour of the Sabbath, "brought him to Moses and Aaron, and to all the congregation;" which intimates, that, being the Sabbath-day, the congregation was at that time gathered to Moses and Aaron, to receive instruction from them, and to join with them in religious worship. It seems even common Israelites, though there was much amiss among them, yet would not contentedly see the Sabbath profaned, which was a good sign that they had not quite forsaken God, nor were utterly forsaken of him. 3. God was consulted, "because it was not declared what should be done to him." The law had already made the profanation of the Sabbath a capital crime, Exod. xxxi. 14; xxxv. 2, but they were in doubt, either concerning the offence, whether this that he had done should be deemed a profanation or no; or concerning the punishment, what death he should die. God was the Judge, and before him they brought this cause. 4. Sentence was passed; the prisoner was adjudged a Sabbath-breaker according to the intent of that law, and as such he must be put to death; and, to show how great the crime was, and how displeasing to God, and that others might hear and fear, and not do in like manner presumptuously, that death is appointed him which was looked upon as most terrible, he must be "stoned with stones," ver. 35. Note, God is jealous for the honour of his Sabbaths, and will not hold them guiltless, whatever men do, that profane them. 5. Execution was done pursuant to the sentence, ver. 36. He was "stoned" to death "by the congregation." As many as could were employed in the execution, that they at least might be afraid of breaking the Sabbath, who had thrown a stone at this Sabbath breaker. This intimates that the open profanation of the Sabbath is a sin which ought to be punished and restrained by the civil magistrate, who, as far as overt acts go, is keeper of both tables. See Neh. xiii.

The rebellion of Korah, &c. 1; their punishment, 31. Aaron, by incense, stayeth the plague, 46.

NOW [a]Korah, the son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi; and Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab; and On the son of Peleth, [b]sons of Reuben, took men:

2 And they rose up before Moses, with certain of the children of Israel, two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, [c]famous in the congregation, men of renown:

3 And they [d]gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them, [*] Ye take too much upon you, seeing [e]all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and [f]the LORD is among them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the LORD?

4 And when Moses heard it, [g]he fell[1] upon his face:

5 And he spake unto Korah, and unto all his company, saying, Even to-morrow [h]the LORD will shew who are his, and [i]who is holy; and [k]will cause him to come near unto him: [l]even him whom he hath chosen will he cause to come near unto him.

6 This do: [m]Take you censers, Korah, and all his company;

7 And put fire therein, and put incense in them before the LORD to-morrow: and it shall be, [n]that the man whom the LORD doth choose, he shall be holy: ye take [o]too much upon you, ye sons of Levi.

8 And Moses said unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi;

9 Seemeth it but [p]a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath [q]separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself, to do the service of the tabernacle of the LORD, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: [r]and seek ye the priesthood also?

11 For which cause, both thou and all thy company are gathered together [s]against the LORD: and [t]what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?

12 ¶ And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab; [u]which said, We will not come up:

13 Is it [x]a small thing that thou hast brought us up [y]out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, [z]to kill us in the wilderness, except [a]thou make thyself altogether a prince over us?

14 Moreover, [b]thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou [†]put out the eyes of these men? We will not come up.

15 And Moses was [c]very wroth, and said unto the LORD, [d]Respect not thou their offering: [e]I have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 ¶ And Moses said unto Korah, [f]Be thou and all thy company [g]before the LORD, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow:

17 And take every man his censer, and put incense in them, and bring ye before the LORD every man his censer, two hundred and fifty censers; thou also, and Aaron, each of you his censer.

18 And they took every man his censer, and put fire[2] in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moses and Aaron.

19 And [h]Korah gathered all the congregation against them unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and [i]the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the congregation.

20 And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

21 [k]Separate yourselves from among this congregation, [l]that I may consume them in a moment.

22 And [m]they fell upon their faces, and said, O God, [n]the God of the spirits[3] of all flesh, shall [o]one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?

23 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the congregation, saying, [p]Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

25 And Moses rose up, and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and [q]the elders of Israel followed him.

26 And he spake unto the congregation, saying, [r]Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins.

27 So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and [s]stood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children.

28 And Moses said, [t]Hereby ye shall know that the LORD hath sent me to do all these works;[4] (for I have not done them [u]of mine own mind;)

29 If these men die [‡]the common death of all men, or if they be [x]visited after the visitation of all men, then [y]the LORD hath not sent me:

30 But if the LORD [§]make [z]a new thing,

17. One would think there could be no great harm in gathering a few sticks, on what day soever it was, but God intended the exemplary punishment of him that did so, for a standing warning to us all, to make conscience of keeping holy the Sabbath.—Henry.

THE NATIONAL UNIFORM.—The word, rendered fringes, denotes an ornament resembling a flower, which being added to the bottom of the skirts of the outward garment, and tied together on each division of it, by a ribbon or lace of a blue colour, placed upon the fringes, would render the wearer conspicuous among strangers. But it was especially intended as a mark of distinction, which the Israelites themselves might frequently look upon, and so be put in mind of their character and obligations as the worshippers and servants of JEHOVAH; that they might remember and keep his commandments, and act consistently in all places, companies, and transactions; not following their own corrupt inclinations, or yielding to the allurements of their senses. These they had ever shown a strong propensity to prefer before the will of God, and had thus frequently been seduced into idolatry, as well as other heinous sins. Christ was obedient to this law; as the word, translated the hem or border, means the fringe of his garment; and the Pharisees ostentatiously enlarged their fringes. It is remarkable that the modern Jews generally neglect this precept, which they might obey; whilst many parts of their religion are become absolutely impracticable.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. THE CONSPIRATORS.—Here is, 1. An account of the rebels, who and what they were, not, as formerly, the mixed multitude, and the dregs of the people, who are therefore never named, but men of distinction and quality, that made a figure. Korah was the ringleader, he formed and headed the faction, therefore it is called "the gainsaying of Korah," Jude 11. He was cousin-german to Moses, they were brothers' children, yet the nearness of the relation could not restrain him from being insolent and rude to Moses. Think it not strange if a man's foes be "they of his own house." With him joined Dathan and Abiram, chief men of the tribe of Reuben, the eldest son of Jacob. Probably, Korah was disgusted both at the preferment of Aaron to the priesthood, and the constituting of Elizaphan to the head of the Kohathites, chap. iii. 30, and perhaps the Reubenites were angry that the tribe of Judah had the first post of honour in the camp. On is mentioned, ver. 1, as one of the heads of the faction, but never after, in the whole story; either because, as some think, he repented and left them, or because he did not make himself so remarkable as Dathan and Abiram did. The Kohathites encamped on the same side of the tabernacle that the Reubenites did, which perhaps gave Korah an opportunity of drawing them in: whence the Jews say, "Woe to the wicked man, and woe to his neighbour, who" is in danger of being infected by him. And these being themselves "men of renown," they seduced into the conspiracy "two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly," ver. 2; probably they were first-born, or at least heads of families, who, before the elevation of Aaron, had themselves ministered in holy things. Note, The pride, ambition, and emulation, of great men, have always been the occasion of a great deal of mischief both in churches and states. God by his grace make great men humble, and so give peace in our time, O Lord! Famous men, and men of renown, as these here are described to be, were the great sinners of the old world, Gen. vi. 4. The fame and renown which they had did not content them, they were high, but would be higher, and thus the famous men became infamous.—Henry.

THEIR INSOLENCE.—Moses, as the ruler whom God had placed over Israel, summoned Dathan and Abiram to appear before him, to inform him of the cause of this insurrection; but they, doubtless aspiring to the government, would not own his authority, and insolently refused to appear before him. They likewise absurdly and basely spake of Egypt, where they had groaned in abject servitude, in the very language which the Lord had used concerning the land of promise! and sarcastically accused Moses of deceiving them with vain expectations of a valuable inheritance, which they were never likely to see, and of usurping dominion over the nation. They charged him likewise with attempting to impose on the people, with pretences of acting by divine authority, and for their advantage, while he was sacrificing all their interests to the establishment of an usurped authority; as if he had attempted to put out their eyes, that he might lead them when blind wherever he chose. The cloak of religion did not so well serve the purposes of those who aspired to the civil government, and therefore they never mentioned the Lord at all; but ascribed all to Moses, as if they had never witnessed any miracles or divine interpositions!—Scott.

THEIR TRIAL.—Korah accepts the challenge, and makes his appearance with Moses and Aaron "at the door of the tabernacle," to make good his pretensions, ver. 18, 19. If he had not had a very great stock of impudence, he could not have carried on the matter thus far. Had not he lately seen Nadab and Abihu, the consecrated priests, struck dead for daring to offer incense with unhallowed fire; and could he and his accomplices expect to fare any better in offering incense with unhallowed hands? Yet, to confront Moses and Aaron, in the height of his pride, he thus bids defiance to Heaven, and pretends to demand the divine acceptance without a divine warrant; thus wretchedly is the heart hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. They "took every man his censer." Perhaps these were some of the censers which these heads of families had made use of at their family altars, before this part of religious service was confined to the priesthood, and the altar in the tabernacle; (and they would bring them into use and reputation

[6] There were two sorts of traitors: the earth swallowed up the one, the fire consumed the other. All the elements agree to serve the vengeance of their Maker. Nadab and Abihu brought fit persons, but unfit fire, to God: these Levites bring the right fire, but unwarranted persons before Him: fire from God consumes both. It is a dangerous thing to usurp sacred functions.—HALL.

46 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a censer, and put fire therein [z]from off the altar, [a]and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make [b]an atonement for them: for [c]there is wrath gone out from the LORD; the plague is begun.

47 And Aaron took as Moses commanded, [d]and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people: [e]and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And [f]he stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed.

49 Now they that died in the plague were [g]fourteen thousand and seven hundred, besides them that died about the matter of Korah.

50 And Aaron [h]returned unto Moses unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the plague was stayed.

Aaron's rod budding, 1; is laid up for a monument, 10.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a rod,[1] according to the house of their fathers, of [a]all their princes, according to the house of their fathers, twelve [b]rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod.

3 And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for one rod shall be for [c]the head of the house of their fathers.

4 And thou shalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation [d]before the testimony, where I will meet with you.

5 And it shall come to pass, that the man's rod, [e]whom I shall choose, shall [f]blossom; and [g]I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, whereby [h]they murmur against you.

6 ¶ And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, and every one of their princes gave him *a rod apiece, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods; and the rod of Aaron was among their rods.

7 And Moses laid up the rods before the LORD in [i]the tabernacle of witness.

8 And it came to pass, that on the morrow Moses went into the tabernacle of witness; and, behold, the rod of Aaron, for the house of Levi, was [k]budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds.[2]

9 And Moses brought out all the rods from before the LORD unto all the children of Israel: and they looked, and took every man his rod.

CHAP. XVII.

[1] It has been the custom in all ages for elderly men, and for those in authority, to carry, as a mark of dignity, a rod or cane, or walking-staff; which at length became the sceptre peculiar to princes. The priests, too, among the Greeks and Romans, had their recurved rods; and bishops, in later ages, have their croziers. All these are ensigns of dignity and office.

The rod of Aaron should seem to have been of the almond tree: the Fathers thought it was of some other kind of wood; but there is no need to augment a miracle, which is sufficient in itself.

The Jews, to commemorate this miracle, have struck the blossoming rod on several of their coins.—SCRIPT. ILLUST.

again;) or they might be common chafing-dishes, which were for their ordinary use. Now, to attend the solemn trial, and to be witness of the issue, one would have thought Moses should have "gathered the congregation against the rebels," but it seems Korah gathered them against Moses, ver. 19, which intimates that a great part of the congregation sided with Korah, were at his beck, and wished him success; and that Korah's hopes were very high of carrying the point against Aaron; for, had he suspected the event, he would not have coveted to make the trial thus public: but little did he think that he was now calling the congregation together to be the witnesses of his own confusion! Note, Proud and ambitious men, while they are projecting their own advancement, often prove to have been hurrying on their own shameful fall.

THEIR AWFUL PUNISHMENT.—Execution is immediately done. It appeared that God and his servant Moses understood one another very well; for as soon as ever Moses had spoken the word, God did the work, the earth "clave asunder," ver. 31, "opened her mouth, and swallowed them all up," them and theirs, ver. 32, and then "closed upon them," ver. 33. This judgment was, 1. Unparalleled. God, in it, "created a new thing," did what he never did before; for he has many arrows in his quiver; and there are "diversities of operations" in wrath as well as mercy. Dathan and Abiram thought themselves safe, because they were at a distance from the Shechinah, whence the fire of the Lord had sometimes issued, qui procul à Jove, (they say,) procul à fulmine—he who is far from Jove, is far from the thunderbolt. But God made them to know that he was not tied up to one way of punishing; the earth, when he pleases, shall serve his justice as effectually as the fire. 2. It is very terrible to the sinners themselves to go down alive into their own graves; dead and buried in an instant; to go down thus to the bars of the pit, when they were in their "full strength, wholly at ease and quiet." 3. It was severe upon their poor children, who, for the greater terror of the judgment, and fuller indication of the divine wrath, perished as part of their parents; in which, though we cannot particularly tell how bad they might be to deserve it, or how good God might be otherwise to them to compensate it, yet of this we are sure, in the general, that Infinite Justice did them no wrong. "Far be it from God that he should do iniquity." 4. It was altogether miraculous. The cleaving of the earth was so wonderful, and as much above the power of nature, as the cleaving of the sea: and the closing of the earth again more so than the closing of the waters. God has all the creatures at his command, and can make any of them, when he pleases, instruments of his justice; nor will any of them be our friends, if he be our Enemy. God now confirmed to Israel what Moses had taught them in that prayer of his, Ps. xc. 11, "Who knows the power of thine anger?" He has, when he pleases "strange punishments for the workers of iniquity," Job xxxi. 3. Let us therefore conclude, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?" 5. It was very significant. They "set their mouths against the heavens," and "their throat was an open sepulchre;" justly therefore does the earth open her mouth upon them, and swallow them up. They made a rent in the congregation, justly therefore is the earth rent under them.—Henry.

MEMORIALS OF THEIR SIN.—These censers, having been once presented to God, and used in burning incense, though in an uncommanded manner, must never more be employed about ordinary purposes; but, to impress the greater veneration for that typical institution, they were consecrated to the Lord, and used in such a manner, as to remain a constant and useful memorial to the people who brought, and to the Levites who assisted in offering, the sacrifices. It was an awful employment for Eleazar to gather them from amidst the dreadful conflagration! Eleazar was appointed to this service, in order, perhaps, to mark him out as successor to the high priesthood. Aaron was fully employed, and some think he might have contracted defilement; but no mention is at all made of the dead bodies, which seem to have been entirely consumed, leaving not the least remains. The fire in the censers, as unhallowed, was thrown aside, probably among the ashes. It was the intent of the rebels to injure Moses and Aaron; but, in effect, they brought destruction upon themselves both in body and soul, even as if they had expressly designed it.

CHAP. XVII. AARON'S ROD.—The final determination of the controversy concerning the priesthood was effected by a miracle, ver. 8, 9. The twelve rods, or staves, (one for the prince of each tribe,) were brought out of the most holy place, where they were laid up, and publicly produced before the people; and, while all the rest of the rods remained as they were, where put on the previous evening, Aaron's rod only, of a dry stick, became a living branch, budded and blossomed, and yielded almonds. In some places there were buds, in others blossoms, in others fruit, at the same time; this was miraculous, and took away all suspicion of a fraud, as if in the night Moses had taken away Aaron's rod, and put a living branch of an almond-tree in the room of it; for no ordinary branch would have buds, blossoms, and fruits upon it, all at once. Now, 1. This was a plain indication to the people that Aaron was chosen to the priesthood, and not any other of the princes or tribes. Thus he was distinguished from them, and manifested to be under the special blessing of heaven, which sometimes yields increase where there is neither planting nor watering by the hand of men. Bishop Hall here observes, that fruitfulness is the best evidence of a divine call, and that the plants of God's setting, and the boughs cut off from them, will flourish, see Ps. xcii. 12—14. The "trees of the Lord," though they

The charge of the priests and Levites, 1. The priests', 9, and the Levites' portion, 21.

AND the LORD said unto Aaron, [a]Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house with thee, shall [b]bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity[1] of your priesthood.

2 And thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou with thee, that they may be [c]joined unto thee, and [d]minister unto thee: [e]but thou and thy sons with thee shall minister before the tabernacle of witness.

3 And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the tabernacle: [f]only they shall not come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary and the altar, that [g]neither they, nor ye also, die.

4 And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, for all the service of the tabernacle: and [h]a stranger shall not come nigh unto you.

5 And [i]ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the altar; that there be [k]no wrath any more upon the children of Israel.

6 And [l]I, behold, [m]I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel; to you they are [n]given as a gift for the LORD, to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 Therefore thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office for every thing of the altar, and [o]within the vail; and ye shall serve: I have given your priest's office unto you [p]as a service of gift: and [q]the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Aaron, Behold, I also have given thee [r]the charge of mine heave-offerings of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel; unto thee have I given them, [s]by reason of the anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance for ever.

9 This shall be thine of the most holy things, reserved from the fire: Every oblation of theirs, [t]every meat-offering of theirs, and [u]every sin-offering of theirs, [x]and every trespass-offering of theirs, which they shall render unto me, shall be most holy for thee, and for thy sons.

10 In [y]the most holy place shalt thou eat it; [z]every male shall eat it: it shall be holy unto thee.

11 And this is thine; [a]the heave-offering of their gift, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them [b]unto thee, and to thy sons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever; [c]every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it.

12 All the [*]best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, [d]the first-fruits of them, which they shall offer unto the LORD, them have I given thee.

13 And [e]whatsoever is first ripe in the land, which they shall bring unto the LORD, shall be thine: every one that is clean in thine house shall eat of it.

14 Every thing [f]devoted in Israel shall be thine.

15 Every thing that [g]openeth the matrix in all flesh, which they bring unto the LORD, whether it be of men or beasts, shall be thine: nevertheless [h]the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem, and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem.

16 And those that are to be redeemed, from a month[2] old shalt thou redeem, [i]according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, [k]which is twenty gerahs.

17 But [l]the firstling[3] of a cow, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem; they are holy: [m]thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

18 And the flesh of them shall be thine, [n]as the wave-breast and as the right shoulder are thine.

19 All [o]the heave-offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the LORD, have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: it is [p]a covenant of salt[4] for ever before the LORD unto thee, and to thy seed with thee.

20 And the LORD spake unto Aaron, [q]Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I [r]am thy part and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

21 ¶ And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all [s]the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, [t]even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

seem dry trees, "are full of sap." 2. It was a very proper sign to represent the priesthood itself, which was hereby confirmed to Aaron, (1.) That it should be fruitful and serviceable to the church of God. It produced not only blossoms, but almonds; for the priesthood was designed, not only for an honour to Aaron, but for a blessing to Israel. Thus Christ ordained his apostles and ministers that they should go and bring forth fruit, and that their "fruit should remain," John xv. 16. (2.) That there should be a succession of priests; here were not only almonds for the present, but buds and blossoms promising more hereafter. Thus has Christ provided in his church, that a seed should serve him from generation to generation. (3.) That yet this priesthood should not be perpetual, but, in process of time, like the branches and blossoms of a tree, should fail and wither. The "flourishing of the almond-tree" is mentioned as one of the signs of old age, Eccl. xii. 5. This character was betimes put upon the priesthood, which soon became old and "ready to vanish away," Heb. viii. 13. It was a type and figure of Christ and his priesthood: for he is "the Man, the Branch," Zech. vi. 12, that is to be "a Priest upon his throne," as it follows there; and was to "grow up before God," as this before the ark, "like a tender plant, and a root out of a dry ground," Isa. liii. 2.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. CHARGE TO THE PRIESTHOOD.—1. Aaron and his sons must "minister before the tabernacle of witness," ver. 2, that is, (as Bishop Patrick explains it,) "before the most holy place," in which the ark was; on the outside of the vail of that tabernacle, but within "the door of the tabernacle of the congregation;" they were to attend the golden altar, the table and candlestick, which no Levite might approach to. "Ye shall serve," ver. 7, not "Ye shall rule;" it was never intended that they should lord it over God's heritage, but "Ye shall serve God and the congregation." Note, The priesthood is a service. "If any desire the office of a bishop, he desires a good work." Ministers must remember that they are ministers, that is, servants; of whom it is required that they be humble, diligent, and faithful. 2. That the Levites must assist him and his sons, and minister to them in all the "service of the tabernacle," ver. 2—4, though they must by no means come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary, nor at the altar meddle with the great services of burning the fat and sprinkling the blood. Aaron's family was very small, and as they increased, the rest of the families of Israel would increase likewise, so that their hands neither were now, nor were likely to be, sufficient for all the service of the tabernacle; therefore (says God) "the Levites shall be joined to thee," ver. 2, and again, ver. 4, where there seems to be an allusion to the name of Levi, which signifies joined. Many of the Levites had of late set themselves against Aaron, but from henceforward God promises that they should be heartily joined to him in interest and affection, and should no more contest with him. It was a good sign to Aaron that God owned him, when he inclined the hearts of those concerned to own him too. The Levites are said to be given as a gift to the priests, ver. 6. Note, We are to value it as a great gift of the divine bounty to have those joined to us, that will be helpful and serviceable to us in the service of God. 3. That both priests and Levites must carefully watch against the profanation of sacred things. The Levites must "keep the charge of the tabernacle," that "no stranger" (that is, none who upon any account was forbidden to come,) might "come nigh," ver. 4, and that upon pain of death, ver. 7. And the priests must "keep the charge of the sanctuary," ver. 5, must instruct the people, and admonish them concerning the due distance they were to keep, and not suffer them to break the bounds set them, as Korah's company had done, that there be "no wrath any more upon the children of Israel." Note, The preventing of sin is the preventing of wrath; and the mischief sin has done, should be a warning to us for the future, to watch against it both in ourselves and others.

SUPPORT OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—Much of the provision that was made for them arose out of the sacrifices which they themselves were employed to offer. They had the skins of almost all the sacrifices, which they might sell, and they had a considerable share out of the meat-offerings, sin-offerings, &c. They that had the "charge of the offerings" had the benefit, ver. 8. Note, God's work is its own wages, and his service carries its recompense along with it. Even in keeping of God's commandments there is great reward. The present pleasures of religion are part of its pay. They had not only a good table kept for them, but money likewise in their pockets for the redemption of the first-born, and those firstlings of cattle which might not be offered in sacrifice. Thus their maintenance was such as left them altogether "disentangled from the affairs of this life;" they had no grounds to occupy, no land to till, no vineyards to dress, no cattle to tend, no visible estate to take care of, and yet had a more plentiful income than any other families whatsoever. Thus God ordered it, 1. That they might be the more entirely addicted to their ministry, and not diverted from it, or disturbed in it, by any worldly care or business. The ministry requires a whole man. 2. That they might be examples of living by faith, not only in God's providence, but in his ordinance. They lived from hand to mouth, that they might learn to take no thought for the morrow; sufficient for the day would be the provision thereof; and they had no estates to leave their children, that they might by faith leave them to the care of that God who had "fed them all their lives long. 3. Of the provision that was made for their tables, some is said to be "most holy," ver. 9, 10, which was to be eaten by the priests themselves, and in the court of the tabernacle only; but other perquisites were "less holy," of which their families might eat, at 22 Neither must the children of Israel henceforth [u]come nigh [x] the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they [x]bear sin, [†]and die.

23 But the Levites shall [y]do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they shall bear their iniquity. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that [z]among the children of Israel they have no inheritance.

24 But [a]the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as an heave-offering [6] unto the LORD, I have given to the Levites to inherit: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

25 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes, which I have given you from them for your inheritance, [b]then ye shall offer up an heave-offering of it for the LORD, even [c]a tenth part of the tithe.

27 And this your heave-offering shall be reckoned unto you, [d]as though it were [e]the corn of the thrashing-floor, and as the fulness of the wine-press.

28 Thus ye also shall offer an heave-offering unto the LORD, of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Israel; [f]and ye shall give thereof the LORD'S heave-offering to Aaron the priest.

29 Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave-offering of the LORD, of all the [‡]best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof, out of it.

30 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, When ye have heaved [g]the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the thrashing-floor, and as the increase of the wine-press.

31 And ye shall eat it [h]in every place, ye and your households: for it is [i]your reward for your service in the tabernacle of the congregation.

32 And ye shall [k]bear no sin by reason of it, when ye have heaved from it the best of it: neither shall ye [l]pollute the holy things [7] of the children of Israel, lest ye die.

6 And the priest shall take [h]cedar-wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer.

7 Then the priest shall [i]wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even.

9 And a man that is [k]clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and [l]lay them up without the camp in a clean place; and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel for [m]a water of separation: [4] it is a purification for sin.

10 And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall [n]wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and [o]it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for a statute for ever.

their own houses, provided they were "clean," ver. 11—13. See Lev. xxii. 10, &c. It is commanded that the "best of the oil," and "the best of the wine and wheat," should be offered for the "first-fruits unto the Lord," which the priests were to have, ver. 12. Note, We must always serve and honour God with the best we have, for he is the best, and best deserves it; he is the First, and therefore must have the first ripe.—Henry.

THE TITHES.—The Lord, by this statute, gave the Levites a clear tenth of the whole "increase" of the land; that is, of the labour and improvements, as well as of the estates, of all the other tribes. This was a large proportion for by far the smallest tribe, and, when joined to all the rest assigned them, was an abundant provision. But the other tribes would have also the advantages accruing from trade and manufactures, in which the Levites were not allowed to be occupied.—This tenth seems to have been the common stock of the tribe, and divided among them accordingly: and this would obviate that common evil effect of tithes; namely the contentions which arise about them betwixt ministers and the people of their peculiar charge: as the tithes were not paid to an individual, but to a collective body; or rather they were presented as an oblation to God, who was pleased to give them to the Levites.—The foregoing regulations were delivered to Aaron, and by him to the people; but this law, immediately relating to the interests of him and his family, was given by Moses.—The Levites, receiving tithes of the people, gave a tithe of them to the priests; and some have conjectured that the tenth of this tithe was allotted for the high priest's support, according to the pre-eminence to which he was advanced. This tithe of the tithes was the Levite's oblation to the Lord, and as acceptable as that which was paid out of the estates of the other Israelites; and when it had been offered of the best, they might use the rest with comfort and a good conscience, as if it had been the produce of their own lands. But they would "pollute the holy" things if the used the tithes without separating the portion assigned to the priests.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. THE RED HEIFER.—This oblation differed from other sacrifices; in that the heifer was slain, not in the court of the tabernacle, but without the camp; the greater part of the blood, and all the fat, were burned with the skin and carcase; and the same things were cast into the burning, which had been appointed in the case of a leper when cleansed. Yet it is evident that it was for substance an atoning sacrifice; and the typical purifying efficacy of the ashes was derived from the typical expiation, made by the spotless animal thus slaughtered. Every circumstance was ordered, so as to impress the mind with an idea of the heifer as "extremely polluted and polluting;" and thus by carrying the pollution out of the camp, making way for the purification of the people. Even Eleazar, by superintending the transaction and sprinkling the blood, was rendered unclean, as well as he who burned the heifer: and when a clean person had collected the ashes, he also in some degree partook of the pollution! Thus Christ, our unblemished sacrifice and sanctification, bearing our sins, suffered without Jerusalem by the hands of the Romans, yet by the decree and under the inspection of the chief priests; and though his death was "according to the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God;" yet every one concerned in it contracted guilt and pollution of the most aggravated kind. The ashes of the heifer thus prepared, and carefully kept apart from those of the wood with which it was burned, were laid up in some clean place without the camp, that the water of separation (or for purifying those who were separated for ceremonial pollution,) might be made by putting a small quantity of them into spring water. This water must be frequently wanted by the whole multitude of Israelites: yet, as a little would suffice, the ashes of one heifer might last for some considerable time; and the nature of ashes, which do not easily corrupt, might also typify the "abiding efficacy" of the atonement of Christ. But that man must be endued with an uncommon measure of credulity, who can believe the assertions of the Rabbies, that the ashes of this one heifer lasted the whole nation, and the strangers sojourning among them, till the days of Solomon! After the people were settled in Canaan, it is reasonable to suppose, that ashes for this purpose were placed in every neighbourhood, for the conveniency of all who needed them.—Scott.

CEREMONIAL CLEANSING.—1. A small quantity of the ashes of the red heifer, the carcase of which had been burnt, must be put into a cup of spring water and mixed with the water, which thereby was made, as it is here called, a "water of separation," because it was to be sprinkled on those who were separated or removed from the sanctuary by their uncleanness. As the "ashes of the heifer" signified the merit of Christ, so the "running water" signified the power and grace of the blessed Spirit, who is compared to rivers of living water; and it is by his operation that the righteousness of Christ is applied to us for our cleansing. 2. This water must be applied by a bunch of hyssop dipped in it, with which the person or thing to be cleansed must be sprinkled, ver. 18, in allusion to which David prays, "Purge me with hyssop." Faith is the bunch of hyssop wherewith the conscience is sprinkled and the heart purified. Many might be sprinkled at once, and the water with which the ashes were mingled might serve for many sprinklings till it was all spent; and a very little lighting upon a man served to purify him, if done with that intention. In allusion to this application of the water of separation by sprinkling, the blood of Christ is said to be the "blood of sprinkling," Heb. xii. 24, and with it we are said to be "sprinkled from an evil conscience," Heb. x. 22, that is, we the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched a bone, or one slain, or one dead, or a grave:

19 And the clean person [e]shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day; and on [d]the seventh day he shall purify himself, and wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean at even.

20 But the man that shall be unclean, and [e]shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from among the congregation, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of the LORD: the water of separation hath not been sprinkled upon him; he is unclean.

21 And it shall be a perpetual statute unto them, that [f]he that sprinkleth the water of separation shall wash his clothes; and he that toucheth the water of separation shall be unclean until even.

22 And [g]whatsoever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and [h]the soul that toucheth it shall be unclean until even.

Moses bringeth water out of the rock, 7. The Israelites denied passage through Edom, 14. Aaron's death, 22.

THEN came the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, [a]into the desert of Zin[1] in the first month: and the people abode in [b]Kadesh; and [c]Miriam died there, and was buried there.[2]

2 And there was [d]no water for the congregation: and they [e]gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron.

3 And the people chode with Moses, and spake, saying, [f]Would God that we had died [g]when our brethren died before the LORD!

4 And [h]why have ye brought up the congregation of the LORD into this wilderness, [i]that we and our cattle should die there?

5 And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto [k]this evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink.

6 And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and [l]they fell upon their faces: and [m]the glory of the LORD appeared unto them.

7 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

8 Take [n]the rod, and gather thou the assembly together, thou and Aaron thy brother, and [o]speak ye unto the rock before their eyes; and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt [p]bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink.

9 And Moses took the rod from [q]before the LORD, as he commanded him.

10 And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, [r]ye rebels;[3] must [s]we fetch you water out of this rock?

11 And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he [t]smote the rock twice; and [u]the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.

12 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye [x]believed me not, to [y]sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore [z]ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is [a]the water of [*]Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the LORD, and [b]he was sanctified in them.

14 ¶ And [c]Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith [d]thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travel that hath [†]befallen us;

15 How [e]our fathers went down into Egypt, and we have [f]dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians [g]vexed us and our fathers:

16 And when [h]we cried unto the LORD, he heard our voice, and [i]sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt; and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border.

17 Let us pass, I pray thee, [k]through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells:[4] we will go by the king's high-way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders.

18 And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword.

19 And the children of Israel said unto him, [l]We will go by the high-way; and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it:[5] I will only (without doing any thing else) go through on my feet.

20 And he said, [m]Thou shalt not go through. And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand.

21 Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border: [n]wherefore Israel turned away from him.

22 ¶ And the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, journeyed from [o]Kadesh, and came unto [p]mount Hor.

are freed from the uneasiness that arises from a sense of our guilt. 3. Though the pollution contracted was only ceremonial, yet the neglect of the purification prescribed would turn into moral guilt; "He that shall be unclean," and shall "not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off," ver. 20. Note, It is a dangerous thing to contemn divine institutions, though they may seem minute. A slight wound, if neglected, may prove fatal; a sin we call little, if not repented of, will be our ruin, when great sinners that repent shall find mercy. Our uncleanness separates us from God, but it is our being unclean and "not purifying ourselves," that will separate us for ever from him; it is not the wound that is fatal, so much as the contempt of the remedy. 4. Even he that "sprinkled the water of separation," or "touched" it, or "touched the unclean person," must be "unclean till the even," that is, must not come near the sanctuary on that day, ver. 21, 22. Thus God would show them the imperfection of those services, and their insufficiency to purify the conscience, that they might look for the Messiah, who, in the fulness of time, should by the eternal Spirit offer himself without spot unto God, and so "purge our consciences from dead works," (that is, from sin, which defiles like a dead body, and is therefore called a "body of death,") that we may have liberty of access to the sanctuary, to "serve the living God" with living sacrifices.—Henry.

CHAP. XX. DEATH OF MIRIAM.—Miriam dies, the sister of Moses and Aaron, and, as it should seem, elder than either of them. She must be so, if she was that sister that was set to watch Moses when he was put into the ark of bulrushes, Exod. ii. 4. "Miriam died there," ver. 1. She was a prophetess, and had been an instrument of much good to Israel, Mic. vi. 4. When Moses and Aaron with their rod went before them to work wonders for them, Miriam with her timbrel went before them in praising God for these wondrous works, Exod. xv. 20, and therein did them real service; yet she had once been a murmurer, chap. xii. 1, and must not enter Canaan.

WANT OF WATER.—"There was no water for the congregation," ver. 2. The water out of the rock of Rephidim had followed them while there was need of it; but it is probable, that for some time they had been in a country where they were supplied in an ordinary way, and, when common providence supplied them, it was fit that the miracle should cease; but in this place it fell out that there was no water, or not sufficient for the congregation. Note, We live in a wanting world, and wherever we are, must expect to meet with some inconvenience or other. It is a great mercy to have plenty of water, a mercy which, if we found the want of, we should own the worth of. Hereupon they murmured; mutinied, ver. 2, "gathered themselves together," and took up arms "against Moses and Aaron." They chid with them, ver. 3, spake the same absurd and brutish language that their fathers had done before them. They wished they had died malefactors by the hands of Divine Justice, rather than thus seem for a while neglected by the Divine Mercy. "Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the Lord!" Instead of giving God thanks, as they ought to have done, for sparing them, they not only despise the mercy of their reprieve, but quarrel with it, as if God had done them a great deal of wrong, in giving them their lives for their prey, and snatching them as brands out of the burning. But they need not wish that they had died with their brethren, they are here taking the ready way to die like their brethren in a little while. "Woe unto them that desire the day of the Lord," Amos v. 18.—Henry.

INFIRMITY OF MOSES.—Though the people were rebels, and Moses called them so at other times without offence, yet he evidently spake at this time in an angry spirit. He also assumed honour to himself and to Aaron, instead of giving glory to God, whilst he inquired, "Must we fetch you water out of this rock?" He seems not firmly to have believed that the water would be given, and he did not think it sufficient to "speak to the rock;" and therefore he hastily smote it, and repeated the stroke immediately; though the sign of speaking was probably intended as a rebuke to the people, who were not so obedient to the Lord's command as the very rocks were. In this view of his conduct we perceive that he was very culpable; the Lord considered it as exceedingly dishonourable to his name; and he knew Aaron likewise to be highly criminal; though the water therefore was not withheld, yet the relief to Israel was followed by a severe rebuke to Moses and Aaron, and a sentence of exclusion from Canaan. They were eminent characters; the eyes of all Israel were upon them; and their improper conduct, and want of confidence in the power and faithfulness of God, rendered it expedient that he should be sanctified in their punishment. The other place where water had been brought out of the rock, was called Meribah, but it was called also Massah; this was Meribah-Kadesh.—Scott.

DEATH OF AARON.—Aaron submits, and dies in the method and manner appointed, and, for aught that appears, with as much cheerfulness as if he had been going to bed. 1. He puts on his holy garments to take his leave of them, and goes up with his brother and son to the top of mount Hor, and probably some of the elders of Israel with him, ver. 27. They went up "in the sight of all the congregation," who, it is likely, were told on what errand they went up; by this solemn procession, Aaron lets Israel know that he is neither afraid nor ashamed to die, but, when the bridegroom comes, can trim his lamp and go forth to meet him. His going up the hill to die, signified that the death of saints (and Aaron is call "the saint of the Lord") is their ascension; they rather go up than go down to death. 2. Moses, whose hands had first clothed Aaron with his 28 And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and [u]put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron [x]died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount.

AND when [a]king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, heard tell that Israel came by [b]the way of the spies, [c]then he fought against Israel, and took some of them prisoners.

2 And Israel [d]vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then [e]I will utterly destroy their cities.

3 And the LORD [f]hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them and their cities: and he called [g]the name of the place *Hormah.

4 ¶ And they journeyed from [h]mount Hor [i]by the way of the Red Sea, to [k]compass the land of Edom: and [l]the soul of the people was much [†]discouraged because of the way.

5 And the people [m]spake against God, and against Moses, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, neither is there any water; [n]and our soul loatheth this light bread.

6 And the LORD sent [o]fiery serpents[1] among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died.

7 ¶ Therefore the people came to Moses, and said, [p]We have sinned;[2] for we have spoken against the LORD, and against thee: [q]pray unto the LORD, that he take away the serpents from us. [r]And Moses prayed for the people.

8 And [s]the LORD said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live.

9 And Moses made [t]a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole; and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, [u]when he beheld the serpent of brass, [x]he lived.

10 ¶ And the children of Israel [y]set forward, and pitched in Oboth.

11 And they journeyed from Oboth, and pitched at [‡]Ije-abarim, in the wilderness which is before Moab, toward the sun-rising.

12 ¶ From thence they removed, and pitched in [z]the valley of Zared.

13 From thence they removed, and pitched [a]on the other side of Arnon, which is in the wilderness that cometh out of the coasts of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites.

16 And from thence they went to [d]Beer: that is the well whereof the LORD spake unto Moses, [e]Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 ¶ Then Israel [f]sang this song, *Spring up, O well; [†]sing ye unto it:

18 The [g]princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of [h]the lawgiver, with their staves. [i]And from the wilderness they went to Mattanah;

20 And from Bamoth in the valley, that is in the [‡]country of Moab, [k]to the top of [§]Pisgah, which looketh toward [‖]Jeshimon.

21 ¶ And Israel [l]sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, saying,

22 Let me pass through thy land: we will not turn into the fields, or into the vineyards; we will not drink of the waters of the well; but we will go along by the king's high-way, until we be past thy borders.

23 And [m]Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border; but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness: and he came to [n]Jahaz, and fought against Israel.

[1] The seraph is a flying serpent, the only one that has wings. The word properly signifies to burn; and this name was probably given it, either because of its colour, or because of the heat and thirst which its bite occasions. Its wings are not feathers, like the wings of birds, but rather like those of bats. When the Arabians go to gather the aromatic reed, or cassia, of which the serpents are very fond, they cover all their heads, except their eyes, with skins, to secure themselves from the bite of the serpent, which is very dangerous. — STACKHOUSE.

priestly garments, now strips him of them; for, in reverence to the priesthood, it was not fit that he should die in them. 3. Moses immediately puts the priestly garments upon Eleazar his son, clothes him with his father's robe, and "strengthens him with his girdle," Isa. xxii. 21. Now, (1.) This was a great comfort to Moses, by whose hand the law of the priesthood was given, to see that it should be kept up in a succession, and that a lamp was ordained "for the anointed," which should not be extinguished by death itself. This was a happy earnest and indication to the church of the care God would take, that "as one generation" of ministers and christians (spiritual priests) "passes away," another generation shall come up instead of it. (2.) It was a great satisfaction to Aaron to see his son, who was dear to him thus preferred, and his office, which was dearer, thus preserved and secured: and especially to see in this a figure of Christ's everlasting priesthood, in which alone his would be perpetuated. (3.) It was a great kindness to the people. The installing of Eleazar before Aaron was dead, would prevent those who bore ill-will to Aaron's family from attempting to set up another upon his death, in competition with his son. 4. "Aaron died there." Quickly after he was stript of his priestly garments, he laid him down and died contentedly, for a good man would desire, if it were the will of God, not to outlive his usefulness. Why should we covet to continue any longer in this world than while we may do God and our generation some service in it? 5. Moses and Eleazar, with those that attended them, buried Aaron there where he died, as appears by Deut. x. 16, and then "came down from the mount."—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. THE BRAZEN SERPENT.—Serpents of various kinds abounded in the wilderness, but they had been restrained from hurting the people, till they provoked God to send them to assail the camp; in which they soon did dreadful execution, and caused still greater consternation. They were called fiery serpents, as some think, from their colour, which resembled polished brass; others deduced the epithet from the inflammation, like the burning of fire, which immediately followed their bite.—The people were at length, by this judgment, made sensible of their fault, and entreated Moses to pray for the removal of the serpents, which he readily did. Yet they were not removed: but Moses was commanded to form one of brass exactly like them, to affix it to a long pole, or standard, and to place it in a conspicuous part of the camp: and to this they who had been bitten were directed to look. Nothing could in itself be less suited to give relief than such an expedient: but it was the Lord's appointment; and by this token the sufferers must express their dependence on him, and expect a cure from him alone. Accordingly, whoever looked, however desperate his case, or feeble his sight, or distant his situation, was infallibly and perfectly cured: but if any one would shut his eyes, or turn his back on the brazen serpent, he must die.—This forms a very significant type of our salvation by Jesus Christ. The Lord, provoked by man's first apostacy, hath permitted that old serpent, the tempter, the devil, to communicate his baleful venom to the whole human race, which operates to their destruction: and numbers in consequence have perished, are perishing, and will perish. But "God so loved the world, as to give his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Saviour was indeed perfectly free from sin, but he bare "the likeness of sinful flesh:" he was numbered with malefactors, and crucified with them: and it is observable that the supposed crime for which he suffered, namely, "making himself equal with God," was considered by his enemies as the essence of diabolical ambition, usurpation, and blasphemy. Having thus been "made sin for us," he is now held forth in the gospel to all nations; and when any poor sinner is made sensible of his guilt and danger, and humbly prays for mercy and deliverance; he is commanded to look unto Jesus, as dying upon the cross for the transgressions of "the law given by Moses:" and looking in faith, with a desire of salvation, and in obedience to God; and persevering from day to day in the use of the appointed means, he obtains effectual relief, and at length a perfect deliverance; even though weak in faith, and though Satan's temptations as yet harass his soul. For faith in a crucified Saviour is the appointment of God, and rendered effectual by his grace; and though man's reasoning pride considers it as foolishness, all believers experience it to be "the power of God to salvation."—The command given to Moses, to make an image of a serpent, shows that forming images is no violation of the moral law; unless intended as representations of God; or worshipped when made, as the Israelites afterwards worshipped the brazen serpent.—Scott.

SONG AT THE WELL.—The people sang this song, to the glory of God, and the encouragement of one another, "Spring up, O well;" thus they pray that it may spring up, for promised mercies must be fetched in by prayer; they triumph that it does spring up, and meet it with their joyful acclamations; with joy must we "draw water out of the wells of salvation," Isa. xii. 3. As the brazen serpent was a figure of Christ, who is lifted up for our cure, so is this well a figure of the Spirit, who is poured forth for our comfort, and from whom flow to us "rivers of living waters," John vii. 38. Does this well spring up in our souls? We should sing to it; take the comfort to ourselves, and give the glory to God; stir up this gift, sing to it, "Spring up, O well," thou "fountain of gardens," to water my soul, Cant. iv. 15: plead the promise which perhaps alludes to this story, Isa. xli. 17, 18, "I will make the wilderness wells of water."—That whereas, before, the remembrance of the miracle was perpetuated in the names given to the places, which signified the people's strife and murmuring, now, it was perpetuated in a of the sword, and possessed his land from [p]Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon: for the border of the children of Ammon was strong.

25 And Israel took all these cities: and Israel [q]dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, [r]in Heshbon, and in all the *villages thereof.

26 For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto Arnon.

27 Wherefore [s]they that speak in proverbs say, Come into Heshbon, let the city of Sihon be built and prepared:

28 For there is [t]a fire gone out of Heshbon, a flame from the city of Sihon: it hath consumed [u]Ar of Moab, and the lords of the high places of Arnon.

29 Woe to thee, Moab! thou art undone, [x]O people of Chemosh! he hath given his sons that escaped, and his daughters, into captivity, unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

30 We [y]have shot at them: Heshbon is perished even unto [z]Dibon, and we have laid them waste even unto Nophah, which reacheth unto Medeba.

31 ¶ Thus [a]Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorites.

32 And Moses sent to spy out [b]Jaazer, and they took the villages thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there.

33 ¶ And [c]they turned, and went up by the way of [d]Bashan: and [e]Og the king of Bashan went out against them, he, and all his people, to the battle at Edrei.

34 And the LORD said unto Moses, [f]Fear him not: [g]for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him [h]as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

35 So they [i]smote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him alive: and they possessed his land.

CHAP. XXII.

Balak's first message for Balaam is rejected, 1; his second obtaineth him, 15. An angel would have slain him, if his ass had not saved him, 22. Balak entertaineth him, 36.

AND [a]the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in the plains of Moab, [b]on this side[1] Jordan by Jericho.

2 ¶ And [c]Balak the son of Zippor saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites.

3 And [d]Moab was sore afraid of the people, because they were many; and Moab was distressed because of the children of Israel.

4 And Moab said unto the [e]elders of Midian,[2] [f]Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field. [g]And Balak the son of Zippor was king of the Moabites at that time.

5 He [h]sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor, to [i]Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, [k]they cover the *face of the earth, and they abide over against me.

6 Come now therefore, I pray thee, [l]curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for [m]I wot that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed.

7 And the elders of Moab and the elders of Midian departed with the [n]rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the words of Balak.

8 And he said unto them, Lodge here [o]this night, and I will bring you word again, as the LORD shall speak unto me. And the princes of Moab abode with Balaam.

9 And [p]God came unto Balaam, and said, [q]What men are these with thee?

10 And Balaam said unto God, [r]Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent unto me, saying,

11 Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which covereth the face of the earth: come now, curse me them; peradventure I shall [t]be able to overcome them, and drive them out.

12 And God said unto Balaam, [u]Thou shalt not[3] go with them; [v]thou shalt not curse the people: [w]for they are blessed.

13 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and said unto the princes of Balak, Get you into your land; for [x]the LORD[4] refuseth to give me leave to go with you.

14 And the princes of Moab rose up, and they went unto Balak, and said, [y]Balaam refuseth to come with us.

15 ¶ And Balak sent yet again [z]princes, more, and more honourable than they.

16 And they came to Balaam, and said to him, Thus saith Balak, the son of Zippor, ‡Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me:

17 For [a]I will promote thee unto very great honour, and I [b]will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me: come therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people.

18 And Balaam answered and said unto the servants of Balak, [c]If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, [d]I cannot go beyond the word of the LORD my God, to do less or more.

song of praise, which preserved on record the manner in which it was done, ver. 18. "The princes digged the well," the Seventy, it is probable, "by the direction of the lawgiver," that is, Moses, under God, "with their staves;" that is, with their staves they made holes in the soft and sandy ground, and God caused the water miraculously to spring up in the holes which they made.

OG, KING OF BASHAN.—Og, king of Bashan, instead of being warned by the fate of his neighbours to make peace with Israel, is instigated by it to make war with them, which proves in like manner to be his destruction. Og was also an Amorite, and therefore, perhaps, thought himself better able to deal with Israel than his neighbours were, and more likely to prevail, because of his own gigantic strength and stature, which Moses takes notice of, Deut. iii. 11, where he gives a more full account of this story. Here observe, 1. That the Amorite begins the war, ver. 33. He "went out to battle against Israel." His country was very rich and pleasant, Bashan was famous for the best timber, (witness the oaks of Bashan,) and the best breed of cattle, witness the bulls and kine of Bashan, and the rams and lambs of that country, which are celebrated, Deut. xxxii. 14. Wicked men do their utmost to secure themselves and their possessions against the judgments of God, but all in vain, when their day comes on which they must fall. 2. That God interests himself in the cause, bids Israel not to fear this threatening force, and promises a complete victory, "'I have delivered him into thy hands,' ver. 34, the thing is as good as done already, it is all thine own, enter and take possession." Giants are but worms before God's power. 3. That Israel is more than a conqueror, not only routs the enemies' army, but gains the enemies' country, which afterward was part of the inheritance of the two tribes and a-half, that were first seated on the other side Jordan. God gave Israel these successes, while Moses was yet with them, both for his comfort, that he might see the beginning of that glorious work, which he must not live to see the finishing of; and for the encouragement of the people, in the war of Canaan under Joshua. Though this was to them in comparison but as the day of small things, yet it was an earnest of great things.—Henry.

CHAP. XXII. BALAAM.—It is the general opinion of expositors, that Balaam was first a prophet, (and as some think a good man,) and that afterwards he degenerated and became a soothsayer; yet this is exceedingly improbable, and unparalleled in Scripture. Had he been first a prophet, and then turned aside to use magical arts for the sake of gain, he would scarcely have "sought for enchantments," when he went for the express purpose of meeting the Lord, whatever he did at other times. It is not [illegible] that [illegible] were spoken by him, except those contained in this history, [illegible] certainly are sufficient to entitle him to the name of "Balaam the prophet." His boasting likewise, concerning "his eyes being opened, and his seeing the visions of the Almighty," seems especially to relate to the events here recorded. It appears therefore more probable, that he was originally a diviner, or magician of great renown; but, having acquired some knowledge of the true God, perhaps by hearing of the wonderful works performed by Moses in his name, he endeavoured to render this knowledge subservient to his interested and ambitious purposes, by professing himself a prophet of JEHOVAH, and uttering divinations as revelations from him. Thus the exorcists, observing how efficacious the name of Jesus proved, in the mouth of the apostle, attempted to cast out devils, "adjuring them by Jesus, whom Paul preached:" and thus Simon Magus, finding the miracles of Philip so much superior to the effects of his magic, embraced Christianity; and afterwards offered Peter money to confer on him the same power which he exercised, doubtless intending to enrich or aggrandize himself by it. On this supposition, Balaam's use of incantations, even in seeking JEHOVAH, was the natural effect of the association of his old practices with his new pretensions. It is not certain whether the Lord had ever spoken to him, or by him, before this event, though probably he had; but he certainly did afterwards: yet there is abundant proof that he lived and died a wicked man, and an enemy to God and his people. This, however, as it is evident from the Scriptures, has by no means been a singular case. Balaam dwelt in or near Mesopotamia, by the Euphrates, the renowned river of the inhabitants of those countries. But his reputation had reached so far, and he was so celebrated, that he was sent for, as it appears, in consequence of the counsel given to Moab, by the elders of Midian; being the only person who was able to contend with Moses, the prophet of Israel. For we may suppose, that they ascribed to the superior skill of Moses, in some unknown arts, all that power by which Israel had been brought out of Egypt, notwithstanding Pharaoh's determined opposition; had subsisted for so many years in the wilderness; and had obtained their late victories over the Amorites. Balak had some general notion of the overruling influence of an invisible power; and, at the same time, such an opinion of Balaam's interest with that invisible power, that he supposed he could do nothing so effectual to conciliate his favour as to pay court to his prophet: nay, he either actually thought, or he was willing to compliment Balaam, and to comfort himself with the supposition, that his blessings or curses were infallibly ratified! If he could therefore prevail with Balaam solemnly to curse Israel and to bless Moab, he would then duly Israel, and declare war against them, notwithstanding all the wonders of which he had heard: [illegible] has been shown by learned men, that many of the heathen [illegible] their [illegible] in the name of their [illegible]

19 Now therefore, I pray you, [e]tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the LORD will say unto me more.

20 And [f]God came unto Balaam at night, and said unto him, [g]If the men come to call thee, rise up, and go with them; but [h]yet the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt thou do.

21 And Balaam [i]rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab.

22 ¶ And [k]God's anger was kindled because he went: and [l]the angel of the LORD [m]stood in the way for an adversary against him. (Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him.)

23 And [n]the ass saw[6] the angel of the LORD standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and [o]the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field; and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way.

24 But the angel of the LORD stood in a path of the vineyards, a wall being on this side, and a wall on that side.

25 And when the ass saw the angel of the LORD, she thrust herself unto the wall, and [p]crushed Balaam's foot against the wall; and he smote her again.

26 And the angel of the LORD went further, and stood in a narrow place, [q]where was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left.

27 And when the ass saw the angel of the LORD, she fell down under Balaam: [r]and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with a staff.

28 And the LORD [s]opened the mouth[6] of the ass; and she said unto Balaam, [t]What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?

29 And Balaam said unto the ass, Because thou hast mocked me: I would there were a sword in mine hand, [u]for now would I kill thee.

30 And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, [v]upon which thou hast ridden [w]ever since I was thine unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said, Nay.

31 Then the LORD [x]opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and he [y]bowed down his head, and [*]fell flat on his face.

32 And the angel of the LORD said unto him, [z]Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? Behold, I went out to [†]withstand thee, because [a]thy way is perverse [b]before me:

33 And the ass saw me, and turned from me these three times: unless she had turned from me, [c]surely now also I had slain thee, and saved her alive.

34 And Balaam said unto the angel of the LORD, [d]I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore, [e]if it [‡]displease thee, I will get me back again.

35 And the angel of the LORD said unto Balaam, [f]Go with the men: but only the word that [g]I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak. So Balaam went with the princes of Balak.

36 ¶ And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, [h]he went out to meet him unto a city of Moab, which is in [i]the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost coast.

37 And Balak said unto Balaam, Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not unto me? [k]am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?

38 And Balaam said unto Balak, Lo, I am come unto thee: [l]have I now any power at all to say any thing? [m]the word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak.

39 And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto [§]Kirjath-huzoth.

40 And Balak [n]offered oxen and sheep, and sent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him.

41 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into the [o]high places[7] of Baal, that thence he might see the [p]utmost part of the people.

Balak's sacrifices, 1, 14, 28. Balaam's parables, 7, 18.

AND Balaam said unto Balak, [a]Build me here [b]seven altars,[1] and prepare me here [c]seven oxen and seven rams.

2 And Balak did as Balaam had spoken; and Balak and Balaam [d]offered on every altar a bullock and a ram.

3 And Balaam said unto Balak, Stand by thy [e]burnt-offering, and I will go; [f]peradventure the LORD will come to meet me: and whatsoever he sheweth me I will tell thee. And he [*]went to an high place.

4 And [g]God met Balaam: and he said unto him, [h]I have prepared seven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram.

5 And the LORD put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.

6 And he returned unto him, and, lo, [i]he stood by his burnt-sacrifice, he, and all the princes of Moab.

declared war against them. And it is not impossible, that the sentence denounced by the Lord against the nations of Canaan, whom he devoted to destruction, and employed Israel to extirpate, and Israel's vow concerning the cities of Arad, might suggest to the Moabites and Midianites the idea of engaging Balaam in a similar manner to devote the Israelites; and that the customs of other nations in this respect were derived from the traditionary report of these events.—Scott.

WAGES OF DIVINATION.—We may discern in Balaam a struggle between his convictions and his corruptions. 1. His convictions charged him to adhere to the command of God, and he spoke their language, ver. 18. Nor could any man have said better; "'If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold,' and that is more than he can give, or I can ask, 'I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God.'" See how honourably he speaks of God, he is "Jehovah, my God." Note, Many call God theirs, that are not his, not truly because not only his; "they swear by the Lord, and by Malcham." See how respectfully he speaks of the word of God, as one resolved to stick to it, and in nothing to vary from it, and how slightly of the wealth of this world, as if gold and silver were nothing to him in comparison with the favour of God; and yet, at the same time, the Searcher of hearts knew that he loved the wages of unrighteousness. Note, It is an easy thing for bad men to speak very good words, and with their mouth to make a show of piety. There is no judging of men by their words, God knows the heart. 2. His corruptions at the same time strongly inclined him to go contrary to the command. He seemed to refuse the temptation, ver. 18. But even then he expressed no abhorrence of it, as Christ did when he had the kingdoms of the world offered him, "Get thee hence, Satan:" and as Peter did, when Simon Magus offered him money; "Thy money perish with thee." But it appears, ver. 19, that he had a strong inclination to accept the proffer; for he would further attend, to know what God would say to him, hoping that he might alter his mind, and give him leave to go. This was a vile reflection upon God Almighty, as if he could change his mind, and now, at last, suffer those to be cursed whom he had pronounced blessed; and as if he would be brought to allow of that which he had already declared to be evil. Surely he "thought" God "altogether such a one [illegible]"

[illegible] Ass.—1. His ass "turned aside out of the way," ver. 33. Balaam should [illegible] light of this, [illegible] Whether he was not out of the way of [illegible]

many ill accidents are we liable to, in travelling upon the road, from which if we are preserved, we must own our obligations to the Divine Providence, which by the ministry of angels "keeps us in all our ways, lest we dash our foot against a stone;" but if we at any time meet with a disaster, it should put us upon inquiring whether our way be right in the sight of God or no. The crushing of Balaam's foot, though it was the saving of his life, provoked him so much that "he smote his ass" the second time. So angry are we apt to be at that which, though a present uneasiness, yet is a real kindness. 3. Upon the next encounter with the angel, the ass "fell down" under Balaam, ver. 26, 27. He ought to have considered that there was certainly something extraordinary in this; for his ass was not restive, nor did she use to serve him thus; but it is common for those whose hearts are "fully set in them to do evil," to push on violently, and break through all the difficulties which Providence lays in their way to give check to them, and to stop them in their career. Balaam the third time smote his ass, though she had now done him the best piece of service that ever she did him, saving him from the sword of the angel, and by her falling down teaching him to do likewise. 4. When all this would not work upon him, God opened the mouth of the ass, and she spoke to him once and again; and yet neither did this move him, ver. 28. "The Lord opened the mouth of the ass." This was a great miracle, quite above the power of nature, and wrought by the power of the God of nature; who "made man's mouth," and taught him to speak, for otherwise (since we learn to speak purely by imitation, and therefore they that are born deaf are consequently dumb) the first man had never spoken, nor any of his seed. He that made man speak, could, when he pleased, make the ass to "speak with man's voice," 2 Pet. ii. 16. The ass complained of Balaam's cruelty, ver. 28, "What have I done unto thee that thou hast smitten me?" Note, The righteous God will not see the meanest and weakest abused; but either they shall be enabled to speak in their own defence, or he will some way or other speak for them. If God would not suffer a beast to be wronged, much less a man, a Christian, a child of his own. We cannot "open the mouth of the dumb," as God did here, but we may and must "open our mouth for the dumb," Prov. xxxi. 8; Job xxxi. 18.—Henry.

7 ¶ And he [k]took up his parable, and said, Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from [l]Aram, out of the mountains of the east, saying, [m]Come, curse me Jacob; and come, [n]defy Israel.

8 [o]How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the LORD hath not defied?

9 For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people shall [p]dwell alone, and [q]shall not be reckoned among the nations.

10 Who [r]can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of [s]the fourth part of Israel? Let [t]me die [u]the death of the righteous,[x] and let my last end be like his!

11 And Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? [y]I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.

12 And he answered and said, [z]Must I not take heed to speak that which the LORD hath put in my mouth?

13 And Balak said unto him, Come, I pray thee, with me [a]unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them: thou shalt see but the [b]utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all; and [c]curse me them from thence.

14 ¶ And he brought him into the field of Zophim, to the top of ‡Pisgah, and [d]built seven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

15 And he said unto Balak, Stand here by thy burnt-offering, [e]while I meet the LORD yonder.

16 And the LORD met Balaam, and [f]put a word in his mouth, and said, Go again unto Balak, and say thus.

17 And when he came to him, behold, he stood by his burnt-offering, and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said unto him, [g]What hath the LORD spoken?

18 And he took up his parable, and said, [h]Rise up, Balak, and hear; hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor:

19 God [i]is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?

20 Behold, I have received commandment to bless: and [k]he hath blessed; and [l]I cannot reverse it.

21 He [k]hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: [l]the LORD his God is with him, and [m]the shout of a King is among them.

Balaam prophesieth Israel's happiness, 1; and of the Star of Jacob, 15.

AND when Balaam [a]saw that it pleased the LORD to bless Israel, he went not, as [b]at other times, *to seek for enchantments, but he set his face toward the wilderness.

2 And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel [c]abiding in his tents according to their tribes; and [d]the Spirit of God came upon him.

3 And [e]he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man [f]whose eyes are open hath said:

4 He hath said, which heard the words of God, which [f]saw the vision of the Almighty, [g]falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

5 How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob! and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

6 As the valleys are they spread forth, [h]as gardens by the river's side, [i]as the trees of lign-aloes, [k]which the LORD hath planted, and [l]as cedar-trees beside the waters.

7 He shall [m]pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in [n]many waters; and [o]his king shall be higher than [p]Agag, and [q]his kingdom shall be exalted.

ceive that the Lord spake by Balaam as entirely as by the ass; that the Divine power was as really and effectually put forth in this case as in the other; and that Balaam had no more to glory in than the animal, but much indeed to be ashamed of. Balaam was sent for from Aram, or Mesopotamia, to curse Israel, and thus disdainfully to set them at defiance; and he confessed that he came with that intent, in order that Balak might war against them. But as the Lord had not "cursed and defied them," (that is, had not rejected them, or determined to treat them as enemies,) he would not allow Balaam to curse them; though "the curse causeless," could have done them no hurt, and might have deceived and hardened Balak.

BALAAM'S PRAYER.—Balaam acknowledged that the righteous are happy in death, and beyond it. That calmness with which the true believer expects and submits to the stroke of death; that hope full of immortality which supports him at the solemn season; and that prospect of eternal felicity in another world, in which he rejoices, and which he recommends to others; render his latter end desirable, even in the judgment of those wicked people, whose convictions respecting a future judgment check them in their sinful pursuits with fears of eternal misery; and who would be glad of deliverance from the horror of dying in sin, and sinking into hell, if it could be obtained without repentance and self-denial. They wish, they hope, and in some sense they intend, to "die the death of the righteous;" but the love of wealth, honour, or pleasure, in one form or other, keeps them from living the life of the righteous. They therefore procrastinate, and quiet their consciences with the hope of future amendment; or they take up with some false confidence, some superficial reformation, or external change; or they despise that only salvation, by which a sinner can be righteous before God. Thus many who wish to "die the death of the righteous," live impenitent, and perish in sin, as Balaam did. "The object now before us is the most astonishing in the world. A very wicked man, under a deep sense of God and religion, persisting still in his wickedness, and preferring the wages of unrighteousness, even when he had before him a lively view of death, and that approaching period of his days, which should deprive him of all the advantages, for which he was prostituting himself; and likewise a prospect, whether certain or uncertain, of a future state of retribution! All this joined with an explicit wish, that when he was to leave this world, he might be in the condition of a righteous man! Good God, what inconsistency, what perplexity is here! With what different views of things, with what contradictory principles of action, must such a mind be torn and distracted! It was not an unthinking carelessness, by which he ran headlong into vice and folly, without making a stand to ask himself what he was doing: no, he acted upon the cool principles of interest.—Scott.

BALAAM BAFFLED AGAIN.—Balaam owns himself baffled. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, so as to prevail. The curses of hell can never take place against the blessings of heaven. Not but that attempts of this kind would be made, but they would certainly be fruitless and ineffectual. Some observe, that Jacob denotes the church low and afflicted; Israel denotes it prosperous and advanced; but be the church high or low, her friends few or many, let second causes smile or frown, it comes all to one. No weapon formed against it shall prosper. Note, God easily can, and certainly will, baffle and disappoint all the devices and designs of the powers of darkness against his church, so that they shall not prevail to destroy it. 2. He foresees that this would be remembered in time to come. "According to this time," that is, with reference to this we are now about, it shall be said concerning Jacob and Israel, and said by them, "What hath God wrought!" What great things hath God done for his people! It shall be said with wonder, joy, and thankfulness, and a challenge to the neighbouring nations, to produce any like instances of the care of their gods for them. Note, The defeating of the designs of the church's enemies ought to be had in everlasting remembrance to the glory of God.—Balaam feels that he had "more reason to fear being ruined by them," for they were likely to make bloody work among his neighbours; and if he and his country escaped it was not because he was too great for them to meddle with, but because he fell not within their commission; the people that now have lain for some time closely encamped, do but repose themselves for a while like a lion couchant, but shortly they "shall rise up as a great lion," a lion rampant, that "shall not lie down till he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the slain."—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. THE CURSE AGAIN FRUSTRATED.—Balaam concluded another rhapsody by exclaiming, "Blessed is he that blesseth thee;" those that do them any kindness will certainly fare the better for it: but their enemies, and those in arms against them, were certainly miserable; "cursed is he that curseth thee:" those that do them any injury, do it at their peril: for God takes what is done to them, whether good or evil, as done to himself. Thus he confirms the blessing of Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, and speaks as if therefore he did at this time bless Israel, and not curse them, because he desired to share in the blessing of Israel's friends, and dreaded the curse on Israel's enemies.—Henry.

THE PREDICTED STAR.—The STAR coming out of Jacob, said the SCEPTRE, of royal authority, rising in Israel, may refer, in a subordinate sense, to David, as reigning over Israel with great reputation, and gaining conquests over the great foes of Moab, Edom, Amalek, and the kings of the East. It may also refer to Christ, the Messiah, the Prophet like unto Moses, and the Lawgiver, and the Conqueror, and the Prophet and Priest and King of the Mountain, and the Enlightening Star, and the Prophecy and Revelation of God.

8 [r]God brought him forth out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn: he [s]shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall [t]break their bones, and [u]pierce them through with his arrows.

9 He [x]couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: [y]who shall stir him up? [z]blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee.

10 ¶ And Balak's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he [a]smote his hands together: and Balak said unto Balaam, [b]I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times.

11 Therefore now flee thou to thy place: [c]I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but, lo, [d]the LORD hath kept thee back from honour.

12 And Balaam said unto Balak, [e]Spake I not also to thy messengers, which thou sentest unto me, saying,

13 If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the LORD, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; but what the LORD saith, that will I speak?

14 And now, behold, I go unto my people; come therefore, and [f]I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in [g]the latter days.[1]

15 ¶ And [h]he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said;

16 He hath said, [i]which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

17 [k]I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come [l]a Star out of Jacob, and [m]a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall [n]smite the corners of Moab,[‡]and destroy [o]all the children of Sheth.

18 And [p]Edom shall be a possession, Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly.

19 Out [q]of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and [r]shall destroy him that remaineth of the city.

20 And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was [§]the first of the nations, but [*]his latter end [‖]shall be that he perish for ever.

21 And he looked on [t]the Kenites, and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock:

22 Nevertheless [*]the Kenite shall be wasted, [†]until [u]Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

23 And he took up his parable, and said, Alas! who shall live [x]when God doeth this?

24 And ships shall come from the coast of [y]Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, [z]and shall afflict Eber, [a]and he also shall perish for ever.

25 And Balaam rose up, and went [b]and returned to his place; and Balak also went his way.

The Israelites commit whoredom and idolatry, being tempted by the women of Moab and Midian, 1–3. God commands the criminals to be slain, 4, 5. Phinehas kills Zimri and Cosbi, and the plague which wasted Israel is stayed, 6–9. God approves his zeal, and gives him a perpetual priesthood; and commands Moses to make war against the Midianites, 10-18.

AND Israel abode in [a]Shittim, and [b]the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.

2 And [c]they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people, did eat, and [d]bowed down to their gods.

3 And Israel [e]joined himself unto Baal-peor:[1] and [f]the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, Take [g]all the heads of the people, [h]and hang them up before the LORD against the sun, [i]that the fierce anger of the LORD may be turned away from Israel.

5 And Moses said unto the [k]judges of Israel, [l]Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor.

6 ¶ And, behold, one of the children of Israel came, and brought unto his brethren [m]a Midianitish woman, [n]in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were [o]weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 And when [p]Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took [q]a javelin in his hand;

8 And he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and [r]thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. [s]So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel.

9 And those that died in the plague were [t]twenty and four thousand.

10 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

ment in the exalted kingdom and spiritual victories of Jesus Christ. Some suppose that, by Sheth, an ancestor, or head, of some Moabitish tribe is meant; but others think that Seth, the son of Adam, and the progenitor of the whole postdiluvian world, is intended; and this seems the best grounded interpretation. The word rendered "destroy" is only used in this place, and one more, in Scripture, Isa. xxii. 5; and some think it here means build up, for it is derived from a word which signifies a wall. If it means destroy, it may refer to Christ's subverting the strong foundations of the several great monarchies which have successively prevailed on earth, with that of Satan, the god and prince of this world; and subverting the corrupt state of things among all the posterity of Adam, by setting up his heavenly kingdom, and filling the earth with his glory. The Jewish writers in general interpret this prophecy principally of the Messiah. Onkelos, one of their most renowned paraphrasts, has these words, "When a prince shall arise of the house of Jacob, and Christ shall be anointed of the house of Israel; he shall slay the princes of Moab, and rule over all the sons of men." The rest agree with him. Had the house of David in general been meant, a single star would hardly have been mentioned. A Star was the known emblem of the Messiah; and one of the impostors, who pretended to be the Messiah in the primitive times, called himself "Barchochebas," or "the son of a star." Our Lord calls himself, "The bright and morning Star:" and the christian fathers are generally of opinion that this prophecy being known in the East, prepared the way for the wise men following the star which appeared at the birth of Christ. In this grand and spiritual sense of the prophecy, Israel represents the true church of God, and Moab and Edom her enemies.

BALAAM'S CONCLUDING PROPHECY.—The coasts or isles of Chittim, always, in Scripture, mean the regions of Europe bordering on the Mediterranean, especially the Greeks or Romans. The passage is, therefore, an evident prediction of the victories of the Greeks, or Macedonians, under Alexander, and his successors; and of those of the Romans after them. The latter, especially, coming from far in ships, overturned the several kingdoms, in the western part of Asia, and possessed them; causing dreadful afflictions to the people, who inhabited the ancient Assyria; but still greater to the Hebrews, especially in the last destruction of Jerusalem. And they have ever since been tyrannizing, in one form or other, over the world and the church, but shall at length be destroyed as entirely as the Amalekites were. This part of the prediction is not yet fulfilled. It is well worthy our notice, that the "final destruction" of Amalek and Rome is foretold, but only the "affliction" of Asshur and Eber. The regions intended by "Asshur" remained but a short time under the dominion of the Romans, and were afterward again governed by their own princes; and the Hebrews continue a distinct and numerous, though oppressed and scattered, people to this day, evidently in order to the accomplishment of the prophecies respecting their conversion to Christ, and their subsequent prosperity; and this is one good proof that the Hebrews, or Jews, were meant, and not any other obscure tribe, as some think. What a surprising series of prophecies have we here in few words, which, in former accomplishments, hath already evidenced to successive generations the Divine authority of the Scriptures; and shall, to future ages, demonstrate the same truth with undeniable evidence!—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. TEMPTATION.—Under the mask of friendship, an intercourse with Israel was opened, and some of the women of Moab and Midian, (who were, it seems, no ways backward to such an infamous undertaking,) were employed to allure the people to a criminal intercourse. This made way for an invitation to those idolatrous feasts, where every species of licentiousness was practised, which was readily complied with; and the Israelites flocked in great numbers, and greedily joined in this abominable worship; for "the ordinary charms to idolatry were good victuals and bad women."—(Bp. Patrick.) These Israelites had hitherto been preserved from connections with heathen women, amidst all their rebellions; and therefore it is said, "the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab." The women of Moab, perhaps, were the first tempters; but those of Midian at length became more generally and deeply criminal. "Baal-peor," or the lord of Peor, might be the same as Chemosh, the god of Moab.—Scott.

ZEAL OF PHINEHAS.—God put an honour upon Phinehas; though he did no more than was his duty to do as a judge, yet because he did it with extraordinary zeal against sin, and for the honour of God and Israel, and did it when the other judges, out of respect to Zimri's character, as a prince, were afraid, and declined doing it; therefore God showed himself particularly well pleased with him, and it "was counted to him for righteousness," Ps. cvi. 31. There is nothing lost by venturing for God. If Zimri's relations bore him a grudge for it, and his friends might censure him as indiscreet in this violent and hasty execution, what needed he care, while God accepted him? In a good thing we should be zealously affected. 1. Phinehas, upon this occasion, though a young man, is pronounced his country's patriot and best friend, ver. 11. He has "turned away my wrath from the children of Israel." So much does God delight in showing mercy, that he is well pleased with those that are instrumental in turning away his wrath; this is the best service we can do to our people; and we may contribute something towards it by our prayers, and by our endeavours in our places to "bring the wickedness of the wicked to an end." 2. The priesthood is entailed by covenant upon his family. It was designed consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy.

12 Wherefore say, Behold, [y]I give unto him [2]my covenant of peace:

13 And he shall have it, and [a]his seed after him, even the covenant of [a]an everlasting priesthood; because he was [b]zealous for his God, and made an [c]atonement for the children of Israel.

14 Now the name of the Israelite that was slain, even that was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, [d]a prince of a [f]chief house among [e]the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain was Cozbi, the daughter of [f]Zur; he was head over a people, and of a chief house in Midian.

16 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

17 [g]Vex the Midianites, and smite them:

18 For they [b]vex you with their wiles, wherewith they have [1]beguiled you in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cozbi, the daughter of a prince of Midian, their sister, which was slain in the day of the plague for Peor's sake.

Israel numbered, 1. The inheritance of the land divided, 52.

AND it came to pass [a]after the plague, that the LORD spake unto Moses, and unto Eleazar[1] the son of Aaron the priest, saying,

2 [b]Take the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, from twenty years old and upward, throughout their fathers' house, all that are able to go to war in Israel.

3 And Moses and Eleazar the priest spake with them in [c]the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

4 Take the sum of the people, from twenty years old and upward; as the LORD [d]commanded Moses and the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt.

5 ¶ Reuben, [e]the eldest son of Israel: [f]the children of Reuben; Hanoch, of whom cometh the family of the Hanochites: of Pallu, the family of the Palluites:

6 Of Hezron, the family of the Hezronites: of Carmi, the family of the Carmites.

7 These are the families of the Reubenites: and they that were numbered of them were [g]forty and three thousand and seven hundred and thirty.

8 And the sons of Pallu; Eliab.

9 And the sons of Eliab; Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram. This is that Dathan and Abiram which were [h]famous in the congregation, who strove against Moses and against Aaron in the company of Korah, when they strove against the LORD:

10 And [i]the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up together with Korah,[2] when that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men: and [k]they became a sign.

11 Notwithstanding [l]the children of Korah[3] died not.

12 ¶ The sons of Simeon, after their families: of [m]Nemuel, the family of the Nemuelites: of Jamin, the family of the Jaminites: of [n]Jachin, the family of the Jachinites:

13 Of [o]Zerah, the family of the Zarhites: of Shaul, the family of the Shaulites.

14 These are the families of the Simeonites, [p]twenty and two thousand and two hundred.

15 ¶ The children of Gad,[4] after their families: of [q]Zephon, the family of the Zephonites: of Haggi, the family of the Haggites: of Shuni, the family of the Shunites:

16 Of Ozni, the family of the Oznites: of Eri, the family of the Erites:

17 Of Arod, the family of the Arodites: of Areli, the family of the Arelites.

18 These are the families of the children of Gad, according to those that were numbered of them, [r]forty thousand and five hundred.

19 ¶ The sons of Judah were [s]Er and Onan: and Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan.

20 And the sons of Judah, after their families, were; of [t]Shelah, the family of the Shelanites: of [u]Pharez, the family of the Pharzites: [x]of Zerah, the family of the Zarhites:

21 And the sons of Pharez were; of Hezron, the family of the Hezronites: of Hamul, the family of the Hamulites.

22 These are the families of Judah, according to those that were numbered of them, [y]threescore and sixteen thousand and five hundred.

23 ¶ Of [z]the sons of Issachar, after their families: of Tola, the family of the Tolaites: of Pua, the family of the Punites:

24 Of Jashub, the family of the Jashubites: of Shimron, the family of the Shimronites.

25 These are the families of Issachar, according to those that were numbered of them, [a]threescore and four thousand and three hundred.

26 ¶ Of [b]the sons of Zebulun, after their families: of Sered, the family of the Sardites: of Elon, the family of the Elonites: of Jahleel, the family of the Jahleelites.

27 These are the families of the Zebulunites, according to those that were numbered of them, [c]threescore thousand and five hundred.

him before, but now it was confirmed to him, and, which added much to the comfort and honour of it, it was made the recompense of his pious zeal, ver. 12, 13. It is here called "an everlasting priesthood," because it should continue to the period of the Old Testament dispensation, and should then have its perfection and perpetuity in the unchangeable priesthood of Christ, who is "consecrated for evermore." By the "covenant of peace" given him, some understand in general a promise of long life, and prosperity, and all good; it seems rather to be meant particularly of the covenant of priesthood, for that is called the "covenant of life and peace," Mal. ii. 5, and was made for the preserving of peace between God and his people.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. SECOND CENSUS.—This is the register of the tribes, as they were now enrolled in the same order that they were numbered in chap. i. Observe, 1. The account that is here kept of the families of each tribe; which must not be understood of such as we call families, those that live in a house together; but such as were the descendants of the several sons of the patriarchs, by whose names, in honour of them, their posterity distinguished themselves and one another. The families of the twelve tribes are thus numbered; of Dan but one, for Dan had but one son, and yet that tribe was the most numerous of all, except Judah, ver. 42, 43. Its beginning was small, but its latter end greatly increased; Zebulun was divided into three families; Ephraim into four; Issachar into four; Naphtali into four; and Reuben into four; Judah, Simeon, and Asher, had five families a-piece. Gad and Benjamin seven a-piece; and Manasseh eight. Benjamin brought ten sons into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 21, but three of them, it seems, either died childless, or their families were extinct; for here we find seven only of those names preserved, and that whole tribe none of the most numerous: for Providence, in the building up of families and nations, does not tie itself to probabilities. "The barren hath borne seven, and she that hath many children, is waxed feeble," 1 Sam. ii. 5. 2. The numbers of each tribe. And here our best entertainment will be to compare those numbers with those when they were numbered at mount Sinai. The sum total was nearly the same; they were now one thousand eight hundred and twenty fewer than they were then; yet seven of the tribes increased in number. Judah increased one thousand nine hundred. Issachar, nine thousand nine hundred. Zebulun, three thousand one hundred. Manasseh, twenty thousand five hundred. Benjamin, ten thousand two hundred. Dan, one thousand seven hundred. Asher, eleven thousand nine hundred. But the other five decreased more than to balance that increase. Reuben decreased two thousand seven hundred and seventy. Simeon, thirty-seven thousand one hundred. Gad, five thousand one hundred and fifty. Ephraim, eight thousand. And Naphtali, eight thousand. In which account we may observe, (1.) That all the three tribes that were encamped under the standard of Judah, who was the ancestor of Christ, were increased, for his church shall be edified and multiplied. (2.) That none of the tribes increased so much as that of Manasseh, which in the former account was the smallest of all the tribes, only thirty-two thousand two hundred: while here it is one of the most considerable; and his brother Ephraim, which there was numerous, is here one of the least. Jacob had crossed hands upon their heads, and had preferred Ephraim before Manasseh, which perhaps the Ephraimites had prided themselves too much in, and had trampled upon their brethren, the Manassites; but when the Lord saw that Manasseh was despised, he thus multiplied him exceedingly, for it is his glory to help the weakest, and raise up them that are cast down. (3.) That none of the tribes decreased so much as Simeon did, from fifty-nine thousand three hundred, it sunk to twenty-two thousand two hundred; almost to but a third part of what it was. One whole family of that tribe, (namely, Ohad, mentioned, Exod. vi. 15,) was extinct in the wilderness. Hence Simeon is not mentioned in Moses's blessing, Deut. xxxiii., and the lot of that tribe in Canaan was inconsiderable, only a canton out of Judah's lot, Josh. xix. 9. Some conjecture that most of those twenty-four thousand which were cut off by the plague for the iniquity of Peor, were of that tribe; for Zimri, who was a ringleader in that iniquity, was a prince of that tribe, many of which therefore were influenced by his example to "follow his pernicious ways." 3. In the account of the tribe of Reuben, mention is made of the rebellion of Dathan and Abiram, who were of that tribe, in confederacy with Korah, a Levite, ver. 9—11. Though the story had been largely related but a few chapters before, yet here it comes in again, as fit to be had in remembrance, and thought of by posterity, whenever they looked into their pedigree, and pleased themselves with the antiquity of their families, and the glory of their ancestors, that they might call themselves a seed of evil-doers. Two things are here said of them, (1.) That they had been "famous in the congregation," ver. 9. Probably, they were remarkable for their ingenuity, activity, and fitness for business; that Dathan and Abiram, that might have been advanced in due time under God and Moses; but their ambitious spirits put them upon striving against God and Moses, and when they quarrelled with the one, they quarrelled with the other. And what was the issue? (2.) They that might have been famous, were made infamous; they "became a sign," ver. 10. They were made monuments of divine justice; God in their ruin showed himself glorious in holiness, and so they were set up for a warning to all others in all ages, to take heed of treading in the steps of their pride and rebellion. Notice is here taken of the preservation of the "children of Korah," ver. 11, they "died not," as the children of Dathan and Abiram did; doubtless, because they kept themselves pure from the infection, 29 Of the sons of Manasseh: of [e]Machir, the family of the Machirites;[5] and Machir begat Gilead: of Gilead come the family of the Gileadites.

30 These are the sons of Gilead: of [e]Jeezer, the family of the Jeezerites: of Helek, the family of the Helekites:

31 And of Asriel, the family of the Asrielites: and of Shechem, the family of the Shechemites:

32 And of Shemida, the family of the Shemidaites: and of Hepher, the family of the Hepherites.

33 And [f]Zelophehad the son of Hepher had no sons, but daughters: and the names of the daughters of Zelophehad were Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

34 These are the families of Manasseh, and those that were numbered of them, [g]fifty and two thousand[6] and seven hundred.

35 ¶ These are the sons of Ephraim, after their families: of Shuthelah, the family of the Shuthalhites: of [h]Becher, the family of the Bachrites: of Tahan, the family of the Tahanites.

36 And these are the sons of Shuthelah: of Eran, the family of the Eranites.

37 These are the families of the sons of Ephraim, according to those that were numbered of them, [i]thirty and two thousand and five hundred. These are the sons of Joseph, after their families.

38 ¶ The [k]sons of Benjamin, after their families: of Bela, the family of the Belaites: of Ashbel, the family of the Ashbelites: of [l]Ahiram, the family of the Ahiramites:

39 Of [m]Shupham, the family of the Shuphamites: of Hupham, the family of the Huphamites.

40 And the sons of Bela were [n]Ard and Naaman: of Ard, the family of the Ardites: and of Naaman, the family of the Naamites.

41 These are the sons of Benjamin, after their families: and they that were numbered of them were [o]forty and five thousand and six hundred.

42 ¶ These are the sons of Dan, after their families: of [p]Shuham, the family of the Shuhamites. These are the families of Dan, after their families.

43 All the families of the Shuhamites, according to those that were numbered of them, were [q]threescore and four thousand and four hundred.

44 ¶ Of [r]the children of Asher, after their families: of Jimna, the family of the Jimnites: of Jesui, the family of the Jesuites: of Beriah, the family of the Beriites.

45 Of the sons of Beriah: of Heber, the family of the Heberites: of Malchiel, the family of the Malchielites.

46 And the name of the daughter of Asher was [s]Sarah.

47 These are the families of the sons of Asher, according to those that were numbered of them, who were [t]fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

48 ¶ Of [u]the sons of Naphtali, after their families: of Jahzeel, the family of the Jahzeelites: of Guni, the family of the Gunites:

49 Of Jezer, the family of the Jezerites: of [x]Shillem, the family of the Shillemites.

50 These are the families of Naphtali, according to their families: and they that were numbered of them were [y]forty and five thousand and four hundred.

51 These were the numbered of the children of Israel, [z]six hundred thousand, and a thousand seven hundred and thirty.

52 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

53 Unto [a]these the land shall be divided for an inheritance, according to the number of names.

54 To [b]many[7] thou shalt [†]give the more inheritance, and to few thou shalt [‡]give the less inheritance: to every one shall his inheritance be given, according to those that were numbered of him.

55 Notwithstanding the land shall be divided [c]by lot:[8] according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit.

56 According to the lot shall the possession thereof be divided between many and few.

57 ¶ And [d]these are they that were numbered of the Levites, after their families: [e]of Gershon, the family of the Gershonites: of Kohath, the family of the Kohathites: of Merari, the family of the Merarites.

58 These are the families of the Levites: the family of the Libnites, the family of the Hebronites, the family of the Mahlites, the family of the Mushites, the family of the Korathites. And Kohath begat Amram.

59 And the name of Amram's wife was [f]Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt: and she bare unto Amram Aaron and Moses, and Miriam their sister.

60 And [g]unto Aaron was born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

61 And [h]Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange fire before the LORD.

62 And [i]those that were numbered of them were twenty and three thousand, all males, from a month old and upward: for [k]they[9] were not numbered among the children of Israel, [l]because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel.

and would not join, no, not with their own father in rebellion. If we partake not of the sins of sinners, we shall not partake of their plagues. These sons of Korah were afterward eminently serviceable to the church, being employed by David as singers in the house of the Lord; hence many Psalms are said to be for "the sons of Korah;" and perhaps they were made to bear his name so long after, rather than the name of any other of their ancestors, for warning to themselves, and as an instance of the power of God, which brought those choice fruits even out of that bitter root. The children of families that have been stigmatized, should endeavour by eminent virtues to roll away the reproach of their fathers.

DIVISION OF THE LAND.—If any ask why such a particular account is kept of the tribes and families, and numbers, of the people of Israel, here is an answer for them; as they were multiplied, so they were portioned, not by common providence, but by promise; and for the support of the honour of divine revelation, God will have the fulfilling of the promise taken notice of both in their increase and in their inheritance. When Moses had numbered the people, God does not say "By these shall the land be conquered;" but, taking that for granted, he tells him, "Unto these shall the land be divided." These that are now registered as the sons of Israel, shall be admitted (as it were by copy of court-roll) heirs of the land of Canaan. Now, in the distributing, or quartering, of these tribes, 1. The general rule of equity is here prescribed to Moses, that to many he should give more, and to few he should give less, ver. 54; yet, alas! he was so far from giving any to others, that he must not have any himself; but this direction given to him was intended for Joshua, his successor. 2. The application of this general rule was to be determined "by lot," ver. 55, notwithstanding it seems thus to be left to the prudence of their prince; yet the matter must be finally reserved to the providence of their God, in which they must all acquiesce, how much soever it contradicted their policies, or inclinations. "According to the lot shall the possession be divided." As the God of nations, so the God of Israel in particular, reserves it to himself "to appoint the bounds of our habitation." And thus Christ, our Joshua, when he was urged to appoint one of his disciples "to his right hand," and another "to his left," in his kingdom, acknowledged the sovereignty of his Father in the disposal; "It is not mine to give." Joshua must not dispose of inheritances in Canaan, according to his own mind; "but it shall be given to them, for whom it is prepared of my Father."

FULFILMENT OF THE CURSE.—That which is observable in this conclusion of the account is, the execution of the sentence passed upon the murmurers, chap. xiv. 29. That not one of those who "were numbered from twenty years old and upward," (and that the Levites were not, but either from a month old, or from thirty years old to fifty,) should enter Canaan, except Caleb and Joshua. In the muster now made, particular directions, no doubt, were given to those of each tribe that were employed in taking the account, to compare these rolls with the former, and to observe whether there were any now left of those that were numbered at mount Sinai, and it appeared that there was not one man numbered now, that was numbered then, but Caleb and Joshua, ver. 64, 65. Herein appeared, 1. The righteousness of God, and his faithfulness to his threatenings, when once the "decree is gone forth." He "sware in his wrath," and what he had sworn he performed. Better all those carcases, had they been ten times as many, should fall to the ground, than the word of God. Though the rising generation was mixed with them, and many of the guilty and condemned criminals long survived the sentence, even to the last year of the forty, yet they were cut off by some means or other before this muster was made: those whom God has condemned, cannot escape, either by losing themselves in a crowd, or by the delay of execution. 2. The good news of God to this people, notwithstanding their provocations; though that murmuring race was cut off, yet God raised up another generation which was as numerous as they, that though they perished, yet the name of Israel might not be cut off, lest the inheritance of the promise should be lost for want of heirs. And though the number fell a little short of what it was at mount Sinai, yet those now numbered had this advantage, that they were all middle-aged men, between twenty and sixty, in the prime of their time for service; and during the thirty-eight years of their wandering and wasting in the wilderness, they had an opportunity of acquainting themselves with the laws and ordinances of God, having no business, civil or military, to divert them from those sacred studies: and having Moses and Aaron to instruct them, and God's good Spirit, Neh. ix. 20. 3. The truth of God, in performing his promise made to Caleb and Joshua. They were to be preserved from falling in this common ruin, and they were so. The arrows of death, though they fly in the dark, do not fly at random, even when they fly thickest, but are directed to the mark intended, and no other. All that are written among the living, shall have their lives given them for a prey, in the most dangerous times. Thousands may fall on their right hand, and ten thousand on their left, but they shall escape.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Death is continually making awful havoc of the human species, and causing surprising revolutions in families and nations; yet all is appointed in perfect wisdom, justice, and truth. This should excite us to meditate upon the odious nature and destructive tendency of sin, the deserving cause of all these devastations; and to take occasion to renew repentance, to seek forgiveness, to value the salvation of Christ; to remember how frail we are, to prepare for the approaching summons, and to fill up our remaining days in "serving our generation according to the will of God."

4 Why [f]should the name of our father be [g]done away from among his family, because he hath no son? [h]Give unto us therefore a possession among the brethren of our father.

5 And [h]Moses brought their cause before the LORD.

6 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

7 The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: [i]thou shalt surely give them[3] a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them.

8 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter.

9 And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren.

10 And if he have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his father's brethren.

11 And if his father have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his [k]kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it: and it shall be unto the children of Israel [l]a statute of judgment; as the LORD commanded Moses.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Get thee up into this [m]mount Abarim,[4] and see the land which I have given unto the children of Israel.

17 Which may [t]go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the LORD be not [u]as sheep which have no shepherd.

18 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [x]Take thee Joshua [y]the son of Nun, a man in whom is the Spirit,[5] and [z]lay thine hand[6] upon him;

19 And set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation; and [a]give him a charge in their sight.

20 And thou shalt [b]put some of thine honour[7] upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel [c]may be obedient.

21 And [d]he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of [e]Urim before the LORD: [f]at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation.

22 And Moses did as the LORD commanded him: and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation.

23 And he laid his hands upon him, and [g]gave him a charge; as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

Then death will be disarmed of his sting, become our friend, and convey us to heaven, when our appointed period on earth is finished.—But unrepented sin arms death with unutterable horrors; and lasting infamy, perhaps in this world, and everlasting shame, contempt, and misery, will be the doom of those who are "driven away in their wickedness;" however famous and renowned they were among their ill-judging fellow-sinners. —While the Lord punishes the iniquity of the fathers upon their unbelieving posterity, he preserves those who do not imitate their parents in sin, from sharing their punishment: and the infamy of the father only makes the piety and usefulness of the son more noticed.—The word of God will be surely performed; and the eye of the Lord can discern, and his arm can reach, every sinner in the midst of surrounding multitudes: yet respites gave space and opportunity for repentance. The promises likewise are irrevocable, and they who follow the Lord fully shall certainly at length have the comfort of it. —In all our different situations in life, let us submit to the sovereignty, admire the equity and wisdom, and be thankful for the goodness, of the Lord; and desire above all things an inheritance in the heavenly Canaan.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. HEIRESSES—DAUGHTERS OF ZELOPHEHAD.—This case, in reference to the descent of property, was determined by the divine oracle. Moses did not presume to give judgment himself, because, though their pretensions seemed just and reasonable yet his express orders were to divide the land among those that were numbered, which were the males only; he therefore "brings their cause before the Lord," and waits for his decision, ver. 5, and God himself gives judgment upon it. He takes cognizance of the affairs, not only of nations, but of private families, and orders them in judgment, according to the counsel of his own will. 1. The petition is granted, ver. 7. "They speak right, give them a possession." Those that seek an inheritance in the land of promise, shall have what they seek for, and "other things shall be added to them." Those are claims which God will countenance and crown. 2. The point is settled for all future occasions. These daughters of Zelophehad consulted, not only their own comfort, and the credit of their family, but the honour and happiness of their sex likewise, for on this particular occasion a general law was made, that in case a man had no son, his estate should go to his daughters, ver. 8. Not to the eldest, as the eldest son, but to them all in copartnership, share and share alike. Those that in such a case deprive their daughters of their right, purely to keep up the name of their family, unless a valuable consideration be allowed them, may make the entail of their lands surer than the entail of a blessing with them. Further directions are given for the disposal of inheritances, ver. 9—11. That if a man have no issue at all, his estate shall go to his brethren; if no brethren, then to his father's brethren; and if there be no such, then to his next kinsman; with this the rules of our law exactly agree: and though the Jewish doctors here will have it understood, that if a man have no children, his estate shall go to his father, if living, before his brethren, yet there is nothing of that in the law, and our common law has an express rule against it; That an estate cannot ascend lineally; so that if a son purchase lands in fee-simple, and die without issue in the lifetime of his father, his father cannot be his heir. See how "God makes heirs," and in his disposal we must acquiesce.

MOSES WARNED OF HIS APPROACHING DECEASE.—1. Moses must die, but he shall first have the satisfaction of seeing the land of promise, ver. 12. God did not intend with this sight of Canaan to tantalize him, or upbraid him with his folly in doing that which cut him short of it, nor had it any impression of that kind upon him, but God appointed it, and Moses accepted it as a favour; his sight (we have reason to think) being wonderfully strengthened and enlarged to take such a full and distinct view of it as did abundantly gratify his innocent curiosity. This sight of Canaan signified his believing prospect of the better country, that is, the heavenly, which is very comfortable to dying saints. 2. Moses must die, but death does not "cut him off, it only gathers him to his people," brings him to rest with the holy patriarchs that were gone before him; Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, were "his people," the people of his choice and love, and to them death gathered him. 3. Moses must die, but only as Aaron died before him, ver. 13. And Moses had seen how easily and cheerfully Aaron had put off the priesthood first, and then the body: let not Moses therefore be afraid of dying, it was but to be "gathered to his people," as Aaron was gathered. Thus the death of our near and dear relations should be improved by us, (1.) As an engagement to us to think often of dying: we are not better than our fathers or brethren; if they are gone, we are going; if they are gathered already, we must be gathered very shortly. (2.) As an encouragement to us to think of death without terror, and even to please ourselves with the thoughts of it; it is but to die as such and such died, if we live as they lived; and their "end was peace, they finished their course with joy."—Henry.

CHAP. XXVIII. REPETITION OF THE LAWS OF SACRIFICE.—These laws are here given afresh, not because the observance of them was wholly disused during the thirty-eight years' wandering in the wilderness, we cannot think that they were so long without any public worship, but that at least the daily lamb was offered morning and evening, and doubled on the Sabbath-day; so Bishop Patrick conjectures; but that many of the sacrifices were then omitted, is plainly intimated, Amos v. 25, quoted by Stephen, Acts for my sacrifices made by fire, [b]for a *sweet savour unto me, shall ye observe to offer unto me [c]in their due season.

3 ¶ And thou shalt say unto them, This is the offering made by fire which ye shall offer unto the LORD; [d]two lambs of the first year without spot, [†]day by day, for a continual burnt-offering.

4 The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, [e]and the other lamb shalt thou offer [‡]at even;

5 And [f]a tenth part of an ephah of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

6 It is [g]a continual burnt-offering, which [h]was ordained in mount Sinai for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the LORD.

7 And the drink-offering thereof shall be the fourth part of an hin for the one lamb: in the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine [i]to be poured unto the LORD for a drink-offering.

8 And the other lamb shalt thou offer at even: as the meat-offering of the morning, and as the drink-offering thereof, thou shalt offer it, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

9 ¶ And on the [k]sabbath-day two lambs of the first year without spot, and two tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, and the drink-offering thereof.

10 This is [l]the burnt-offering of every sabbath, beside [m]the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

11 ¶ And [n]in the beginnings of your months ye shall offer a burnt-offering unto the LORD; [o]two young bullocks, and one ram, seven lambs of the first year without spot:

12 And [p]three tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one bullock; and two tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one ram;

13 And a several tenth-deal of flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering unto one lamb, [q]for a burnt-offering of a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the LORD.

14 And their drink-offerings shall be half an hin of wine unto a bullock, and the third part of an hin unto a ram, and a fourth part of an hin unto a lamb: this is the burnt-offering of every month throughout the months of the year.

15 And [r]one kid of the goats for a sin-offering unto the LORD[1] shall be offered, [s]beside the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

16 ¶ And in [t]the fourteenth day of the first month is the passover of the LORD.

17 And in [u]the fifteenth day of this month is the feast: seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten.

A goat being appointed to be offered at two other solemnities, and to be offered for a sin-offering (ver. 22,30), it is not upon those occasions said "unto the Lord," though certainly intended, because there was no danger at those times of the people directing their sacrifices to a wrong object, as at the time of the new moons, when the heathen offered a goat to the moon, it being a creature whose horns are like the new moon. —GROTIUS.

vii. 42, "Did ye offer unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?" It is implied, "No ye did not." But whether the course of sacrifices had been interrupted or no, God saw fit now to repeat the law of sacrifices; 1. Because this was a new generation of men, that were most of them unborn when the former laws were given; therefore, that they might be left without excuse, they have not only these laws written, to be read to them, but again repeated from God himself, and put into a less compass and a plainer method. 2. Because they were now entering upon war, and might be tempted to think that while they were engaged in that, they should be excused from offering sacrifices; inter arma silent leges—law is but little regarded amidst the clash of arms. No, says God, "my bread for my sacrifices" even now "shall ye observe to offer," and that in their due season. They were then concerned to keep their peace with God, when they were at war with their enemies. In the wilderness they were solitary, and quite separate from all other people, and therefore there they needed not so much their distinguishing badges, nor would their omission of sacrifices be so scandalous, as when they came into Canaan, when they were mingled with other people. 3. Because possession was now to be given them of the land of promise, that land flowing with "milk and honey," where they would have plenty of all good things; "Now," says God, "when you are feasting yourselves, forget not to offer the bread of your God."

NEW MOONS AND SABBATHS.—The new moons and the Sabbaths are often spoken of together, as great solemnities of the Jewish church, very comfortable to the saints then, and typical of gospel grace. Now we have here the sacrifices appointed. 1. For the Sabbaths. Every Sabbath-day the offering must be doubled; beside the two lambs offered for the daily burnt-offering, there must be two more offered, one (it is probable) added to the morning sacrifice, and the other to the evening, ver. 9, 10. This teaches us to double our devotions on Sabbath-days, for so the duty of the day requires. The Sabbath-rest is to be observed, in order to a more close application to the Sabbath-work, which ought to fill up a Sabbath-time. In Ezekiel's temple service, which points at gospel times, the Sabbath offerings were to be six lambs and a ram, with their meat-offerings and drink-offerings, Ezek. xlvi. 4, 5, to intimate not only the continuance, but the advancement, of Sabbath sanctification in the days of the Messiah. This is "burnt offering of the Sabbath, in his Sabbath," so it is in the original, ver. 10. We must do every Sabbath-day's work in its day, studying to redeem every minute of Sabbath time, as those that believe it precious; and not thinking to put off one Sabbath's work to another, for sufficient to every Sabbath is the service thereof. 2. For the new moons. Some suggest, that as the Sabbath was kept with an eye to the creation of the world, so the new moons were sanctified with an eye to the divine providence, which "appoints the moon for seasons," guiding the revolutions of time by its changes, and governing sublunary bodies (as many think) by its influences; though we observe not any feast "of new moons," yet we must not forget to give God the glory of all the precious things put forth by the moon, which he has "established for ever, a faithful witness in heaven," Ps. lxxxix. 37. The offerings in the new moons were very considerable, two bullocks, a ram, and seven lambs, with the meat-offerings and drink-offerings that were to attend them, ver. 11, &c., beside a sin-offering, ver. 15. For when we give glory to God by confessing his mercies, we must give glory to him likwise by confessing our own sins.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We are again reminded of the perpetual efficacy of the one sacrifice of Christ, and of our continual need of it; and also of the constancy with which the Christian should wait upon God in his ordinances, both as means of deriving grace from the fulness of Christ, and of rendering to the Lord the glory due unto him, as our Creator, our providential benefactor, and the God of our salvation. These subjects, indeed, are not new to us, yet they may stir up our minds by a salutary repetition.—No hurrying employments, or perilous situations, or prosperous circumstances, should induce slackness in religious exercises; nay, they should excite greater diligence in seeking help from the Lord, or in giving thanks to him. And when young persons are about to settle in life, and remove to habitations of their own, it is peculiarly the duty of ministers, parents, and pious friends, to admonish them from the first to establish the worship of God in their families; which will prevent subsequent trouble, and bring a blessing upon them, and all that they uprightly engage in. Every day should at least begin and end with prayer and praise: Sabbaths call for a double measure of personal and family religion; and seasons of peculiar humiliation for sin, of seeking any special blessing, of solemn self-examination previous to approaching the Lord's table, or of remembering signal mercies received, require time still more entirely set apart for such purposes. But we must take care that one duty does not preclude another; and that all be accompanied with the exercise of repentance, faith, and love to the Lord Jesus; and with righteousness and true holiness in our whole conduct: otherwise God will abhor our most solemn services and abundant devotions.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIX. SACRED DAYS IN THE SEVENTH MONTH, AND THEIR SACRIFICES.—1. The "blowing of the trumpets" was appointed, Lev. xxiii. 24. Here they are directed what sacrifices to offer on that day, of which there was not then any mention made. Note, Those who would know the mind of God in the Scripture, must compare one part of the Scripture with another, and put those parts together that have reference to the same thing, for the latter discoveries of divine light explain what was dark, and supply what was defective in the former, "that the man of God may be perfect." The sacrifices then to be offered are particularly ordered here, ver. 2—6, and care taken that these should not supersede the daily oblation, and that of the new-moon. It is hereby intimated that we must not seek occasions to abate our zeal in God's service, or be glad of an excuse to omit a good duty, but rather rejoice in an opportunity of accumulating and doing more than ordinary in religion. If we perform family worship, we must not think that that will excuse us from our secret devotions; nor that on the days we go to church, we need not worship God alone, and with our families; but we should "always abound in the work of the Lord." 2. The "day of atonement." Beside all the services of that day which we had the institution of, Lev. xvi. and which, one would think, required trouble and charge enough; here are "burnt-offerings" ordered to be offered, ver. 8—10. For in our faith and repentance, those two great gospel graces which were signified by that day's performances, we must have an eye to the glory and honour of God, which was purely intended in the burnt-offerings; there was likewise to be a "kid of the goats for a sin-offering, besides the great sin-offering of atonement," ver. 11, which intimates that there are so many defects and faults, even in the exercises and expressions of our repentance, that we have need of an interest in a sacrifice to expiate the guilt even of that part of our holy things. Though we must not repent that we have repented, yet we must repent that we have not repented better. It likewise bespoke the imperfection of the legal sacrifices, and their insufficiency to take away sin, that on the very day the "sin-offering of atonement" was offered, yet there must be another sin-offering. But "what the law could not do in that it was weak," that Christ has done.

FEAST OF TABERNACLES.—Soon after the day of atonement, that day in which men were to afflict their souls, followed the feast of the tabernacles, in which they were to rejoice before the Lord; for they that "sow in tears," shall soon "reap in joy." 1. All the days of their dwelling in booths, they must offer sacrifices; while we are here in a tabernacle-state, it is our interest as well as duty constantly to keep up communion with God: nor will the unsettledness of our outward condition excuse us in our neglect of the duties of God's worship. 2. The sacrifices for each of the seven days, though differing in nothing but the number of the bullocks, are severally and particularly appointed, which yet is no vain repetition. 3. The number of the bullocks (which were the most costly part of the sacrifice) decreased every day. On the first day of the feast they were to offer thirteen, on the second day, but twelve, on the third day, eleven, &c., so that on the seventh day they offered seven. And the last day, though it was the great day of the feast, and celebrated with a holy convocation, yet they were to offer but one bullock; and whereas on all the other days they offered two rams, and fourteen lambs, on this, but one ram and seven lambs. Such was the will of the Law-maker, and that is reason enough for the law. Some suggest, that God herein considered the infirmity of the flesh, which is apt to grudge the charge and expense of religion; it is therefore ordered to grow less and less, that they might not complain as if God had "made them to serve with an offering," Isa. xliii. 23. Or, it is hereby intimated to them, that the legal dispensation should wax old, and vanish away at last; and the multitude of their sacrifices should end in one great sacrifice, infinitely more worthy than all of them. It was on the last day of the feast, after all these sacrifices had been offered, that our Lord Jesus stood and cried to those who still "thirsted after righteousness," (being sensible of the insufficiency of these sacrifices to justify them,) "to come unto him and drink," John vii. 37. 4. Every day there must be a sin-offering presented, as we observed in other feasts. Our burnt-offerings of praise cannot be accepted of God, unless we have an interest in the great sacrifice of propitiation which Christ offered, when for us he made himself a Sin-offering. 5. Even when all these sacrifices were offered, yet the continual burnt-offering must not be omitted either morning or evening, but each day that must be offered, first in the morning, and last in the evening. No extraordinary services should justle out our stated devotions.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—If we would well understand the Scriptures, we must bestow pains in comparing one part with another; for the Lord seems to have arranged them purposely to exercise our diligence, and to distinguish those who value the knowledge of the truth from such as do not. Prov. ii. 1—9.—We are here again reminded that the trumpet of the gospel, even the glad tidings of salvation, calls us to mourn for sin, and to receive the atonement, before we can truly rejoice in the Lord; and to be strangers and pilgrims upon earth, constantly bringing our "spiritual sacrifices, which are, through Christ Jesus, to the praise and glory of God." The more consolation we receive, the more abundant and unwearied should we be in serving him; and a spiritual mind will be refreshed and recreated by the ordinances of God, after the fatigue of worldly care and labour, more than any carnal person can be with festivity and dissipation. The spiritually-minded, therefore, will value leisure, and opportunity of attending at the courts of God, as a privilege, while the carnal seek for excuses; they will not suppose that public ordinances render secret devotion unnecessary, or that the prayers of the minister supersede the necessity of their own; much less will they imagine that the merits and sacrifice of Christ, for them, render their personal obedience and good works unnecessary.—Every thing reminds us of our sinfulness; our very repentance and faith in Christ, being imperfect, need forgiveness through him; and whether we mourn for sin, or rejoice in

AND Moses spake unto [a]the heads of the tribes concerning the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded.

2 If a man [b]vow a vow unto the LORD, or [c]swear an oath [1][d]to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not *break his word, [e]he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

3 ¶ If a woman also vow a vow unto the LORD, and bind herself by a bond, being in her father's house in her youth;

4 And her father hear her vow, and her [f]bond wherewith she hath bound her soul, and her father shall hold his peace at her; then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand.

5 But if [g]her father disallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows, or of her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand; and the LORD shall forgive her, because her father disallowed her.

6 ¶ And if she had at all an husband when [t]she vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith she bound her soul;

7 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it; then her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

8 But if [h]her husband disallowed her on the day that he heard it; then he shall make her vow which she vowed, and that which she uttered with her lips, wherewith she bound her soul, of none effect; and the LORD shall forgive her.

9 ¶ But every vow of [1]a widow, and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their souls, shall stand against her.

10 And if she vowed in her husband's house, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath;

11 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and disallowed her not: then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

12 But if her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them; then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and the LORD shall forgive her.

13 Every vow, [k]and every binding oath [1]to afflict [2]the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void.[3]

14 But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he establisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her: he confirmeth them, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard them.

15 But if he shall any wise make them void after that he hath heard them; then [m]he shall bear her iniquity.

16 These [n]are the statutes which the LORD commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between the father and his daughter, being yet in her youth in her father's house.

[7] It appears by this account, that there were every year sacrificed at the tabernacle (and temple), at the stated national charge, the following numbers of beasts, namely:—
1101 lambs,
132 bullocks,
72 rams,
21 kids,
2 goats.
These made up the morning and evening sacrifices. Besides these, were a vast number of "voluntary, vow, and trespass-sacrifices," which, if it were possible to state them, would swell the account to a much greater degree.—PYLE.

Moses very well expresses it by "binding our souls with a bond," intimating, that he who swears lays the strongest obligation upon himself, and puts his soul in pawn for the truth of what he says. And this obligation no man can violate, but at the utmost peril of the judgment and vengeance of God. —TILLOTSON.

the Lord, and praise him for his mercies, "the life that we live in the flesh must be by the faith of the Son of God;" until at the close we go to be with him, behold his glory, and extol his mercy, "who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood;" "to whom be honour and glory for ever. Amen."—Scott.

CHAP. XXX. Vows.—The case supposed is, that a person vows a vow unto the Lord, making God a party to the promise, and designing his honour and glory in it. The matter of the vow is supposed to be something lawful: no man can be by his own promise bound to do that which he is already by the divine precept prohibited to do. Yet it is supposed to be something, which, in such and such measures and degrees, was not a necessary duty antecedent to the vow. A person might vow to bring such and such sacrifices at certain times; to give such a sum, or such a proportion, in alms; to forbear such meats and drinks, which the law allowed; to fast and afflict the soul (which is specified, ver. 13,) at other times beside the day of atonement. And many similar vows might be made, either in an extraordinary heat of holy zeal, or in humiliation for some sin committed, or for the prevention of sin, in pursuit of some mercy desired, or in gratitude for some mercy received. It is of great use to make such vows as these, provided they be made in sincerity and with due caution. Vows (say the Jewish doctors) are "the hedge of separation," that is, a fence to religion. He that vows, is here said to "bind his soul with a bond." It is a vow to God, who is a Spirit, and to him the soul, with all its powers, must be bound. A promise to man is a bond upon his estate, but a promise to God is a bond upon the soul. Our sacramental vows, by which we are bound to no more than what was before our duty, and which neither father nor husband can disannul, are bonds upon the soul, and by them we must feel ourselves bound out from all sin, and bound up to the whole will of God. Our occasional vows concerning that which before was "in our own power," Acts v. 4, when they are made, "are bonds upon the soul" likewise.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We cannot too strictly engage ourselves to be the Lord's, and in all things to live to his glory: but we may inconsiderately vow things impracticable, inexpedient, not within our own choice, or not consistent with relative duties. The [illegible] comfort, and true interest of families, and the exercise of the parental and con[illegible]ority, are of such consequence to communities and to religion, that the Lord [illegible]ages with a solemn vow, than authorize any thing that is inconsistent [illegible] Let parents therefore should all persons, especially [illegible] in inferior rela[illegible] children! and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and yet man's natural compassion recoils from the consideration of the slaughter which they made: as indeed the execution of justice is never intended to gratify the finer feelings of benevolence, but to excite dread and horror. Hence we may draw a very forcible argument, that the consequence of "the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God," will by no means accord to those rules which men, ignorant of the evil of sin and proud of their own benevolence, have devised for him; and which they would wrest the Scriptures to countenance, though evidently contrary to the constant tenor of them. If they cannot reconcile, with their own ideas of justice and goodness, the severities inflicted upon the Midianites and Canaanites, by the command of a just and good God, let them allow that they are incompetent to determine what conduct becomes the Judge of the world; and that it is more safe, wise, and humble, simply to believe his testimony, and "to flee from the wrath to come," leaving the government of the universe to him; than rashly to dispute about things which are evidently out of their province, and of which they know nothing further than the Lord is pleased to inform them. Death in every case is the wages of sin, and all diseases fulfil the counsels of God: why then may he not employ the sword of a warrior, as well as a fever, in depriving sinners of their forfeited life? Or why should it be unjust or cruel in Moses or Joshua to obey the command of God in this respect, and yet righteous and holy in an angel to obey a similar command; as when the angel slew 185,000 men of Sennacherib's vast army? Moses had beheld with grief and indignation the temptation, the sin, and the punishment of Israel; and in witnessing the success of this war, just before his death, he saw a specimen of the Lord's vengeance on the enemies of Israel, and of his kindness to his people. The Midianites had been most criminal, and therefore at the present the vengeance was restricted to them.—Scott.

SUCCESS OF THE EXPEDITION AND DEATH OF BALAAM.—"They warred against the Midianites." It is very probable, they first published their manifesto, showing the reasons of the war, and requiring them to give up the ringleaders of the mischief to justice; for such afterward was the law, Deut. xx. 10, and such the practice, Judg. xx. 12, 13. But the Midianites justifying what they had done, and standing by those that had done it, the Israelites attacked them with fire and sword, and all the pious fury which their zeal for God and their people inspired them with. The execution (the military execution) they did in this descent. 1. They "slew all the males," ver. 7, that is, all they met with as far as they went; they put them all to the sword, and gave no quarter. But that they did not slay "all the males" of the nation, is certain, for we find the Midianites a powerful and formidable enemy to Israel in the days of Gideon; and they were the Midianites of this country, for they are reckoned with the "children of the east," Judg. vi. 3. 2. They "slew the kings of Midian," the same that are called "elders of Midian," chap. xxii. 4, and "dukes of Sihon," Josh. xiii. 21. Five of these princes are here named, one of which is Zur, probably the same Zur whose daughter Cozbi was, chap. xxv. 15. 3. They slew Balaam. Many conjectures there are, what brought Balaam among the Midianites at this time; it is probable, the Midianites having intelligence of the march of this army of Israelites among them, hired Balaam to come and assist them with his enchantments; that if he could not prevail to act offensively in their favour, by cursing the armies of Israel, yet he might act defensively, by blessing the country of Midian. Whatever was the occasion of his being there, God's overruling providence brought him thither, and there his just vengeance found him. Had he himself believed what he said of the happy state of Israel, he would not have herded himself thus with the enemies of Israel, but justly does he "die the death of the wicked," (though he pretended to desire that of the righteous,) and go "down slain to the pit with the uncircumcised," who rebelled thus against the convictions of his own conscience. The Midianites' wiles were Balaam's projects, it was therefore just that he should perish with them, Hos. iv. 5. Now was his folly made manifest to all men, who foretold the fate of others, but foresaw not his own.—Henry.

RETRIBUTION.—This war was the execution of a righteous sentence upon a guilty nation, in which the women were the principal criminals; and perhaps particular instructions had been given on this head: therefore Moses was angry, when he found that the women had been spared. If those concerned in the detestable project of Balaam had been preserved as captives, they would have been a constant temptation to the people; and they could not be known from the rest except by miracle. Orders were therefore given to put all the women to death, and the male children; and only to spare the female children, who could not be supposed to have been culpable; and who, being brought up among the Israelites, would not tempt them to idolatry. It has been groundlessly asserted that Moses authorized the Israelites to make concubines of the whole number of female children, or even promiscuously to debauch them; and a formidable objection against his writings has been grounded on this strange supposition. But the whole tenor of the law, and especially a statute hereafter to be considered, proves the contrary. They were merely permitted to possess them as female slaves; while all the laws concerning marriage and concubinage, and against fornication and whoredom, were in full force, in this as well as in other cases.—But what shall we say of the destruction of all the male infants, who could not be personally guilty in this matter? If the Lord commanded it, in this and many other [illegible] did not the [illegible] do right?

NOW [c]the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, had a very great multitude of cattle: and when they saw the land of [b]Jazer, and the land of Gilead, that, behold, [c]the place was a place for cattle;
2 The children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, came and spake unto Moses, and to Eleazar the priest, and unto the princes of the congregation, saying,
3 [d]Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and [e]Nimrah, and [f]Heshbon, and Elealeh, and [g]Shebam, and Nebo, and [h]Beon,
4 Even [i]the country which the LORD smote before the congregation of Israel, is a land for cattle, and thy servants have cattle:
5 Wherefore, said they, [k]if we have found grace in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession, and [l]bring us not over Jordan.
6 ¶ And Moses said unto the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and [m]shall ye sit here:
7 And [n]wherefore [*]discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the LORD hath given them?
8 Thus did your fathers, [o]when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to see the land.
9 For when they went up unto [p]the valley of Eshcol, and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the LORD had given them.
10 And [q]the LORD's anger was kindled the same time, and he sware, saying,
11 Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, [r]from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, because they have not [†]wholly followed me;
12 Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite, and Joshua the son of Nun: [s]for they have wholly followed the LORD.
13 And the LORD's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made them [t]wander in the wilderness forty years, [u]until all the generation, that had done evil in the sight of the LORD, was consumed.
14 And, behold, ye are risen up in your fathers' stead, [x]an increase of sinful men,[1] [y]to augment yet the fierce anger of the LORD toward Israel.
15 For [z]if ye turn away from after him, [a]he will yet again leave them in the wilderness; and [b]ye shall destroy all this people.
16 ¶ And they came near unto him, and said, [c]We will build sheep-folds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones;
17 But [d]we ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place: and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities, because of the inhabitants of the land.
18 We [e]will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance:
19 For [f]we will not inherit with them on yonder side Jordan, or forward; [g]because our inheritance is fallen to us [h]on this side Jordan eastward.

their parents on Israel: and the example was thus rendered more tremendous, warning parents not to imitate the guilt of the Midianites, lest they should involve their beloved offspring in destruction. The Scripture addresses men's natural affection by promises and threatenings, in which their children also are included; and in a future state the Lord may, for what we know, turn the temporal sufferings of children into an infinite mercy to them.—It should also be remembered that children are constantly involved in the desolations occasioned by famines, pestilences, and earthquakes.—Scott.

GRATITUDE.—Here is a great example of piety and devotion in the officers of the army; the colonels, that are called "captains of thousands," and the inferior officers that were "captains of hundreds;" they came to Moses as their general and commander-in-chief. Observe in their address to him, 1. The pious notice they take of God's wonderful goodness to them in this late expedition, in preserving not only their own lives but the lives of all the men of war that they had under their charge; so that, upon the review of their muster-roll, it appeared that there was not one missing, ver. 49. This was very extraordinary, and perhaps cannot be paralleled in any history. So many thousand lives jeoparded in the high places of the field, and not one lost, either by the sword of the enemy, or by any disease or disaster. This was "the Lord's doing," and cannot but be "marvellous in the eyes" of those that consider how the lives of all men, especially soldiers, are "continually in their hands." 2. The pious acknowledgment they made for this favour, ver. 50, "Therefore we have brought an oblation to the Lord." The oblation they brought was out of that which "every man had gotten," and it was gotten honestly by a divine warrant. As to this oblation, the captains offered it to "make an atonement for their souls," ver. 50. Instead of coming to Moses to demand a recompense for the good service they had done in "avenging the Lord of Midian," or to set up trophies of their victory; for the immortalizing of their own names, they bring an oblation to "make atonement for their souls," being conscious to themselves, as the best men must be even in their best services, that they had been defective in their duty, not only in that instance for which they were reproved, ver. 14, but in many others; "for there is not a just man upon earth that doeth good, and sinneth not."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—"The triumphing of the wicked is short." The pleasures and advantages of sin are bought at an enormous price, and the vengeance of the Lord is sure, and sometimes speedy and sudden.—"It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," and if his temporal judgments be so dreadful, what shall the wrath of eternity be, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power? 2 Thes. i. 8, 9. "Flee from the wrath to come," to that Saviour who alone is able to deliver us: and, depending on his assistance, let us declare war against every corrupt passion, by which we have been induced to dishonour God, and bring guilt and misery upon ourselves.—This is indeed a "holy war," in which we must utterly destroy every one of the enemies of our souls, or they will certainly ruin us: to this the trumpet of the gospel calls and encourages us; and in it we may depend upon the Lord for counsel and assistance.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXII.—It must be confessed that, prima facie—at first sight, the thing looked ill, especially the closing words of the petition of the tribes of Reuben and Gad, ver. 5, "Bring us not over Jordan." 1. It seemed to proceed from a bad principle; a contempt of the land of promise, which Moses himself was so desirous of a sight of: a distrust, too, of the power of God to dispossess the Canaanites; as if a lot in a land which they knew, and which was already conquered, was more desirable than a lot in a land they knew not, and which was yet to be conquered; one bird in the hand is worth two in the bush; there seemed also to be covetousness in it; for that which they insisted on was, that it was convenient for their cattle: it argued likewise a neglect of their brethren, as if they cared not what became of Israel, while they themselves were well provided for. 2. It might have been of bad consequence. The people might have taken improper hints from it, and have suggested that they were few enough, when they had their whole number, to deal with the Canaanites; but how unequal would the match be, if they should drop two tribes and a half (above a fifth part of their strength) on this side Jordan. It would likewise be a bad precedent; if they must have the land thus granted them as soon as it was conquered, other tribes might make the same pretensions and claims, and so the regular disposition of the land by lot would be anticipated.—Moses is therefore very warm upon them, which is to be imputed to his pious zeal against sin, and not to any peevishness, the effect of old age, for his meekness abated not, any more than his natural force. (1.) He shows them what he apprehended to be evil in this motion, that it would discourage the heart of their brethren, ver. 6, 7. "What?" (says he, with a holy indignation at their selfishness,) "'shall your brethren go to war,' and expose themselves to all the hardships and hazards of the field, and 'shall you sit here' at your ease? No, do not mistake yourselves, you shall never be indulged by me in this sloth and cowardice." It ill becomes any of God's Israel to sit down unconcerned in the difficult and perilous concernments of their brethren, whether public or personal. (2.) He reminds them of the fatal consequences of the unbelief and faint-heartedness of their fathers, when they were as these here, just ready to enter Canaan. He recites the story very particularly, ver. 8—13, "Those men," whose punishment should be a [illegible]

LORD; then afterward ye shall return, and [l]be guiltless before the LORD, and before Israel; and [m]this land shall be your possession before the LORD.

25 And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, spake unto Moses, saying, Thy servants will do as my lord commandeth.

27 But thy servants will pass over, every man[2] [p]armed for war, before the LORD to battle, [q]as my lord saith.

28 So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel:

29 And Moses said unto them, [r]If the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, will pass with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle, before the LORD, and the land shall be subdued before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession:

30 But if they will not pass over with you armed, [s]they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan.

31 And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, answered, saying, As the LORD hath said unto thy servants, so will we do.

32 We will pass over armed before the LORD into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan may be ours.

33 And [t]Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto [u]half the tribe of Manasseh[3] the son of Joseph, [x]the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, with the cities thereof in the coasts, even the cities of the country round about.

THESE are the journeys of the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt [a]with their armies, [b]under the hand of Moses and Aaron.

2 And Moses wrote their goings out[1] according to their [c]journeys, by the commandment of the LORD: and these are their journeys according to their goings out.

3 And [d]they departed from Rameses [e]in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month: on the morrow after the passover the children of Israel went out [f]with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians.

4 (For the Egyptians [g]buried all their first-born,[2] which the LORD had smitten among them: [h]upon their gods also the LORD executed judgments.)

5 And the children of Israel [i]removed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth.

6 And [k]they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, which is in the edge of the wilderness.

7 And [l]they removed from Etham, and turned again unto Pi-hahiroth, which is before Baal-zephon: and they pitched before Migdol.

8 And [m]they departed from before Pi-hahiroth, and passed through the midst of the sea into the wilderness, and went three days' journey in the wilderness of Etham, and pitched in Marah.

9 And [n]they removed from Marah, and came unto Elim: and in Elim were twelve fountains of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees; and they pitched there.

10 And they removed from [o]Elim, and encamped by the Red sea.

11 And they removed from the Red sea, and encamped in the wilderness of Sin.

12 And they took their journey out of the wilderness of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah.

13 And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Alush.

take heed of sinning after the similitude of their transgression. (3.) He gives them fair warning of the mischief that would be likely to follow upon this separation which they were about to make from the camp of Israel; they would be in danger of bringing wrath upon the whole congregation, and hurrying them all back again into the wilderness, ver. 14, 15. "Ye are risen up in your fathers' stead," to despise the pleasant land, and reject it as they did, when we hoped ye were risen up in their stead to possess it. It was an encouragement to Moses to see what an increase of men they were, but a discouragement to see that they were withal an increase of sinful men, treading in the steps of their fathers' impiety. It is sad when we observe, as too often we may, that the rising generation in families and countries is not only no better, but worse, than that which went before it; and what comes of it? Why, "it augments the fierce anger of the Lord;" not only continues that fire, but increases it, and fills the measure often till it overflows in a deluge of desolation. Note, If men did consider as they ought, what would be the end of sin, they would be afraid of the beginnings of it.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Covetousness, ambition, impatience, or other carnal inducements, influence most men in choosing their worldly settlements; whereas they ought to consider, in the first place, whether they are likely to be convenient for attending on the ordinances of God, and favourable to communion with his people. If, however, Christians are betrayed into such an improper conduct, their iniquity will correct them and they will surely smart for their folly. But men in general, even when called Christians, have not that faith which explores the unseen world, or that spiritual mind which supremely values heavenly blessings. Earthly things suit their carnal minds, and are apprehended by their senses; these they prefer as their portion; but it proves unsatisfactory and vexatious; they are speedily driven out of it, and, having no inheritance beyond the grave, they will eternally bewail their wretched choice, whilst believers eternally rejoice in theirs.—We are utterly inexcusable, if we do not profit by the examples of those, whose sins and punishments are recorded for our warning. Yet so depraved is human nature, that one generation rises up after another, "an increase of sinful men," walking in the steps of those who perished before them, and thus still more and more augmenting the fierce anger of the Lord. Nor does the wickedness of men merely destroy their own souls; for it murders those of others; while their examples, influence, and persuasions, encourage numbers in sin, or discourage them from serving the Lord; and whilst the crimes of professed Christians increase their prejudices or harden their hearts against the gospel. They, however, who are deeply acquainted with the human heart, and have been long conversant with perverse and rebellious people, are sometimes too suspicious. But such suspicions frequently arise from zeal for the honour of God, and love to the souls of men, 2 Cor. xi. 2: and it is generally best to disclose them, and to remonstrate with the suspected persons; for this may either withdraw them from their purpose, or give them an opportunity of explaining themselves. And even when they are faulty in some degree, we should be ready to accept of reasonable excuses, and to accede to equitable proposals: yet with such express conditions and limitations as may supersede occasions of future contention.—It is especially becoming in the people of God to be disinterested and public-spirited: and they cannot consistently account any thing too great to forego, to endure, or to attempt, in opposing the common enemies of the cause, in promoting the salvation of souls, and in securing the heavenly inheritance. If God hath formed us to this disposition, we shall avoid all appearance of evil, act with equity and love, have a sanctified and comfortable use of our worldly possessions, and so pass through things temporal, as not finally to lose the good things which are eternal.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIII. REHEARSAL OF THEIR MARCH.—Ver. 2, "Moses wrote their goings out." When they began this tedious march, God ordered him to keep a journal or diary, and to insert in it all the remarkable occurrences of their way, that it might be a satisfaction to himself in the review, and an instruction to others when it should be published. It may be of good use to private Christians, but especially for those in public stations, to preserve in writing an account of the providences of God concerning them, the constant series of mercies they have experienced, especially those turns and changes which have made some days of their lives more remarkable. Our memories are deceitful, and need this help, that we may "remember all the way which the Lord our God has led us in this wilderness," Deut. viii. 2. 1. Some things are observed here concerning their departure out of Egypt, which they are reminded of upon all occasions, as a work of wonder never to be forgotten. (1.) That they "went forth with their armies," ver. 1, rank and file, as an army with banners. (2.) Under the hand of Moses and Aaron, their guides, overseers, and rulers, under God. (3.) "With a high hand," because God's hand was high that wrought for them, "and in the sight of all the Egyptians," ver. 3. They did not steal away clandestinely, Isa. lii. 12, but in defiance of their enemies, to whom God had made them such a burdensome stone, that they neither could, nor would, nor durst, oppose them. (4.) They went forth while the Egyptians were burying, or at least preparing to bury, their first-born. (5.) To all the plagues of Egypt it is added here, that "on their gods also the Lord executed judgments." Their idols, which they worshipped, it is probable were broken down, as Dagon afterward before the ark; so that they could not consult them about this great affair. To this perhaps there is a reference, Isa. xix. 1. "The idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence." 2. Concerning their travels toward Canaan. Observe, (1.) They were continually upon the remove. When they had pitched a little while in one place, they departed from that to another. Such is our state in this world; we have here no continuing city. (2.) Most of their way lay through a wilderness, uninhabited, untracked, unfurnished even with the necessaries of human life; which magnifies the wisdom and power of God, by whose wonderful conduct and bounty the thousands of Israel not only subsisted for forty years in that desolate place, but came out at least as numerous and vigorous as they went in. At first, they pitched "in the edge of the wilderness," ver. 6, but afterward in the heart of it; by lesser difficulties God prepares his people for greater. We find them in the wilderness of Etham, ver. 8, of Sin, ver. 11, of Sinai, ver. 15. Our removes in this world are but from one wilderness to another. (3.) That they were led to and fro, forward and backward, as in a maze or labyrinth, and yet were all the while under the direction of the pillar of cloud and fire. He led them about, Deut. xxxii. 10, and yet led them the right way, Ps. cvii. 7. The way which God takes in bringing his people to himself is always the best way, though it does not always seem to us the nearest way. (4.) Some events are mentioned in this journal, as their want of water at Rephidim, ver. 14, the death of Aaron, ver. 38, 39, the insult of Arad, ver. 40, and the very name of "Kibroth-hattaavah, the graves of lusts," ver. 16, has a story depending upon it. Thus we ought to keep in mind the providences of God concerning us and our families, us and our land; and the many instances of that divine care which led us and fed us, and kept us, all our days hitherto. Shittim, the place where the people sinned in the matter of Peor, chap. xxv. 1, is here called Abel-shittim; Abel signifies mourning, as Gen. l. 11; and, probably, this place was so called from the mourning of the good people of Israel for that sin, and God's wrath against them for it. It was so great a mourning, that it gave a name to the place.

Num. xx.); sometimes to places of refreshing, as at Elim and Beer (Ex. xv. 27; Num. xxi. 16); sometimes where they had wars, as at Rephidim, Kadesh, Edrehi (Ex. xvii. 8; Num. xxi. 1, 33); sometimes where they had rest, as at Mount Sinai; sometimes they went right forward, as from Sinai to Kadesh-barnea; sometimes they turned backward, as from Kadesh-barnea to the Red sea; sometimes they came to mountains, as Sinai, Shepher, Hor, Gidgad; sometimes to valleys, as Tahath, &c.; sometimes to places of bitterness, as Marah; sometimes of sweetness, as Mithkah.—AINSWORTH.

EXPULSION OF THE CANAANITES.—1. The Hebrews are strictly charged utterly to destroy all the remnants of idolatry; they must not only "drive out the inhabitants of the land," that they might possess their country, but they must deface all their idolatrous pictures and images, and "pull down all their high places," ver. 52. They must not preserve any of them, no not as monuments of antiquity, to gratify the curious, or as ornaments of their houses, or toys for their children to play with, but they must destroy all; both in token of their abhorrence and detestation of idolatry, and to prevent their being tempted to worship those images, and the false gods represented by them, or to worship the God of Israel by such images or representations. 2. They are assured that if they did so, God would by degrees put them in full possession of the land of promise, ver. 53, 54. If they would keep themselves pure from the idols of Canaan, God would enrich them with the wealth of Canaan. Learn not their way, and then fear not their power. 3. They are threatened, that if they spared either the idols or the idolaters, they should be beaten with their own rod, and their sin would certainly be their punishment. (1.) They would foster snakes in their own bosoms, ver. 55. The remnant of the Canaanites, if they made any league with them, though it were but a cessation of arms, would be "pricks in their eyes, and thorns in their sides," that is, they would be on all occasions vexatious to them, insulting them, robbing them, and, to the utmost of their power, making mischief among them. We must expect trouble and affliction from that, whatever it is, which we sinfully indulge; that which we are willing should tempt us, we shall find will vex us. (2.) The righteous God would turn that wheel upon the Israelites, which was to have crushed the Canaanites, ver. 56. "I shall do to you as I thought to do unto them." It was intended that the Canaanites should be dispossessed; but if the Israelites fell in with them, and learned their way, they should be dispossessed, for God's displeasure would justly be greater against them than against the Canaanites themselves. Let us hear this, and fear. If we do not drive sin out, sin will drive us out; if we be not the death of our lusts, our lusts will be the death of our souls.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—It is very useful to record the principal events of our own lives, and of the Lord's dealings with his church: and frequent meditation on these subjects tends to awaken gratitude, to excite repentance and humiliation, and to encourage our faith and hope in God. Few of the periods of our lives can be reflected on, without reminding us of the Lord's goodness, and of our own ingratitude and disobedience: these, like a twofold thread, run entwined together through the whole of our experience, and our unworthiness renders the kindness of God more admirable, while his kindness shows our sins more inexcusable. We could not reasonably wish to pass over again any stages of our pilgrimage, except we could hope, by the grace of God, to shun the sins which we committed, or to embrace those opportunities of glorifying God which before we slipped. But if we are upright in these desires, they shall be graciously accepted: and we may be thankful that we have travelled thus far towards a better country; we may set up our Ebenezer, and praise him who hath helped us hitherto; and we may trust in him to bring us safe to our journey's end. But, whatever be our character and state, every day, week, month, and year, whether prosperous or adverse, carries us forward to our "long home," and conveys the unbeliever nearer to the gates of hell, the believer nearer to the joys of heaven; and not only those days which are marked for some important transaction or event, but those which glide away unnoticed, and are speedily forgotten.—Scott.

ᵇ Josh. xix. 51.

[5] Nothing could be more prudent than this partition of the country by lot, and making Joshua and the high priest superintendents of it; since it was the only plan which could effectually prevent all murmurings and quarrellings among such an obstinate people as the Jews. However, as the lots were to bear a proportion to the size of each tribe and family, it is supposed, from what followed, that every tribe first drew its lot for its own canton; and that, after that, there were proper persons appointed to measure out a quantity of land for each family, according to their size. But whether this distribution was made by this or any other method — whether the subdivisions between the families were conducted by lot or otherwise, it is certain that we do not read of any broils or jealousies that it ever occasioned among them. — STACKHOUSE.

and sixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth; perhaps it did not contain more than half as much ground as England; and yet this is the country which was promised to the father of the faithful, and was the possession of the seed of Israel. This was that little spot of ground in which only, for many ages, "God was known and his name was great," Ps. lxxvi. 1. This was the vineyard of the Lord, the garden enclosed; but as it is with gardens and vineyards, the narrowness of the extent was abundantly compensated by the extraordinary fruitfulness of the soil, otherwise it could not have subsisted so numerous a nation as did inhabit it. See here, then, 1. How little a part of the world God has for himself; though the earth was his, and the fulness thereof, yet few have the knowledge of him, and serve him; but those few are happy, very happy, because fruitful to God. 2. How little of the world God often gives to his own people. They that have their portion in heaven, have reason to be content with a small pittance of this earth; but as here, what is wanting in quantity, is made up in quality; "a little that a righteous man has," having it from the love of God, and with his blessing, is far better and more comfortable, "than the riches of many wicked," Ps. xxxvii. 16. It is observable what the bounds and limits of it were, 1. Canaan was itself a "pleasant land," (so it is called, Dan. viii. 9,) and yet it bordered upon wildernesses and seas, and was surrounded with divers melancholy prospects. Thus the vineyard of the church is compassed on all hands with the desert of this world, which serves as a foil to it, to make it appear the more "beautiful for situation." 2. Many of its borders were its defences, and natural fortifications, to render the accesses of its enemies the more difficult; to intimate to them that the God of nature was their Protector, and with his favour would "compass them as with a shield." 3. The border reached to the "river of Egypt," ver. 5, that the sight of that country which they could look into out of their own, might remind them of their bondage there, and their wonderful deliverance thence. 4. Their border is here made to begin at the "Salt Sea," ver. 3, and there it ends, ver. 12.

COMMISSIONERS TO DIVIDE THE LAND TO THE TRIBES.—God appoints commissioners for the dividing of the land to them. The conquest of it is taken for granted, though as yet there was never a stroke struck toward it: here is no nomination of the generals and commanders in chief that should carry on the war; for they were to get the land in possession, "not by their own sword or bow, but by the power and favour of God;" and so confident must they be of victory and success while God fought for them, that the persons must now be named who should be intrusted with the dividing of the land, that is, who should preside in casting the lots, and determine controversies that might arise, and see that all was done fairly. 2. The principal commissioners, [illegible] of the Hebrews, were Eleazar and Joshua, ver. 17, typifying Christ, who, as Priest [illegible] divides the heavenly Canaan to the spiritual Israel; yet as they were to go by the lot, so Christ acknowledges the disposal must be by the will of the Father, Matt. xx. 23. Compare Eph. i. 11. 2. Beside these, that there might be no suspicion of partiality, a prince of each tribe was called on to inspect this matter, and to see that the tribe he served for, was by no means injured. Public affairs should be so managed, as not only to give their right to all, but, if possible, to give satisfaction to all that they have right done them. It is a happiness to a land, to have the princes of their people meet together, some out of every tribe, to concert the affairs that are of common concern; a constitution, which is the abundant honour, ease, and safety of the nation that is blessed with it. Some observe, that the order of the tribes here very much differs from that in which they had hitherto, upon all occasions, been named, and agrees with the neighbourhood of their lots in the division of the land. Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin, the three first here named, lay close together; the inheritance of Dan lay next them on one side; that of Ephraim and Manasseh on another side; Zebulun and Issachar lay abreast more northerly; and lastly, Ashur and Naphtali most northward of all, as is easy to observe in looking over a map of Canaan; this (says Bishop Patrick) is an evidence that Moses was guided by a divine Spirit in his writings. Known unto God are all his works beforehand, and what is new and surprising to us, he perfectly foresaw, without any confusion or uncertainty.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXV. CITIES OF REFUGE.—In order to express the greater abhorrence of murder, and to provide the more effectually for the punishment of the murderer, the prosecution and execution, by ancient custom, devolved upon the nearest relation, or next heir, or "the redeemer;" (so the word rendered avenger signifies;) the very person to whom the right of redemption belonged; who in notorious cases might pursue the criminal any whither, and execute vengeance without the formalities of a trial. This custom, under certain restrictions, was sanctioned by the divine law, for it must be supposed, that the avenger was not authorized to put any one to death on mere suspicion; as the magistrates and congregation might not inflict this punishment, except the fact was proved by the testimony of two witnesses. But, even if the person was certainly known, an equitable and merciful provision was also made for the security of those who had unintentionally shed blood. Six cities were appointed in different parts of the land, to which they might flee for refuge and be safe, until they had a fair trial before the proper magistrates. One or other of these cities [illegible] of every part of the land. [illegible] on the spot, until [illegible] the Levites shall be [a]forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with their suburbs.

8 And the cities which ye shall give shall be [f]of the possession of the children of Israel: [g]from them that have many ye shall give many; but from them that have few ye shall give few: every one shall give of his cities unto the Levites according to his inheritance which [†]he inheriteth.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [h]When ye be come over Jordan into the land of Canaan, 11 Then [i]ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person [‡]at unawares.

12 And they shall be unto you cities for refuge [k]from the avenger; [2] that the manslayer die not, [l]until he stand before the congregation in judgment.

13 And of these cities which ye shall give, six cities shall ye have for refuge.

14 Ye shall give [m]three cities on this side Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan, which shall be cities of refuge.

15 These six cities [3] shall be a refuge, [n]both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, and for the sojourner among them; that every one that killeth any person unawares may flee thither.

16 And [o]if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer: [p]the murderer shall surely be put to death.

17 And if he smite him [q]with [§]throwing a stone, [4] wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

18 Or if he smite him with an hand-weapon of wood, wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

19 The [r]revenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him, he shall slay him.

20 But [s]if he thrust [5] him of hatred, or hurl at him [t]by laying of wait, that he die;

21 Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die: he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer [6] when he meeteth him.

22 But if he thrust him suddenly [u]without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait;

23 Or with any stone, wherewith a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm;

24 Then [x]the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood according to these judgments:

25 And the congregation shall deliver [7] the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall [y]abide in it unto the death of the high priest, which was [z]anointed with the holy oil.

26 But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled;

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer; [l]he shall not be guilty of blood:

28 Because [a]he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high priest: but [b]after the death of the high priest the slayer shall return into the land of his possession.

29 So these things shall be for [c]a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

30 Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by [d]the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die.

31 ¶ Moreover, [e]ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is *guilty of death; but he shall be surely put to death.

32 And ye shall take [f]no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest.

33 So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are; for blood [§]it defileth the land: and [†]the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.

34 [b]Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein [i]I dwell: for I the LORD [k]dwell among the children of Israel.

if no malicious intention was manifest. These unhappy men would therefore generally get the start of their adversaries, and very few of them be overtaken before they gained the place of refuge. But then they must leave their families, employments, and most important interests, and dearest comforts: and they must neither loiter, nor yield to weariness, nor regard difficulties, nor slacken their pace, till they had got safe within the walls of the city; which secured them, in virtue of the divine institution, and not by its own natural strength.—To forward those who thus fled for their life, the Jewish writers inform us, that the road to those cities was always preserved in good repair; and way-posts, inscribed REFUGE, were placed wherever needful, that they might not so much as hesitate for a moment. All strangers and sojourners, whether proselytes or not, were allowed the benefit of this provision: for the tradition of the Jews, that none but proselytes were intended, most evidently contradicts the text. The region eastward of Jordan was nearly as long as that to the west of the river, and therefore three cities were appointed in each division.—Scott.

LAW OF THESE CITIES.—Concerning the cities of refuge the law was, 1. That if a man killed another, in these cities he was safe, and under the protection of the law, till he had his trial "before the congregation," that is, before the judges in open court. If he neglected thus to surrender himself, it was at his peril; if the avenger of blood met him elsewhere, or overtook him loitering in his way to the city of refuge, and slew him, his blood was upon his own head, because he did not make use of the security which God had provided for him. 2. If, upon trial, it were found to be wilful murder, the city of refuge should no longer be a protection to him; it was already determined, Exod. xxi. 14, "Thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die." 3. But if it were found to be by error or accident, and that the stroke was given without any design upon the life of the person slain, or any other; then the manslayer should continue safe in "the city of refuge," and the avenger of blood might not meddle with him, ver. 25. There he was to remain in banishment from his own house and patrimony, "till the death of the high priest;" and if at any time he went out of that city, or the suburbs of it, he put himself out of the protection of this law, and the avenger of blood, if he met him, might slay him, ver. 26—28. By the banishment of the manslayer from his own city, and his confinement to the city of refuge, where he was in a manner a prisoner, God would teach us to conceive a dread and horror of the guilt of blood, and to be very careful of life, and always afraid, lest, by oversight, or negligence, we occasion the death of any. By the limiting of the time of the offender's banishment to the death of the high priest, an honour was put upon that sacred office. The high priest was to be looked upon as so great a blessing to his country, that when he died, their sorrow upon that occasion would swallow up all other resentments. The cities of refuge being all of them Levites' cities, and the high priest being the head of that tribe, and consequently having a peculiar dominion over those cities, those that were confined to them might properly be looked upon as his prisoners, and so his death must be their discharge; it was, as it were, at his suit, that the delinquent was imprisoned, and therefore at his death it fell; Actio moritur cum persona—The suit expires with the party.—Henry.

MURDER UNPARDONABLE BY THE LAW.—In case murder was proved against a man, no atonement or ransom might be accepted for his life; but, however otherwise distinguished, he must be put to death; nay, further, no atonement or compensation might purchase the manslayer the liberty of leaving the city of refuge before the death of the high priest! Because murder was to be considered, not so much as the private injury of an individual, as the crime of the nation, which could only be expiated by the death of the offender; and as defiling the land, till thus expiated. So that the vengeance of God might be expected on the nation, if the magistrates and people neglected their duty in this respect; and especially, as to the land, in which the Lord himself condescended to dwell by his temple and ordinances.—This remarkable law, expressive of the deepest detestation of murder, yet providing most effectually against the innocent being punished with the guilty, is likewise an instructive typical representation of the salvation of the gospel. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men;" "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after death is the judgment," with its eternal consequences. In the meanwhile, a REFUGE is provided and revealed in Christ Jesus. His ministers warn sinners to "flee from the wrath to come," and instruct and exhort them to "flee for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before them." All things are prepared for the reception of those who obey this call. By faith they discern both their danger and refuge. Then fear urges, and hope animates. Should death, like the avenger of blood, find them without, destruction is inevitable. All is at stake: this is their "one thing needful." Now no longer will they be amused, or bribed, or persuaded to loiter. Even their choicest earthly comforts, and most important temporal interests, appear comparatively worthless. They "count all but loss—that they may win Christ, and be found in him." They apply earnestly to him, and follow his instructions. They are welcomed into the refuge which he hath provided.—Scott.

was commanded by the LORD [c] to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters.

9 Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Israel shall keep himself to his own inheritance.

the divine appointment, if such a considerable part of the lot of Manasseh should, by their marriage, be transferred to any other tribe; for the issue would be denominated from the father's tribe, not the mother's. This indeed would not lessen the lot of the particular persons of that tribe, (they would have their own still,) but it would lessen the lot of the tribe in general, and render it less strong and considerable; they therefore thought themselves concerned for the reputation of their tribe; and perhaps were the more jealous for it, because it was already very much weakened by the sitting down of the one half of it on this side Jordan. 2. To prevent contests and quarrels among posterity. If those of other tribes should come among them, perhaps it might occasion some contests: they would be apt to give and receive disturbance, and their title might, in process of time, come to be questioned; and how great a matter would this fire kindle! It is the wisdom and duty of those that have estates in the world, to settle them, and dispose of them, so that no strife and contention may arise about them among posterity. —Here is, 3. The matter settled by express order from God between the daughters of Zelophehad and the rest of the tribe of Manasseh. The petition is assented to, and care taken to prevent the inconvenience feared, ver. 5. "The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well." Thus those that consult the oracles of God, concerning the making of their heavenly inheritance sure, shall not only be directed what to do, but their inquiries shall be graciously accepted, and they shall have not only their "well-done," but their "well-said," good and faithful servant. Now the matter is thus accommodated; these heiresses must be obliged to marry, not only within their own tribe of Manasseh, but within the particular family of the Hepherites, to which they did belong. (1.) They are not determined to any particular persons, there was choice enough in the family of their father, "Let them marry to whom they think best." As children must preserve the authority of their parents, and not marry against their mind; so parents must consult the affections of their children in disposing of them, and not compel them to marry such as they cannot love. Forced marriages are not likely to prove blessings. (2.) Yet they are confined to their own relations, that their inheritance might not go to another family. God would have them know, that the land being to be divided by lot, the disposal whereof was of the Lord, they could not mend, and therefore should not alter his appointment. The inheritance must not "remove from tribe to tribe," ver. 7, lest there should be confusion among them, their estates entangled, and their genealogies perplexed. God would not have one tribe to be enriched by the straitening and impoverishing of another, since they were all alike the seed of Abraham his friend. 4. The law, in this particular case, was made perpetual, and to be observed whenever hereafter the like case should happen, ver. 8. Those that were not heiresses, might marry into what tribe they pleased, (though we may suppose that, ordinarily, they kept within their own tribe,) but those that were, must either quit their claim to the inheritance, or marry one of their own family, that each of the tribes might keep themselves to their own inheritance, and one tribe might not encroach upon another, but throughout their generations there might remain immovable the ancient landmarks, set, not by their fathers, but by the "God of their fathers." 5. The submission of the daughters of Zelophehad to this appointment. How could they but marry well, and to their satisfaction, when God himself directed them! They married their father's brother's sons, ver. 10—12. By this it appears, (1.) That the marriage of cousin-germans is not in itself unlawful, nor within the degrees prohibited, for then God would not have countenanced these marriages. But, (2.) That ordinarily it is not advisable; for if there had not been a particular reason for it, (which cannot hold in any case now, inheritances being not disposed of as then, by the special designation of heaven,) they would not have married such near relations. The world is wide, and he that walks uprightly, will endeavour to walk surely. —Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—No laws, however excellent, express or multiplied, can reach every particular case which may arise; and still room will be left for the exercise of sound judgment and common sense. But when these are regulated according to the true meaning of the word of God, and in dependence on divine teaching, they will guide us through all perplexities, as far as our immediate duty is concerned. Yet the Lord frequently leaves us to feel our difficulties, that we may be habituated to reflect, to search the Scriptures, and to trust him more simply.—All our inclinations ought to be subjected to the will of God; and in contracting marriage, future consequences to posterity, as well as to ourselves and our connexions, should be taken into consideration.—The Scriptures, indeed, suppose that esteem, affection, and preference, are requisite in this important relation: but they know nothing of that irrational, ungovernable, and idolatrous passion, which, regardless of all consequences, and in defiance of all authority, rushes headlong upon gratification; which is neither moderated by discretion, nor subordinated to the will of God; which is not rational esteem, or tender friendship, or congenial affection, but something vastly more rapturous, unintelligible, and undefinable; and which, with all its refinements, is inconsistent with common sense, the interests of society, the happiness of domestic life, and the Christian religion.—Finally, though it is provident to foresee and prevent disputes about temporal property: yet it would be better if we were equally quicksighted, and attentive, to our spiritual and eternal interests. But "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." —Scott.

THE FIFTH BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED

DEUTERONOMY.

THIS book is called by the Jews, as in former instances, from the first words, Ele-hadebarim. Some, however, call it The Book of Reprehensions, from the reproofs contained in it; others style it Thorah, or The Law; and Misna, which is nearly the same as Deuteronomy, the name taken from the Septuagint in our version, which signifies a second law, or a repetition of the law. Indeed, several of the laws before given are repeated, sometimes with further explanations, and enforced by the most animated and pathetic exhortations and expostulations; and therefore Moses generally speaks in the first person, and directly addresses the people. In the former books he spake as a lawgiver, merely declaring the statutes which God had delivered to him. But here he is more generally a preacher, enforcing, on a new generation, the laws above given, with illustrations, warnings, exhortations, and persuasions, frequently in the highest style of simple pathetical eloquence. The most remarkable events of the preceding history are likewise recapitulated, and applied to practical purposes. These repetitions were peculiarly proper in his circumstances; and the way in which Moses applied them was exceedingly adapted to leave a deep and durable impression on the hearts and consciences of the people. But several new laws are likewise added, and various other things not before mentioned. The last two months of Moses' life, which he knew to be his concluding scene, were employed in delivering and committing to writing the several parts of this book; so that it contains his dying exhortations to Israel; and his active zeal for the glory of God, and fervent love to his people, with the various methods which he employed for their benefit in his concluding days, are very remarkable. Having reminded them of the Lord's dealings with their fathers, and with them, and their past rebellions, he enforced obedience to all his commandments with unequalled pathos and energy, and almost from every imaginable motive. He set before them, in prophetical blessings and curses, the consequences of their conduct; and gave directions for writing the law on pillars of stone, and ratifying its principal parts in a most extraordinary manner, from Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim. He then formed the substance of his instructions, exhortations, and warnings, into a prophetical song; and finally pronounced blessings, evidently prophetical, on their several tribes. Thus far the book was, no doubt, written by him, and has every mark of being genuine; but at the close, some other person informs us that Moses ascended Mount Nebo, viewed the promised land, then died, and was buried by the Lord himself, and lamented by Israel thirty days. It is an honourable circumstance to this portion of Scripture, that our Lord took all the texts from it with which he baffled Satan's temptations; and it is in both Testaments quoted as the work of Moses, and the word of God (1 Kings ii. 3; 2 Chr. xxv. 4; Dan. ix. 13; Matt. iv. 4, 7, 10; John i. 45; Acts iii. 22; vii. 37; Rom. x. 6, 8; 1 Cor. ix. 9; Gal. iii. 10-13). The prophecies also contained in it are most explicit and numerous, and unanswerably demonstrate its divine original. They have been evidently fulfilling during a course of above three thousand years; and yet some of them remain unaccomplished. Of this the reader will judge for himself on carefully considering the notes on the chapters here referred to (iv., xviii., xxviii., xxix., xxxi., xxxii., xxxiii.)

CHAP. I.

Moses, in the end of the fortieth year, briefly rehearseth the story, 1, of God's promise, 6, and his anger for their incredulity, 34, and disobedience, 41.

THESE be the words which Moses spake unto all Israel, [a]on this side Jordan, in the wilderness, in the plain over against [*]the Red sea,[1] between [b]Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and [*]Hazeroth, and Dizahab.

4 After [g]he had slain Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, which dwelt at Astaroth in Edrei.

5 On this side Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses [h]to declare this law, saying,

6 ¶ The LORD our God spake unto us [i]in Horeb, saying, [k]Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount:

CHAP. I. THE ADDRESS OF MOSES.—Moses begins his narrative with their removal from Mount Sinai, ver. 6, and relates here, 1. The orders which God gave them to decamp, and proceed in their march, ver. 6, 7. "Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount," that was the mount that "burned with fire," Heb. xii. 18, and "gendered to bondage," Gal. iv. 24. Thither God brought them to humble them, and by the terrors of the law to prepare them for the land of promise. There he kept them about a year, and then told them they had "dwelt long enough" there, they must go forward. Though God brings his people into trouble and affliction, into spiritual trouble and affliction of mind, he knows when they have "dwelt long enough" in it, and will certainly find a time, the fittest time, to advance them from the terrors of the "spirit of bondage" to the comforts of the "spirit of adoption." See Rom. viii. 15. 2. The prospect which he gave them of a happy and early settlement in Canaan. "Go to the land of the Canaanites," ver. 7, enter and take possession, it is all your own. "Behold, I have set the land before you," ver. 8. When God commands us to go forward in our christian course, he sets the heavenly Canaan before us for our encouragement. Then he reminds them of the happy constitution of their government, which was such as might make them all safe and easy, if it was not their own fault. When good laws were given them, good men were intrusted with the execution of them; which, as it was an instance of God's goodness to them, so it was with the care of Moses concerning them; and, it should seem, he mentions it here, to recommend himself to them as a man that sincerely sought their welfare, and so to make way for what he was about to say to them, wherein he aimed at nothing but their good. In this part of his narrative he insinuates to them, 1. That he greatly rejoiced in the increase of their numbers. He owns the accomplishment of God's promise to Abraham, ver. 10. "Ye are as the stars of heaven for multitude;" and prays for the further accomplishment of it, ver. 11. "God make you a thousand times more!" This prayer comes in, in a parenthesis, and a good prayer prudently put in cannot be impertinent, in any discourse of divine things; nor will a pious ejaculation break the coherence, but rather strengthen and adorn it. But how greatly are his desires enlarged, when he prays that they might be made a thousand times more than they were! We are not [illegible] in the power and goodness of God, why should we be straitened in our own [illegible], which ought to be as large as the promise? larger it need not be. It is [illegible] that Moses here takes the measures of his prayer, "The Lord bless [illegible] years;" and why might he not hope that they might become a [illegible] more than they were now ten thousand times [illegible] ago? Observe, [illegible] [illegible] 14, 17. Those that are [illegible] to honour, must know

A. M. 2553.—B. C. 1451.

14 And ye answered me, and said, The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do.

15 So [x]I took the chief of your tribes, wise men, and known, and [s]made them heads over you, [y]captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes.

16 And I [z]charged your judges at that time, saying, [a]Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and [b]the stranger that is with him.

17 Ye [c]shall not [f]respect persons in judgment, but [d]ye shall hear the small as well as the great; [e]ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for [f]the judgment is God's:[1] and [g]the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it.

18 And I [h]commanded you at that time all the things which ye should do.

19 ¶ And when we departed from Horeb, we went [i]through all that great and terrible wilderness, which ye saw by the way of the mountain of the Amorites, as the LORD our God commanded us; and [k]we came to Kadesh-barnea.

20 And I said unto you, Ye are come unto [l]the mountain of the Amorites, which the LORD our God doth give unto us.

21 Behold, the LORD thy God hath set the land before thee: go up and possess it, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath said unto thee; [m]fear not, neither be discouraged.

22 ¶ And ye came near unto me every one of you, and said, [n]We will send men before us, and they shall search us out the land, and bring us word again by what way we must go up, and into what cities we shall come.

23 And the saying pleased me well; and I took twelve men of you, one of a tribe:

24 And [o]they turned, and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and searched it out.

25 And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and said, It is a good land which the LORD our God doth give us.

26 Notwithstanding [p]ye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God:

27 And ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because [q]the LORD hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us.

28 Whither shall we go up? our brethren have *discouraged our heart, saying, [r]The people is greater and taller than we; the cities are great, and walled up to heaven: and, moreover, [s]we have seen the sons of the Anakims there.

29 Then I said unto you, [t]Dread not,[2] neither be afraid of them.

30 The LORD your God, which goeth before you, [u]he shall fight for you, [x]according to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes;

31 And [y]in the wilderness, where thou hast seen how that the LORD thy God [z]bare thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place.

32 Yet in this thing [a]ye did not believe the LORD your God,

33 Who went [b]in the way before you, to search you out a place to pitch your tents in, [c]in fire by night, to shew you by what way ye should go, and in a cloud by day.

34 ¶ And the LORD heard the voice of your words, and was wroth, [d]and sware, saying,

35 Surely there shall not one of these men of this evil generation see that good land, which I sware to give unto your fathers, 36 Save [e]Caleb the son of Jephunneh, he shall see it; and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, because he hath [f]wholly followed the LORD.

37 Also [f]the LORD was angry with me for your sakes, saying, Thou also shalt not go in thither.

38 But [g]Joshua the son of Nun, [h]which standeth before thee, he shall go in thither: [i]encourage him; for he shall cause Israel to inherit it.

39 Moreover, [k]your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, [l]which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it.

40 But as for you, [m]turn you, and take your journey into the wilderness, by the way of the Red sea.

41 Then ye answered and said unto me, [n]We have sinned against the LORD, we will go up and fight, according to all that the LORD our God commanded us. And when ye had girded on every man his weapons of war, ye were ready to go up into the hill.

42 And the LORD said unto me, Say unto them, [o]Go not up, neither fight; [p]for I am not among you; lest ye be smitten before your enemies.

43 So I spake unto you; and ye would not hear, [q]but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD, and [r]went presumptuously up into the hill.

44 And the Amorites, which dwelt in that that they are charged with business, and must give account another day of their charge. (1.) He charges them to be diligent and patient. "Hear the causes." Hear both sides, hear them fully, hear them carefully; for nature hath provided us with two ears, and "he that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame to him." The "ear of the learner" is necessary to the "tongue of the learned," Isa. l. 4. (2.) To be just and impartial; "Judge righteously." Judgment must be given according to the merits of the cause, without regard to the quality of the parties. The natives must not be suffered to abuse the strangers, any more than the strangers to insult the natives, or to encroach upon them: the great must not be suffered to oppress the small, or to crush them, any more than the small to rob the great, or to affront them. No faces must be known in judgment, but unbribed, unbiassed equity must always pass sentence. (3.) To be resolute and courageous. "'Ye shall not be afraid of the face of man.' Be not overawed to do an ill thing, either by the clamours of the crowd, or by the menaces of those that have power in their hands." And he gave them a good reason to enforce this charge, "for the judgment is God's." "You are God's vicegerents. you act for him, and therefore must act like him; you are his representatives, but if you judge unrighteously, you misrepresent him. The judgment is his, and therefore he will protect you in doing right; and will certainly call you to account if you do wrong." And, (lastly,) He allowed them to bring all difficult cases to him, and he would always be ready to hear and determine, and to make both the judges and the people easy. "Happy art thou, O Israel," in such a prince as Moses was.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The faithful servants of the Lord, with advancing years and experience, frequently acquire increasing reputation for wisdom, integrity, and disinterested philanthropy, as well as pious zeal for the glory of God. This adds to their influence, and gives weight to their instructions; and when favoured with health, they may, with vast advantage, redouble their diligence in enforcing the truths which they before had taught, upon the consciences of the people, that they may have them in remembrance after their decease. Whilst they draw nearer to the heavenly world, they often seem to breathe a purer air, and all their words have a heavenly savour; their motion accelerates as they approach their rest; their earnestness increases, when they can be influenced by no earthly motive; and their confidence and comfort acquire strength, in defiance of the approaching king of terrors. Under such circumstances their instructions are doubly impressive, and frequently have a durable effect upon the survivors. They should then seize every occasion of reminding the people of the wisdom, power, truth, and love of God, as manifested in his dealings with them; and there are times when they may also, consistently with deep humility, speak of their own conduct; their love to souls, their faithful labours, their self-denial, and patient sufferings in the arduous work about which they are engaged; in order to obviate prejudice, and to obtain a more favourable attention to further exhortations. But it is likewise necessary to show the people their transgressions, that they may be duly humbled; to warn them of the fatal effects of unbelief and sin; to point out the advantages of confidence in God and obedience to him; and to unite confessions of their own imperfection and sinfulness, both to lessen the offence, to suggest encouragement, and to excite personal humiliation. It is exceedingly profitable for us frequently to meditate on the history of our past lives, and to set apart time for that purpose; to divide our years into distinct periods; to review them separately; to give thanks for the mercies of each successive period; and to confess and seek forgiveness of all the sins, as far as we remember them; and thus endeavouring to revive suitable affections, with earnest prayers, and simple dependence on the Lord, to renew our acceptance of his salvation, and the surrender of ourselves to his service. Without repeating the observations before made on the history here recapitulated, we may take notice in general, that nothing but total unbelief, and the disobedience connected with it, can exclude any sinner from the promised rest; that unbelief partially operating in disobedience, occasions manifold abatements and delays in our comforts; that our own expedients seldom avail to much good purpose; that courage, in the exercise of faith and the path of duty, enables the possessor to "follow the LORD wholly," to disregard all obstructions, to triumph over all opposition, and to seize the promised blessings; that all the mercies which we receive render our distrust more inexcusable; that the sins of some are the temptations of others, and tend to involve them in guilt and punishment; that worldly sorrow is seldom better than impatience and rebellion, and thus worketh death; and that they who do not exercise godly sorrow in due time, and obey the call of mercy, must weep with bitter unavailing sorrow, when the sentence of condemnation is irrevocably past. Finally, we may observe, that every public and honourable trust implies a very heavy and laborious duty, and that frequently the duty is particularly described in Scripture. Happy is it for themselves, and for those around them, when men diligently search out such passages as describe their duties, and show what manner of persons they ought to be, in that station of life in which the providence of God has placed them: seriously meditating on them, and praying over them: and then in the fear of God, as under his eye, and with reference to the day of judgment, endeavouring to regulate their public and private conduct according to them.—Scott.

CHAP. II.

The story is continued touching the Edomites, 1, the Moabites, 9, the Ammonites, 18, and Sihon the Amorite, 24.

THEN [a]we turned, and took our journey into the wilderness, by the way of the Red sea, as the LORD spake unto me; and [b]we compassed mount Seir many days.

2 And the LORD spake unto me, saying,

3 Ye have compassed this mountain [c]long enough: turn you northward.

4 And command thou the people, saying, [d]Ye are to pass through the coast of your brethren the children of Esau, which dwell in Seir, and [e]they shall be afraid of you: [f]take ye good heed unto yourselves therefore.

5 Meddle not with them;[1] for I will not give you of their land, *no, not so much as a foot-breadth; [g]because I have given mount Seir unto Esau for a possession.

6 Ye shall [h]buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat; and ye shall also buy water of them for money, that ye may drink.

7 For the LORD thy God hath [i]blessed thee in all the works of thy hand: [k]he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness: [l]these forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing.

8 And [m]when we passed by from our brethren the children of Esau, which dwelt in Seir, through the way of the plain from [n]Elath, and from Ezion-gaber, we turned and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab.

9 And the LORD said unto me, [†]Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle: for I will not give thee of their land for a possession; because I have given [o]Ar unto [p]the children of Lot for a possession.

10 The [q]Emims dwelt therein in times past, a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims;

11 Which also were accounted giants, [r]as the Anakims; but the Moabites call them Emims.

12 The [s]Horims also dwelt in Seir beforetime; but the children of Esau [‡]succeeded them, when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their [§]stead, [t]as Israel did unto the land of his possession, which the LORD gave unto them.

13 Now rise up, said I, and get you over the [l]brook [u]Zered: and we went over the brook Zered.

14 And the space in which we came from [x]Kadesh-barnea,[2] until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; [y]until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, as the LORD sware unto them.

15 For indeed [z]the hand of the LORD[3] was against them, to destroy them from among the host, until they were consumed.

16 ¶ So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people,

17 That the LORD spake unto me, saying,

18 Thou art to [a]pass over through Ar, the coast of Moab, this day.

19 And when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, [b]distress them not, nor meddle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any possession, because I have given it unto the children of Lot for a possession.

20 (That also was accounted a land of giants: giants dwelt therein in old time; and the Ammonites call them [c]Zamzummims;[4]

21 A people [d]great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims; [e]but the LORD destroyed them before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead;

22 As he did to the children of [f]Esau which dwelt in Seir, when he destroyed [g]the Horims from before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead, even unto this day:

23 And [h]the Avims[5] which dwelt in Hazerim, even unto [i]Azzah, [k]the Caphtorims,[6] which came forth out of Caphtor, destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead.)

24 ¶ Rise ye up, take your journey, and pass over [l]the river Arnon: [m]behold, I have given into thine hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land; *begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle.

25 This day will I begin [n]to put the dread of thee, and the fear of thee, upon the nations that are under the whole heaven, who shall hear report of thee, and shall tremble, and be in anguish because of thee.

26 ¶ And I sent messengers out of the wilderness of [o]Kedemoth[7] unto Sihon king of Heshbon, [p]with words of peace, saying, 27 Let [q]me pass through thy land: I will go along by the high-way, I will neither turn unto the right hand nor to the left.

28 Thou shalt sell me meat for money, that I may eat; and give me water for money,

CHAP. II. MERCY TO THE EDOMITES.—The tribes must not offer any hostility to them as enemies, ver. 4, 5. "Meddle not with them." 1. They must not improve the advantage they had against them, by the fright they would be put into upon Israel's approach. "They shall be afraid of you, knowing your strength and numbers, and the power of God engaged for you; but think not that because their fears make them an easy prey, you may therefore prey upon them; no, 'take heed to yourselves.'" There is need of great caution and a strict government of our own spirits, to keep ourselves from injuring those whom we have an advantage against. Or, this caution is given to the princes; they must not only not meddle with the Edomites themselves, but not permit any of the soldiers to meddle with them. 2. They must not avenge upon the Edomites the affront they gave them in refusing them passage through their country, Numb. xx. 21. Thus before God brought Israel to destroy their enemies in Canaan, he taught them to forgive their enemies in Edom. 3. They must not expect to have any part of their land given them for a possession; mount Seir was already settled upon the Edomites, and they must not, under pretence of God's covenant and conduct, think to seize for themselves all they could lay hands on. Dominion is not founded in grace. God's Israel shall be well placed, but must not expect to be "placed alone in the midst of the earth," Isa. v. 8. 4. They must trade with them as neighbours: buy meat and water of them, and pay for what they bought, ver. 6; religion must never be made a cloak for injustice. The reason given, ver. 7, is because God hath blessed thee, and hitherto thou hast lacked nothing; and therefore, (1.) "Thou needest not beg; scorn to be beholden to Edomites, when thou hast a God all-sufficient to depend upon. Thou hast wherewithal to pay for what thou callest for, (thanks to the divine blessing!) use therefore what thou hast, use it cheerfully, and do not sponge upon the Edomites." (2.) "Therefore thou must not steal. Thou hast experienced the care of the divine providence concerning thee, in confidence of which, for the future, and in a firm belief of its sufficiency, never use any indirect methods for thy supply. Live by thy faith, and not by thy sword."

ISRAEL'S VICTORIES.—These revolutions are recorded, 1. To show how soon the world was peopled after the flood, so well peopled, that when a family grew numerous, they could not find a place to settle in, at least in that part of the world, but they must drive out those that were already settled. 2. To show that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Giants were expelled by those of ordinary stature; for, probably, these giants, like those before the flood, Gen. vi. 4, were notorious for impiety and oppression, which brought the judgments of God upon them, against which their great strength would be no defence. 3. To show what uncertain things worldly possessions are, and how often they change their owners; it was so of old, and ever will be so. Families decline, and from them estates are transferred to families that increase; so little constancy or continuance is there in these things! 4. To encourage the children of Israel, who were now going to take possession of Canaan, against the difficulties they would meet with, and to show the unbelief of those that were afraid of the sons of Anak, to whom the giants, here said to be conquered, are compared, ver. 11, 21. If the providence of God had done this for Moabites and Ammonites, much more would his promise do it for Israel, his peculiar people.

DESTRUCTION OF SIHON.—1. God gives them commission to seize upon the country of Sihon, king of Heshbon, ver. 24, 25. This was then God's way of disposing of kingdoms, but such particular grants are not now either to be expected or pretended. In this commission observe, (1.) Though God assured them that the land should be their own, yet they must bestir themselves, and contend in battle with the enemy. What God gives, we must endeavour to get. (2.) God promises that when they fight, he will fight for them. Do you "begin to possess it, and I will begin to put the dread of you" upon them. God would dispirit the enemy, and so destroy them; would magnify Israel, and so terrify all those against whom they were commissioned. See Exod. xv. 14. 2. Moses sends to Sihon a message of peace, and only begs a passage through his land, with a promise to give his country no disturbance, but the advantage of trading for ready money with so great a body, ver. 26—29. Moses herein did neither disobey God, who bid him contend with Sihon, nor dissemble with Sihon; but doubtless it was by divine direction that he did it, that Sihon might be left inexcusable, though God "hardened his heart." This may illustrate the method of God's dealing with those to whom he gives his gospel, but does not give grace to believe it. 3. Sihon began the war, ver. 32. God having "made his heart obstinate," and hid from his eyes the things that belonged to his peace, ver. 30, that he might "deliver him into the hand of Israel." Those that meddle with the people of God, meddle to their own hurt; and God sometimes ruins his enemies by their own resolves.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The servants of God, while they despise worldly riches in comparison of a treasure in heaven, and often live and die poor, bequeath to their posterity the most durable possessions, in the blessings which God had promised to bestow upon them for the sake of their parents.—"The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof;" and with perfect justice, absolute sovereignty, and irresistible power, he assigns to every people the countries which they inhabit, and dispossesses them to make way for others, as he sees good: but none can plead his grant to excuse the violences which ambition, rapacity, or revenge induce them to commit; though undesignthat I may drink; [r]only I will pass through on my feet,

29 (As [s]the children of Esau which dwell in Seir, and the Moabites which dwell in Ar, did unto me,[6]) until I shall pass over Jordan, [t]into the land which the LORD our God giveth us.

30 But Sihon king of Heshbon would not let us pass by him: for [u]the LORD thy God hardened his spirit, and made his heart [x]obstinate,[9] that he might deliver him into thy hand, as appeareth this day.

31 And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have begun to [y]give Sihon and his land before thee: begin to possess, that thou mayest inherit his land.

32 Then [z]Sihon came out against us, he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz.

33 And [a]the LORD our God delivered him before us; and [b]we smote him, and his sons, and all his people.

34 And we took all his cities at that time, and [c]utterly destroyed [†]the men, and the women, and the little ones, of every city; we left none to remain:

35 Only [d]the cattle we took for a prey unto ourselves, and the spoil of the cities which we took.

36 From [e]Aroer, which is by the brink of the river of Arnon, and from the city that is by the river, even unto Gilead, there was [f]not one city too strong for us: the LORD our God delivered all unto us.

37 Only [g]unto the land of the children of Ammon thou camest not, nor unto any place of the river [h]Jabbok, nor unto the cities in the mountains, nor unto whatsoever the LORD our God forbade us.

CHAP. III.

Of Og king of Bashan, 1. Moses' prayer to enter into the land, 23; he is permitted to see it, 26.

THEN we turned, and went up the way to Bashan: and [a]Og the king of Bashan came out against us, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei.

2 And the LORD said unto me, [b]Fear him not: for I will deliver him, and all his people, and his land, into thy hand; and thou shalt do unto him [c]as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

3 So [d]the LORD our God delivered into our hands Og also, the king of Bashan, and all his people: and we smote him, until none was left to him remaining.[1]

4 And we took [e]all his cities at that time; there was not a city which we took not from them, threescore cities, [f]all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

5 All these cities were [g]fenced with high walls, gates, and bars; besides unwalled towns a great many.

6 And [h]we utterly destroyed them, [i]as we did unto Sihon king of Heshbon, utterly destroying the men, women, and children, of every city.

7 But [k]all the cattle, and the spoil of the cities, we took for a prey to ourselves.

8 And we took at that time, out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites, [l]the land that was on this side Jordan, from the river of Arnon unto mount Hermon;

9 (Which [m]Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion, and the Amorites call it [n]Shenir;)

10 All [o]the cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, unto Salchah and [p]Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan:

11 For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of [*]giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron: is it not in [q]Rabbath of the children of Ammon? [r]nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man.[2]

12 And this land, which we possessed at that time, [s]from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites.

13 And [t]the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, being the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half-tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob, with all Bashan, which was called the land of giants.

14 [u]Jair the son of Manasseh took all the country of [x]Argob, unto the coasts of [y]Geshuri and Maachathi, and called them after his own name, [z]Bashan-havoth-jair, unto this day.

15 And I gave Gilead unto [a]Machir.

16 And unto [b]the Reubenites, and unto the Gadites, I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, half the valley,[3] and the border, even unto the [c]river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon;

17 The plain also, and Jordan, and the coast thereof, from [d]Chinnereth even unto [e]the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, under [†]Ashdoth-pisgah eastward.

18 ¶ And [f]I commanded you at that time, saying, The LORD your God hath given you this land to possess it: ye shall pass over armed before your brethren the children of Israel, all that are [‡]meet for the war.

19 But your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle, (for I know that ye have much cattle,) shall abide in your cities which I have given you;

20 Until the LORD have given rest unto your brethren, as well as unto you, and until they also possess the land which the LORD your God hath given them beyond Jordan:

edly they fulfil his secret purposes.—When nations or individuals are ripe for destruction, the Lord in awful judgment gives them up to final and total obduracy; and their desperate wickedness both occasions their ruin, and manifests his righteousness. Then the wisest are infatuated, and the boldest are intimidated; they tremble, and are in anguish, and perish, as instructive examples to the survivors.—Scott.

CHAP. III. DEFEAT OF OG.—We have here another brave country delivered into the hand of Israel, that of Bashan; the conquest of Sihon is often mentioned together with that of Og, to the praise of God, the rather because in these, Israel's triumphs began, Ps. cxxxv. 11; cxxxvi. 19, 20. See how they got the mastery of Og, a very formidable prince. 1. Very strong, for he was of the remnant of the giants, ver. 11, his personal strength was extraordinary; a monument of which was preserved by the Ammonites in his bedstead, which was showed as a rarity in their chief city. You might guess at his weight by the materials of his bedstead; it was iron, as if a bedstead of wood were too weak for him to trust to; and you might guess at his stature by the dimensions of it; it was nine cubits long, and four cubits broad; which, supposing a cubit to be but half a yard, (and some learned men have made it appear to be somewhat more,) was four yards and a half long, and two yards broad; and if we allow his bedstead to be two cubits longer than himself, and that is as much as we need allow, he was three yards and a half high, double the stature of an ordinary man, and every way proportionable; yet they smote him, ver. 3. Note, When God pleads his people's cause, he can deal with giants as with grasshoppers. No man's might can secure him against the Almighty. The army of Og was very powerful, for he had the command of sixty fortified cities, beside unwalled towns, ver. 5. Yet all this was nothing before God's Israel, when they came with commission to destroy him. 2. He was very stout and daring; he "came out against Israel to battle," ver. 1. It was wonderful that he did not take warning by the ruin of Sihon, and send to desire conditions of peace; but he trusted to his own strength, and so was hardened to his destruction. Note, Those that are not awakened by the judgments of God upon others, but persist in their defiance of heaven, are ripening apace for the like judgments upon themselves, Jer. iii. 8. God bade Moses not fear him, ver. 2.

PRAYER OF MOSES.—"I pray thee, let me go over," ver. 25. God had said, he "should not go over;" yet he prays that he might; not knowing but that the threatening was conditional, for it was not ratified with an oath, as that concerning the people was, that they should not enter. Thus Hezekiah prayed for his own life, and David for the life of his child, after both had been expressly threatened; and the former prevailed, though the latter did not. Moses remembered the time, when he had by prayer prevailed with God to recede from the declarations which he had made of his wrath against Israel, Exod. xxxii. 14. And why might he not hope in like manner to prevail for himself? "Let me go over and see the good land." Not, "Let me go over to be a prince and a ruler there;" he seeks not his own honour, is content to resign the government to Joshua; but, "Let me go to be a spectator of thy kindness to Israel; to see what I believe concerning the goodness of the land of promise." How pathetically does he speak of Canaan, that "good land," that "goodly mountain!" 1. God's answer to this prayer had in it a mixture of "mercy and judgment," that he might sing unto God of both. There was judgment in the denial of his request, and that in something of anger too, ver. 26; "The Lord was wroth with me for your sakes." God not only sees sin in his people, but is much displeased with it; and even those that are delivered from "the wrath to come," yet may lie under the tokens of God's wrath in this world, and may be denied some particular favour which their hearts are much set upon. God is a gracious, tender, loving Father; but he is angry with his children when they do amiss, and denies them many a thing that they desire, and are ready to cry for. But how was he wroth with Moses, "for the sake of Israel?" Either, (1.) For that sin which they provoked him to. See Ps. cvi. 32, 33. Or, (2.) The removal of Moses at that time, when he could so ill be spared, was a rebuke to all Israel, and a punishment of their sin. Or, (3.) It was for their sakes, that it might be a warning to them to take heed of offending God by passionate and unbelieving speeches at any time, after the similitude of his transgression; for if "this were done to such a green tree, what should be done to the dry?" He acknowledges that God "would not hear him." God had often heard him for Israel, yet he would not hear him for himself. It was the prerogative of Christ, the great intercessor, to be heard always; yet of him his enemies said, "He saved others, himself he could not save:" which the Jews would not have upbraided him with, had they considered that Moses, their great prophet, prevailed for others, but for himself he could not prevail. Though Moses, being one of the wrestling seed of Jacob, did not seek in vain, yet he had not the thing itself which he sought for. God may accept our prayers, and yet not grant us the very thing we pray for. 2. God promised him a sight of Canaan "from the top of Pisgah," ver. 27. Though he should not have the possession of it, he should have the prospect of it; not to tantalize him, but such a sight of it as would yield him true satisfaction, and would enable him to form a very clear and pleasing idea of that promised land. Even great believers, in this present state, see heaven but at a distance. 3. He provided him a successor, one who should support the honour of Moses, and carry on and complete that glorious work which the heart of Moses was so much upon, the bringing of Israel to Canaan, and settling them there, ver. 28. "Charge Joshua and encourage him" in this and then shall ye [s]return every man unto his possession, which I have given you.

21 ¶ And [h]I commanded Joshua at that time, saying, Thine eyes have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto these two kings: [i]so shall the LORD do unto all the kingdoms whither thou passest.

22 Ye shall not fear them: [k]for the LORD your God he shall fight for you.

23 And [l]I besought the LORD at that time, saying,

24 O Lord GOD, thou hast begun to shew thy servant [m]thy greatness, and thy mighty hand: for [n]what god is there in heaven or in earth that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might?

25 I pray thee, let me go over and see [o]the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon.

26 But [p]the LORD was wroth with me for your sakes, and would not hear me: and the LORD said unto me, [q]Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter.

27 Get thee [r]up into the top of [t]Pisgah, and [u]lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

28 But [v]charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him: [w]for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt see.

29 So we abode in the [x]valley over against Beth-peor.[4]

NOW therefore hearken, O Israel, [a]unto the statutes, and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them, [b]that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which the LORD God of your fathers giveth you.

2 Ye shall not [c]add[1] unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you.

3 Your eyes have seen [d]what the LORD did because of Baal-peor: for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the LORD thy God hath destroyed them from among you.

4 But ye that did [e]cleave unto the LORD your God are alive every one of you this day.

5 Behold, [f]I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it.

[‡] Or, imparted.

6 Keep therefore, and do them: for [s]this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, [h]Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.

7 For [i]what nation is there so great, [k]who hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is in all things that we call upon him for?

8 And what nation is there so great, that hath [l]statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day?

9 Only take heed to thyself, and [m]keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and [n]lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life; but [o]teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons:

10 Specially [p]the day that thou stoodest before the LORD thy God in Horeb, when the LORD said unto me, Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to [q]fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

11 And ye came near, and [r]stood under the mountain; and the mountain burned with fire unto the [*]midst of heaven, with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness.

12 And [s]the LORD spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw [t]no similitude; [†]only [u]ye heard a voice.

13 And [x]he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even [y]ten commandments; and [z]he wrote them upon two tables of stone.

14 ¶ And the LORD commanded me [a]at that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it.

15 [b]Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves, (for ye saw no manner [c]of similitude on the day that the LORD spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire,)

16 Lest ye [d]corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, [e]the likeness of male or female;

17 The likeness of any beast that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl that flieth in the air;

18 The likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeness of any fish that is in the waters beneath the earth:

19 And lest thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and [f]when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, even all [g]the host of heaven, shouldest be driven to worship them, and serve them, [h]which the LORD thy God hath [‡]divided unto all nations under the whole heaven.

work. Those to whom God gives a charge, he will be sure to give encouragement to. And it is a comfort to the church's friends, (when they are dying and going off,) to see God's work likely to be carried on by other hands, when they are silent in the dust.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Nothing more hastens the destruction of sinners, than overlooking the examples of divine justice set before them for their warning, and rushing forward in the same steps which have brought others to a miserable end.—All those advantages, with which men are naturally pleased, eventually conduce to their more speedy ruin and deeper condemnation, whenever they increase their pride, security, and boldness in transgression: so far are riches, power, worldly wisdom, and courage, from profiting their ungodly possessors!—No arm can be strong when the contest is against the Almighty; and he that assaults the church, wages war against God. In this case especially "the battle is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift:" his most insolent and presumptuous enemies will soon lie down in despair; and his feeblest and most timid friends have no cause to fear.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. CAUTION AGAINST IDOLATRY.—Two sorts of idolatry God cautions them against. 1. The worship of images, however by them they might intend to worship the true God, as they had done in the golden calf; so changing the "truth of God into a lie," and his "glory into shame." The second commandment is expressly directed against this, and is here enlarged upon, ver. 15—18. "Take heed lest ye corrupt yourselves," that is, "lest ye debauch yourselves;" for they that think to make images of God, form in their minds such notions of him as must needs be an inlet to all impieties; and it is intimated that it is a spiritual adultery: "and take heed lest ye destroy yourselves. If any thing ruin you, this will be it. Whatever you do, make no similitude of God, either in a human shape, 'male or female;' or in the shape of any 'beast or fowl, serpent or fish;'" for the heathen worshipped their gods by images of all these kinds, being either not able to form, or not willing to admit that plain demonstration which we find, Hos. viii. 6. "The workman made it, therefore it is not God." To represent an infinite [illegible] an image, and the great Creator by the image of a creature, is the greatest [illegible] put upon God, and the greatest cheat we can put upon ourselves. As an [illegible] making images of God, he urges it very much upon them, that [illegible] when he spoke to them at Horeb, he did it by a voice of words which [illegible] hearing," and died in "the [illegible] would be a striking foil to [illegible]; the darkness made the fire in the midst of it look [illegible] the [illegible] are most delightful, and the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

20 But the LORD hath taken you, and brought you forth out of [t]the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him [k]a people of inheritance, as ye are this day.

21 Furthermore, [l]the LORD was angry with me for your sakes, and sware that I should not go over Jordan, and that I should not go in unto that good land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance;

22 But [m]I must die in this land, I must not go over Jordan: but ye shall go over, and possess that good land.

23 Take [n]heed unto yourselves, [o]lest ye forget the covenant of the LORD your God, which he made with you, and [p]make you a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, which the LORD thy God hath forbidden thee.

24 For the LORD thy [q]God is a consuming fire, even [r]a jealous God.

25 ¶ When thou shalt [s]beget children, and children's children, and ye shall have remained long in the land, and shall [t]corrupt yourselves, and make a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, and shall [u]do evil in the sight of the LORD thy God, to provoke him to anger;

26 I [x]call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that [y]ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land whereunto ye go over Jordan to possess it; ye shall not prolong your days upon it, but shall utterly be destroyed.

27 And the LORD shall [z]scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you.

28 And there [a]ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which [b]neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell.

29 But [c]if from thence thou shalt seek the LORD thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him [d]with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

30 When thou art in tribulation, and [e]all these things [f]are come upon thee, even [g]in the latter days, [h]if thou turn to the LORD thy God, and shalt be [i]obedient unto his voice;

31 (For [j]the LORD thy God is a merciful God;) he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor [k]forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he sware unto them.

32 For [l]ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask [m]from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it?

33 Did ever people [n]hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live?

34 Or hath God [o]assayed to go and [p]take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by [p]temptations, [q]by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and [r]by a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm, [s]and by great terrors, according to all that the LORD your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes?

35 Unto thee it was shewed, that thou mightest [t]know that the LORD he is God; there [u]is none else beside him.

36 Out [x]of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee; and upon earth he shewed thee his great fire; and thou heardest his words out of the midst of the fire.

37 And [y]because he loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after them, and brought thee out [z]in his sight [a]with his mighty power out of Egypt;

38 To [b]drive out nations from before thee greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in, to give thee their land for an inheritance, [c]as it is this day.

39 Know therefore this day, [d]and consider it in thine heart, that [e]the LORD he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none else.

40 Thou shalt [f]keep therefore his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that [g]it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, for ever.

41 ¶ Then Moses [h]severed three cities on this side Jordan, toward the sun-rising;

42 That [i]the slayer might flee thither, which should kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that, fleeing unto one of these cities, he might live:

43 Namely, [k]Bezer in the wilderness, in the plain country of the Reubenites; and [l]Ramoth in Gilead of the Gadites; and [m]Golan in Bashan of the Manassites.

44 ¶ And this [n]is the law [o] which Moses set before the children of Israel:

45 These [p]are the testimonies, and [q]the statutes, and the judgments, which Moses spake unto the children of Israel, after they came forth out of Egypt;

46 On [r]this side Jordan, in the valley [s]over against Beth-peor, in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heshbon, whom [t]Moses and the children of Israel smote, after they were come forth out of Egypt:

47 And they possessed his land, and [u]the land of Og king of Bashan, two kings of the Amorites, which were on this side Jordan, toward the sun-rising;

48 From [x]Aroer, which is by the bank of such a fire did not disperse. In allusion to this appearance upon mount Sinai, God is said to show himself for his people, and against his and their enemies, in fire and darkness together, Ps. xviii. 8, 9. He tells them again, ver. 36, what they saw, for he would have them never to forget it; he "showed thee his great fire." One flash of lightning, that fire from heaven, strikes an awe upon us; and some have observed that most creatures naturally turn their face toward the lightning, as ready to receive the impressions of it; but how dreadful then must a constant fire from heaven be! It gave an earnest of the day of judgment, in which "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed in flaming fire." As he reminds them of what they saw, so he tells them what they saw not; no manner of similitude, from which they might form either an idea of God in their fancies, or an image of God in their high places. By what we see of God, sufficient ground is given us to believe him to be a Being of infinite power and perfection, but no occasion given us to suspect him to have a body such as we have. 2. What they heard at mount Sinai, ver. 12, "'The Lord spake unto you' with an intelligible voice, in your own language, and you heard it." This he enlarges upon toward the close of his discourse, ver. 32, 33, 36. First, "They heard the voice of God, speaking out of heaven." God manifests himself to all the world in the works of creation, without speech or language, and yet their voice is heard, Ps. xix. 1—3, but to Israel he made himself known by speech and language, condescending to the weakness of the church's infant state. Here was the "voice of one crying in the wilderness, to prepare the way of the Lord." Secondly, They heard it "out of the midst of the fire," which showed that it was God himself that spake to them, for who else could dwell with devouring fire? God spake to Job out of the whirlwind, which was terrible; but to Israel out of the fire, which was more terrible. We have reason to be thankful that he does not thus speak to us, but by men like ourselves, "whose terror shall not make us afraid," Job xxxiii. 6, 7. Thirdly, They heard it and yet lived, ver. 33. It was a wonder of mercy that the fire did not devour them, or that they did not die for fear, when Moses himself trembled. Fourthly, Never any people heard the like. He bids them inquire of former days, and distant places, and they would find this favour of God to Israel without precedent or parallel, ver. 32. This singular honour done them, called for singular obedience from them. It might justly be expected that they should do more for God than other people, since God had done so much more for them.

MOTIVES TO OBEDIENCE.—Moses urges God's righteous appearance against them sometimes for their sins. He upbraids the matter of Peor, ver. 3, 4, this had happened very lately; their eyes had seen but the other day the sudden destruction of those that joined themselves to Baal-peor, and the preservation of those that clave to [illegible] from which they might easily infer the danger of apostacy from God, and the benefit of adherence to him. He also takes notice again of God's displeasure against himself, ver. 21, 22. "The Lord was angry with me for your sakes." He mentions this, to try their ingenuousness, whether they would really be troubled for the great prejudice which they had occasioned to their faithful friend and leader. Others' sufferings for our sakes should grieve us more than our own. He also urges the certain benefit and advantage of obedience. This argument he begins with, ver. 1. "That ye may live, and go in and possess the land;" and this he concludes with, ver. 40, "That it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee." He reminds them that they were upon their good behaviour, their prosperity would depend upon their piety. If they kept God's precepts, he would undoubtedly fulfil his promises. He urges, in fine, "the fatal consequences of their apostacy from God:" that it would undoubtedly be the ruin of their nation. This he enlarges upon, ver. 25—31: Where, (1.) He foresees their revolt from God to idols; that in process of time, when they had remained long in the land, and were settled upon their lees, they "would corrupt themselves, and make a graven image;" this was the sin that would most easily beset them, ver. 25. (2.) He foretells the judgments of God upon them for this, "Ye shall utterly be destroyed," ver. 26, "scattered among the nations," ver. 27. And their sin should be made their punishment, ver. 28. "'There shall ye serve gods, the work of men's hands;' be compelled to serve them, whether ye will or no; or, through your own sottishness and stupidity, you will find no better succours to apply yourselves to in your captivity." Those that cast off the duties of religion in their prosperity, cannot expect the comforts of it when they come to be in distress. Justly are they then sent to the "gods whom they have served," Judges x. 14. (3.) Yet he encourages them to hope that God would reserve mercy for them in the latter days; that he would by his judgments upon them bring them to repentance, and take them again into covenant with himself, ver. 29—31. Where observe, First, That whatever place we are in, we may "from thence seek the Lord our God," though never so remote from our own land, or from his holy temple. There is no part of this earth that has a gulf fixed between it and heaven. Secondly, They, and they only, shall find God to their comfort, who seek him with all their heart, that is, who are entirely devoted to him, and earnestly desirous of his favour, and solicitous to obtain it. Thirdly, Afflictions are sent to engage and quicken us to seek God, and, by the grace of God working with them, many are [illegible] reduced to their right mind. "When these things are come upon thee, it is to be hoped that thou wilt 'turn to the Lord thy God' for [illegible] that comes of [illegible] him," see Dan. ix. 11, 13. The covenant in Horeb, 1. The ten commandments, 6. At the people's request Moses receiveth the law from God, 22.

AND Moses called [a]all Israel, and said unto them, [b]Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and *keep and do them.

2 The LORD [c]our God made a covenant with us in Horeb.

3 The LORD [d]made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us,[1] even us, who are all of us here alive this day.

4 The [e]LORD talked with you face to face in the mount, out of the midst of the fire,

5 (I [f]stood between the LORD and you at that time, to shew you the word of the LORD: for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount,) saying,

6 ¶ [g]I am the LORD thy God, which [h]brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of †bondage.

7 Thou [i]shalt have none other gods before me.

8 Thou shalt not make thee any [k]graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth:

9 Thou [l]shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am [m]a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me,

10 And [n]shewing mercy unto thousands of them that [o]love me, and keep my commandments.

11 Thou [p]shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

12 [q]Keep[2] the sabbath-day to sanctify it, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee.

13 [r]Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work;

14 But the seventh day is [s]the sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor [t]thy stranger that is within thy gates; that [u]thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou.

15 And [x]remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt,[3] and that [y]the LORD thy God brought thee out thence [z]through a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm: therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath-day.

16 ¶ [a]Honour thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee; that [b]thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

17 Thou [c]shalt not kill.

18 Neither [d]shalt thou commit adultery.

19 Neither [e]shalt thou steal.

20 Neither [f]shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbour.

21 Neither [g]shalt thou desire thy neighbour's wife, neither shalt thou covet thy neighbour's house, his field, or his man-servant, or his maid-servant, or his ox, or his ass, or any thing that is thy neighbour's.

22 ¶ These [h]words the LORD spake unto all your assembly in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more: and [i]he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me.

23 And it came to pass, [k]when ye heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, (for the mountain did burn with fire,) that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders;

24 And ye said, Behold, the LORD our God hath shewed us his glory, and his greatness, and [l]we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire: we have seen this day that God doth talk with man, and [m]he liveth.

25 Now therefore why should we die? for [n]this great fire will consume us. If we [‡]hear the voice of the LORD our God any more, then we shall die.

26 For [o]who is there of [p]all flesh, that hath heard the voice of the [q]living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived?

27 Go thou near, and [r]hear all that the LORD our God shall say; and speak thou unto us all that the LORD our God shall speak unto thee, and we will hear it, and do it.

28 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, when ye spake unto me; and the LORD said unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have spoken unto thee: [s]they have well said all that they have spoken.

29 [t]O that there were such an heart in them,[4] that they would fear me, and [u]keep all my commandments always, [x]that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!

1 Though many who were present at Sinai were now dead, many also must have been still living; those only having perished in consequence of God's threats who were twenty years old and upwards, when they offended him by their murmurs; and even of those condemned to die in the wilderness, many might, like Moses, be suffered to behold the land, which they were not to enter. Moses, however, may perhaps mean only, that God made not that solemn covenant with their forefathers, the patriarchs, but with the generation of his contemporaries. —GRAY.

remember the covenant, we shall find that he has not forgotten it. Now, let all these arguments be laid together, and then say, whether religion has not reason on its side. None cast off the government of their God, but those that have first abandoned the understanding of a man.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—One speaks to us, of infinitely superior dignity to Moses, who, on our account, was not, like him, deprived merely of a greatly desired and much regretted temporal satisfaction, but who even bare the wrath and curse of God for our sins upon the cross, and felt the unspeakable agony in all its bitterness. And now, instead of the language and displays of fiery indignation, he pleads with us by his dying love, and in mild accents of mercy, not to neglect so great salvation. Nay, our God, while awfully jealous for the glory of his name, and "a consuming fire" to all impenitent sinners, is yet most merciful, ready to forgive, and willing to be gracious to all who turn to him in true repentance. If, then, after all our rebellions, we at last seek him with all our heart and with all our soul, and become obedient to his voice, (fleeing for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us,) he will yet pardon us, and ratify to us all the blessings of the everlasting covenant. But apostles, prophets, and ministers, will testify against us; yea, heaven and earth also, if we "refuse him that speaketh."—Scott.

CHAP. V. REPETITION OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.—1. There is some variation here from that record, Exod. xx. as there is between the Lord's prayer, as it is in Matt. vi. and as it is in Luke xi. In both it is more necessary that we tie ourselves to the things, than to the words unalterably. 2. The most considerable variation is in the fourth commandment, Exod. xx. the reason annexed is taken from the creation of the world; here it is taken from their deliverance out of Egypt, because that was typical of our redemption by Jesus Christ, in remembrance of which the Christian Sabbath was to be observed, ver. 15; "Remember that thou wast a servant, and God brought thee out." And therefore, 1. "It is fit that thy servants should be favoured with the Sabbath rest; for thou knowest the heart of a servant, and how welcome one day's ease will be after six days' labour." 2. "It is fit that thy God should be honoured by the Sabbath work, the religious services of the day, in consideration of the great things he has done for [illegible] the resurrection of Christ, we were brought into the glorious liberty of the [illegible] God, "with a mighty hand, and an outstretched arm;" therefore by the [illegible] the law, we are directed to observe the first day of the week, in remembrance [illegible] and grace. 3. It is added in the fifth command, [illegible] there be instances of some that have been very dutiful to their parents, and yet have not lived long upon earth, we may reconcile it to the promise, by this explication of it, Whether they live long or no, it shall go well with them, either in this world, or in a better. See Eccl. viii. 12. 4. The five last commandments are connected or coupled together, which they are not in Exodus; "Neither shalt thou commit adultery, neither shalt thou steal," &c. Which intimates that God's commands are all of a piece, the same authority that obliges us to one, obliges us to another, and we must not be partial in the law, but have respect to all God's commandments; for he that "offends in one point, is guilty of all," Jam. ii. 10, 11. 5. That these commandments were given with a great deal of awful solemnity, ver. 22. (1.) They were spoken with "a great voice out of the fire and thick darkness. That was a dispensation of terror, designed to make the gospel of grace the more welcome, and to be a specimen of the terrors of the judgment-day, Ps. l. 3, 4. (2.) "He added no more." What other laws he gave them, were sent by Moses, but no more were spoken in the same manner that the ten commandments were. "He added no more," therefore we must not add: the law of the Lord is perfect. (3.) "He wrote them in two tables of stone," that they might be preserved from corruption, and might be transmitted pure and entire to posterity, for whose use they were intended, as well as for the present generation.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The word of God is spoken to us, that we may learn, retain, and practice it: for in this all religion is ultimately centered, and without it the whole is but a dead carcase, not only worthless but abominable. Of this practice the divine law is the universal, immutable, and everlasting rule; but we transgressors have no disposition, ability, or encouragement to obey that law, but what is derived from the new covenant of mercy and grace, made with us through the mediation of Christ. He continually stands between the holy God and the sinner who comes by faith in his name, both to ensure his acceptance, and assist his obedience. The words he once spake on earth are written in the Scriptures, and from age to age sinners are invited to accede to his covenant, and share the promised blessings; which invitation cannot be finally refused, without ensuring eternal destruction, and nothing except such refusal can ruin us. But we must remember that good words may be spoken, good resolutions formed, and transient convictions experienced, even by those who persist in unbelief through prevailing pride and love of sin. Of such we may say, "Oh, that there were such an heart in them!" But we should also add a prayer for ourselves, and for each other; and beg of the Lord that he would give us such an heart, "that we may fear [illegible] and keep all his commandments always;" and we may present such a petition in [illegible] for the Lord [illegible] bestowing his blessings on those who have been taught

NOW these are [a]the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments, which the LORD your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go [*]to possess it;

2 That thou mightest [b]fear the LORD thy God, to keep all his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee; thou, [c]and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life, and that [d]thy days may be prolonged.

3 ¶ Hear therefore, O Israel, [e]and observe to do it; that it may be well with thee, and [f]that ye may increase mightily, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee, [g]in the land that floweth with milk and honey.

4 Hear, O Israel; [h]The LORD our God is one LORD:

5 And [i]thou shalt love the LORD thy God [k]with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

6 And these words, which I command thee this day, [l]shall be in thine heart;

7 And thou [m]shalt [†]teach them diligently unto thy children, and [n]shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

8 And [o]thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

9 And thou shalt [p]write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates.

10 And it shall be, when the LORD thy God shall have brought thee into [q]the land which he sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee [r]great and goodly cities, which thou buildedst not;

11 And houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not; and wells digged, which thou diggedst not; vineyards and olive-trees, which thou plantedst not; [s]when thou shalt have eaten, and be full;

12 Then beware lest thou forget the LORD, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of [‡]bondage.

13 Thou shalt [t]fear the LORD thy God, and serve him, and [u]shalt swear by his name.

14 Ye shall [x]not go after other gods, [y]of the gods of the people which are round about you;

15 (For the LORD thy God [z]is a jealous God among you;) [a]lest the anger of the LORD thy God be kindled against thee, and [b]destroy thee from off the face of the earth.

16 ¶ Ye shall not [c]tempt the LORD your God, as ye [d]tempted him in Massah.

17 Ye shall [*]diligently keep the commandments of the LORD your God, and his testimonies, and his statutes, which he hath commanded thee.

18 And thou [f]shalt do that which is right and good in the sight of the LORD; [g]that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest go in and possess the good land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, 19 To [h]cast out all thine enemies from before thee, as the LORD hath spoken.

20 ¶ And [i]when thy son asketh thee [§]in time to come, saying, What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which the LORD our God hath commanded you?

21 Then thou shalt say unto thy son, [k]We were Pharaoh's bond-men in Egypt, and the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand:

22 And the LORD [l]shewed signs and wonders, great and [‖]sore, upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his household, [m]before our eyes:

23 And he brought us out from thence, that he might bring us in, [n]to give us the land which he sware unto our fathers.

24 And the LORD commanded us to do all these statutes, to fear the LORD our God, [o]for our good always, that [p]he might preserve us alive, as it is at this day.

25 And [q]it shall be our righteousness,[1] if we observe to do all these commandments before the LORD our God, as he hath commanded us.

to value them, and to seek them in the name of Jesus Christ. Let sinners then tremble at this fiery law, and flee for refuge to the Saviour; let professed Christians examine carefully, whether their faith be accompanied with a desire of having that law written in their hearts, and reduced to practice in their whole conduct: and let believers make it more and more their study and delight, that they may do as the Lord God hath commanded them, without "turning aside to the right hand or to the left." Thus, by universal godliness, righteousness, temperance, patience, purity, and love, and an exact regard to every relative duty, they will best evince their faith, adorn the gospel, glorify the Lord, be useful to their fellow-creatures, entail a blessing on their children, and ripen for glory. In attending to these important concerns, we need repeated instructions and admonitions; let us then not deem it tedious to hear, read, and meditate frequently on the same truths and precepts; let us learn to hallow the Lord's Sabbaths, and set an example of attending on his ordinances: and remembering that our servants are of the same nature with ourselves, let us allow them also suitable relaxation from labour, and opportunity for hallowing the Sabbath, and learning the way of salvation.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. LOVE TO GOD.—Human laws can only take cognizance of the outward conduct; but the law of the heart-searching God requires LOVE, the seat of which is in the inmost soul. That love comprises a supreme valuation of his infinite excellency and amiableness; an entire desire of the knowledge and enjoyment of him as our felicity; cordial delight in contemplating his manifested glories, and in worshipping and obeying him; lively gratitude for all his innumerable and invaluable mercies; zeal for his glory, and an ardent desire that all our fellow-creatures, in conjunction with us, may thus know, love, worship, obey, and serve him. These dispositions and affections are required to be as large as the powers of the soul itself, and to engross and fill the whole, to the entire exclusion of all contrary affections, and the regulation and moderation of all other affections, in entire subordination and subserviency to this governing principle; so that nothing should in any sense, or in any degree, be loved by us, but for the sake, and according to the commandment, of God. Thus are we reasonably required to "love the LORD our God," both for what he is in himself, what he hath done for us, and what he is and will be to us; and that uniformly, constantly, perfectly, and progressively.—Whatever our natural capacities may be, or to whatever improvements we may, in this or in a future world, attain, the Lord commands us to give him the whole: and were our love thus perfect, our worship, obedience, and submission also would be perfect; nor could it ever possibly vary, or fall short of our whole strength and power, without a variation or diminution of this inward principle. Yet even this would admit of degrees and increase, from the first dawning of reason in the infant, (such as was the holy child Jesus,) in progressive enlargement, to the highest possible exaltation of the angel's nature. For no creature, to all eternity, can ever love God in measure equal to his excellency, which is infinite as his incomprehensible being: but each might and ought to love the Lord, to the utmost extent of all the powers which the Creator has bestowed on him. This would at once secure to God the glory due to his name, and to his creatures, that felicity of which he hath formed them capable. Thus it is with angels in heaven; thus it was with man before his apostacy. But, alas! the "carnal mind" of fallen man, "is enmity against God:" and as we all are by nature destitute of this love of God, we all love ourselves, the world, and our favourite sinful indulgences and pursuits, with all our heart, our mind, our soul, and strength, and therefore sacrifice every thing to these idols. But in regeneration an internal revolution takes place; the usurpers are dethroned, the Lord himself takes possession of the heart, and becomes the supreme object of our love: yet so long as sin dwelleth in us, we never love God according to the full perfection of this precept; but our love in all the exercises and effects of it, is often interrupted, and at best comparatively languid.—Scott.

CHILDREN TO BE INSTRUCTED.—1. Here is a proper question, which it is supposed the children would ask, ver. 20. "'What mean the testimonies and the statutes?' What is the meaning of the feasts we observe, the sacrifices we offer, and the many peculiar customs we keep up?" Observe, (1.) All divine institutions have a certain meaning, and there is something great designed in them. (2.) It concerns us to know and understand the meaning of them, that we may perform a reasonable service, and may not "offer the blind for sacrifice." (3.) It is good for children betimes to inquire into the true intent and meaning of the religious observances they are trained up in. To be thus inquisitive in divine things, is a good sign that they are concerned about them, and a good means of their attaining to a great acquaintance with them. "Then shall we know" if thus "we follow on to know." 2. Here is a full answer put into the parents' mouths to be given to this good question. Parents and teachers must give instruction to those under their charge, though they do not ask it, nay, though they have an aversion to it; much more must they be ready to answer questions, and to give instruction when it is desired; for it may be hoped, they that ask it, will be willing to receive it.——Henry.

CHAP. VII. THE FREENESS OF DIVINE GRACE.—There was nothing in the nation to recommend or entitle them to this favour. "In the multitude of the people is the king's honour," Prov. xiv. 28. But their number was inconsiderable; they were only seventy before thee, [b]the Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations [c]greater and mightier than thou;

2 And when the LORD thy God shall [d]deliver them before thee, thou shalt smite them, and [e]utterly destroy them; thou shalt [f]make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them:

3 Neither shalt thou [g]make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son.

4 For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods; [h]so will the anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

5 But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall [i]destroy their altars, and break down their *images, [k]and cut down their groves, and [l]burn their graven images with fire.

6 ¶ For thou art [m]an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee [n]to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.

7 The LORD [o]did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; (for [p]ye were the fewest of all people;)

8 But [q]because the LORD loved you, and because he would keep [r]the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath [s]the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bond-men, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt.

9 Know therefore that the LORD thy God, he is God, the [t]faithful God, [u]which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, and keep his commandments, to [x]a thousand generations;

10 And [y]repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be [z]slack to him that [a]hateth him, he will repay him to his face.

11 Thou shalt therefore [b]keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them.

12 ¶ Wherefore it shall come to pass, [†]if [c]ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, that [d]the LORD thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he sware unto thy fathers.

13 And [e]he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: [f]he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep, in the land which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee.

CHAP. VIII.

An exhortation to obedience, founded on God's dealings with them, and the consideration of this promise to them.

souls when they went down into Egypt, and though greatly increased there, yet there were many other nations more numerous; "Ye were the fewest of all people," ver. 7. The author of the Jerusalem Targum passes too great a compliment upon his nation, in his reading this, "Ye were humble in spirit, and meek above all people;" quite contrary. They were rather stiff-necked, and ill-natured, above all people. 1. God fetched the reason of it purely from himself, ver. 8. (1.) He loved you "because he would love you." Even so, Father, because it seemed good in thine eyes. All that God loves, he loves freely, Hos. xiv. 4. Those that perish, perish by their own merits, but all that are saved are saved by prerogative. (2.) He has done his work because he would keep his word. "He has brought you out of Egypt in pursuance of the oath sworn to your fathers." Nothing in them, or done by them, did or could make God a debtor to them; but he had made himself a debtor to his own promise, which he would perform notwithstanding their unworthiness. The tenor of the covenant into which they were taken; it was, in short, this, That as they were to God, so God would be to them. They should certainly find him, 2. "Kind to his friends," ver. 9. "The Lord thy God is not like the gods of the nations, the creatures of fancy, subjects fit enough for loose poetry, but no proper objects for serious devotion; no, he is God, God indeed, God alone, the faithful God, able and ready not only to fulfil his own promises, but to answer all the just expectations of his worshippers, and he will certainly keep covenant and mercy," that is, "show mercy according to covenant, to [t]them that love him and keep his commandments;'" (and in vain do we pretend to love him, if we do not make conscience of his commandments;) "and this," (as is here added for the explication of the promise in the second commandment,) "not only to thousands of persons, but to thousands of generations. So inexhaustible is the fountain, so constant the streams!" 3. Just to his enemies, he "repayeth them that hate him," ver. 10. Note, (1.) Wilful sinners are haters of God; for the carnal mind is enmity against him. Idolaters are so in a special manner, for they are in league with his rivals. (2.) Those that hate God cannot hurt him, but certainly ruin themselves. He will repay them to their face, in defiance of them and all their impotent malice. His arrows are said to be "made ready against the face of them," Ps. xxi. 12.

FAITH GIVES COURAGE.—The difficulty and doubtfulness of the conquest of Canaan having been a stone of stumbling to their fathers, Moses here animates them against those things which were most likely to discourage them, bidding them not to be "afraid of them," ver. 18. And again, ver. 21, 1. Let them not be disheartened by the number and strength of their enemies. "Say not, They are more then I, how can I dispossess them?" ver. 17. We are apt to think that the most numerous must needs be victorious: but to fortify them against this temptation, he reminds them of the destruction of Pharaoh and all the power of Egypt, ver. 18, 19. 2. Let them not be disheartened by the weakness and deficiency of their own forces; for God will send them in auxiliary troops of hornets, or wasps, as some read it, ver. 20, probably larger than ordinary, which should so terrify and molest their enemies, (and perhaps be the death of many of them,) that their most numerous armies would become an easy prey to Israel. God plagued the Egyptians with flies, but the Canaanites with hornets. Those who take not warning by lesser judgments on others, may expect greater on themselves. But their great encouragement was, that they had God among them, a "mighty God and terrible," ver. 21. And if God be for us, if God be with us, we need not fear the power of any creature against us. 3. Let them not be disheartened by the slow progress of their arms, nor think that the Canaanites would never be subdued, if they were not expelled the first year; no, they must be "put out by little and little," and not "all at once," ver. 22. Note, We must not think, that because the deliverance of the church, and the destruction of its enemies, are not effected immediately, therefore it will never be effected; God will do his own work in his own method and time, and we may be sure that they are always the best. Thus corruption is driven out of the hearts of believers "by little and little." The work of sanctification is carried on gradually; but that judgment will at length be brought forth into a complete victory. The reason here given (as before, Exod. xxiii. 29, 30,) is, "Lest the beast of the field increase upon thee." The earth God has given to the children of men; and therefore there shall rather be a remainder of Canaanites to keep possession till Israel become numerous enough to replenish it, than that it should be a habitation of dragons, and a court for "the wild beasts of the desert," Isa. xxxiv. 13, 14. Yet God could have prevented this mischief from the beasts, Lev. xxvi. 6. But pride and security, and other sins that are the common effects of a settled prosperity, were the enemies more dangerous than the beasts of the field, that would be apt to increase upon them.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—All the commandments of God are equally the result of infinite wisdom, justice and goodness; but not alike level to our comprehension, and suited to our ideas. Assured, therefore, that the righteous Lord will not do unrighteously, but exercise his sovereignty with perfect equity, whether we can perceive it or no; when he commands, it is our duty unreservedly to obey; and this is the never-failing effect of true and strong faith.—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. DISCIPLINE.—The Israelites were afflicted, and proved, in order that they might be humbled. They were not previously aware of the wickedness of their own hearts, and never suspected that they were capable of such crimes as they actually committed:

ALL the commandments which I command thee this day shall [a]ye observe to do, that ye may live, and multiply, and go in and possess the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers.

2 And thou shalt [b]remember all the way which the LORD thy God [c]led thee these forty years in the wilderness, [d]to humble thee, and to [e]prove thee, [f]to know what was in thine heart,[1] whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no.

3 And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and [g]fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that he might make thee know that man [h]doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the LORD doth man live.

4 Thy [i]raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years.

5 Thou shalt also [k]consider in thine heart, that, [l]as a man chasteneth his son, so the LORD thy God chasteneth thee.

6 Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, to [m]walk in his ways, and to fear him.

7 For the LORD thy God bringeth thee into a good land; [n]a land of brooks of water, of fountains, and depths that spring out of valleys and hills;

8 A land of [o]wheat, and [p]barley, and [q]vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates; a land of *oil-olive and honey;

9 A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land [r]whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

10 When [s]thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the LORD thy God for the good land which he hath given thee.

11 [t]Beware that thou forget not the LORD thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day:

12 Lest [u]when thou hast eaten and art full, [x]and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein;

13 And when [y]thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied;

14 Then [z]thine heart be lifted up, [a]and thou forget the LORD thy God, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage;

15 Who [b]led thee through that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were [c]fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought, where there was no water; [d]who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint;

CHAP. IX.

Moses dissuadeth them from the opinion of their own righteousness, by rehearsing their several rebellions.

HEAR, O Israel: Thou art to [a]pass over Jordan this day, to go in to possess [b]nations greater and mightier than thyself, [c]cities great, and fenced up to heaven;

2 A people [d]great and tall, the children of the Anakims,[1] whom thou knowest, and of whom thou hast heard say, [e]Who can stand before the children of Anak?

3 [f]Understand therefore this day, that the LORD thy God is he which [g]goeth over before thee; as [h]a consuming fire [i]he shall destroy them, and he shall bring them down before thy face: so shalt thou drive them out, and destroy them quickly, as the LORD hath said unto thee.

4 [k]Speak not thou in thine heart, after that the LORD thy God hath cast them out from before thee, saying, For my righteousness the LORD hath brought me in to possess this land; but [l]for the wickedness of these nations the LORD doth drive them out from before thee.

5 Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart, dost thou go to possess their land; but for the wickedness of these nations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and [m]that he may perform the word which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

6 [n]Understand therefore, that the LORD thy God giveth thee not this good land to possess it for thy righteousness; for thou art [o]a stiff-necked people.

but the Lord well knew all their latent evil propensities; and for their good, and that of multitudes in every age to the end of the world, he was pleased to put them to the proof; that upon full and fair trial their real character might be ascertained. They were, therefore, led through a variety of difficult circumstances; and were favoured by manifold miraculous evidences of the Lord's special presence with them, and regard to them. They were sometimes thwarted, at other times indulged: they were brought into dangers and straits, and miraculously delivered: they were disappointed in many expectations, and favoured in many things beyond expectation: they were sometimes severely punished for their sins, that they might take warning; and at other times mercifully pardoned, that they might take courage. But the result of the trial undeniably was, that they were always prone to distrust, to murmur, and to be ungrateful: they were invariably disposed to depreciate their mercies, and to magnify their trials and difficulties as intolerable and insuperable; to limit the power and suspect the loving kindness of the Lord, after all their experience of both; to lust, envy, and rebel; to mutiny, apostatize, and fall into idolatry. In short, it appeared that they were so stiffnecked and hard-hearted, that no patience, but the infinite patience of God, could have borne with them: nor could they be restrained from the most desperate rebellions, but by the terrible examples of thousands struck dead by the avenging hand of divine justice. All this had a direct tendency, when reflected on, to convert their self-admiration into self-abhorrence; to render them sensible of their guilt, folly, and weakness; and to bring them to a suitable conviction of their entire dependence upon the mercy of God for every thing, and their manifold obligations to him for his goodness to them in times past; and finally to produce, and preserve, that "poverty of spirit," which is radically necessary to the life of faith and the walk with God. They should likewise be considered as a fair specimen of human nature: any other people, any individual, proved as they were, would appear as vile as they do, were the result as impartially recorded.—Scott.

SIN OF FORGETTING GOD.—"Forget not thy duty to God," ver. 11. We forget God, if we keep not his commandments; we forget his authority over us, and our obligations to him, and expectations from him, if we are not obedient to his laws. When men grow rich, they are tempted to think religion a needless thing; they are happy without it; think it a thing below them, and too hard upon them; their dignity forbids them to stoop, and their liberty forbids them to serve. But we are basely ungrateful, if, the better God is to us, the worse we are to him. "Forget not God's former dealings with thee. Thy deliverance out of Egypt, ver. 14. The provision he made for thee in the wilderness, that great and terrible wilderness;" they must never forget the impressions which the horror of that wilderness made upon them: see Jer. ii. 6, where it is called the very "shadow of death." There God preserved them from being destroyed by the fiery serpents and scorpions, though sometimes he made use of them for their correction: there he kept them from perishing for want of water, following them with water out of a rock of flint, ver. 15. Out of which (says Bishop Patrick) one would rather have expected fire than water. There he fed them with manna, taking care to keep them alive, that he might "do them good at their latter end," ver. 16. Note, God reserves the best till the last for his Israel. However he may seem to deal hardly with them by the way, he will not fail to do them good at their latter end. "Forget not God's hand in thy present prosperity, ver. 18. Remember, it is he that giveth thee wealth; for he 'giveth thee power to get wealth.'" See here how God's giving and our getting are reconciled, and apply it to spiritual wealth. It is our duty to get wisdom, and above all our gettings to get understanding; and yet it is God's grace that gives wisdom, and when we have got it, we must not say, It was the might of our hand that got it, but must own it was God that gave us power to get it, and therefore to him we must give the praise, and consecrate the use of it.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Our obedience cannot be sincere, unless we "observe to do all the commandments of the LORD;" so that whilst any one is broken, with allowance and habitually, that is a conclusive proof of hypocrisy.—In order to sinful man's rendering to God acceptable obedience, he must be humbled, and proved, and made sensible of his weakness, sinfulness, and misery. And when the severest chastenings and the most painful experiences effect this conviction, they are evidences of the Lord's special love, and of his merciful intention "of doing us good at the latter end," which should make us thankful for them. Indeed, it is impossible that we can be truly penitent, or believe in Christ, and love him; or become meek, patient, and forgiving; or attain to any part of the Christian temper and character, without humiliation.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. ISRAEL'S REPEATED PROVOCATIONS.—1. They had been a provoking people ever since they came out of Egypt, ver. 7, "Forty years long," from first to last, were God and Moses grieved with them. It is a very sad character Moses now at parting leaves of them, ver. 24, "Ye have been rebellious since the day I knew you." No sooner were they formed into a people, than there was a faction formed among them, which upon all occasions made head against God and his government. Though the Mosaic history records little more than the occurrences of the first and last year of the forty, yet it seems by this general account, that the rest of the years were not much better, but one continued provocation. 2. Even in Horeb they made a calf and worshipped it, ver. 8, &c. That was a sin so heinous, and by several aggravations made so exceeding

7 ¶ [p]Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedst the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderness: [q]from the day that thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the LORD.

8 Also [r]in Horeb ye provoked the LORD to wrath, so that the LORD was angry with you, to have destroyed you.

9 When [s]I was gone up into the mount, to receive the tables of stone, even [t]the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, [u]then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; [x]I neither did eat bread nor drink water:

10 And the LORD delivered unto me two tables of stone, [y]written with the finger of God: and on them was written according to [z]all the words which the LORD spake with you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly.

11 And it came to pass, at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of stone, even [a]the tables of the covenant.

12 And the LORD said unto me, [b]Arise, get thee down quickly from hence; for thy people which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have [c]corrupted themselves; they [d]are quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image.

13 Furthermore the LORD spake unto me, saying, [e]I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a [f]stiff-necked people.

14 [g]Let me alone, that I may destroy them,[2] and [h] blot out their name from under heaven: [i]and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.

15 So [k]I turned, and came down from the mount, and [l]the mount burned with fire; and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands.

16 And [m]I looked, and, behold, ye had sinned against the LORD your God, and had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aside quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you.

17 And I took the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes.

18 And [n]I fell down before the LORD, as at the first, forty days and forty nights: I did neither eat bread nor drink water, because of all your sins, which ye sinned, in doing wickedly in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

19 (For [o]I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the LORD was wroth against you to destroy you.) [p]But the LORD hearkened unto me at that time also.

20 And the LORD was [q]very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time.

21 And [r]I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamped it, and ground it very small, even until it was as small as dust: and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount.

22 And at [s]Taberah, and at [t]Massah, and at [u]Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the LORD to wrath.

23 Likewise [x]when the LORD sent you from Kadesh-barnea, saying, Go up and possess the land which I have given you; then [y]ye rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God, and [z]ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice.

24 Ye have been [a]rebellious against the LORD from the day that I knew you.

25 Thus [b]I fell down before the LORD forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the first; because the LORD had said he would destroy you.

26 I [c]prayed therefore unto the LORD, and said, O Lord GOD, destroy not thy people, and thine inheritance, [d]which thou hast redeemed through thy greatness, [e]which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

27 [f]Remember thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; [g]look not unto the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin;[3]

28 Lest the land[4] whence thou broughtest us out say, [h]Because the LORD was not able to bring them into the land which he promised them, and because he hated them, he hath brought them out to slay them in the wilderness.

29 Yet [i]they are thy people, and thine inheritance, [k]which thou broughtest out by thy mighty power, and by thy stretched-out arm.

[3] The word stubbornness seems to relate to their very evil disposition of mind; and their wickedness, to all their undutiful murmurings; and their sin, to their idolatry, which is often called in Scripture peculiarly by the name of sin, it being the highest provocation, from whence sprang all manner of wickedness. Thus Jeroboam is said to have made Israel to sin, by setting up the calves at Dan and Bethel to be worshipped.—PATRICK.

sinful, that they deserved upon all occasions to be upbraided with it. It was done in the very place where the law was given, by which they were expressly forbidden to worship God by images; and while the mountain was yet burning before their eyes, and Moses was gone up to fetch them the law in writing, they turned aside quickly, ver. 16. 3. God was very angry with them for their sin. Let them not think that God overlooked what they did amiss, and gave them Canaan for what was good among them. No, God had determined to destroy them, ver. 8, could easily have done it, and had been no loser by it; he even desired Moses to let him alone that he might do it, ver. 13, 14. By this it appeared how heinous their sin was, for God is never angry with any above what there is cause for, as men often are. Moses himself, though a friend and favourite, trembled at the revelation of God's wrath from heaven, against their ungodliness and unrighteousness, ver. 19, "I was afraid of the anger of the Lord;" afraid, perhaps, not for them only, but for himself, Ps. cxix. 120. 4. They had by their sin broken covenant with God, and forfeited all the privileges of the covenant, which Moses signified to them by "breaking the tables," ver. 17. A bill of divorce was given them, and from thenceforward they might justly have been abandoned for ever; so that their mouth was certainly stopped from pleading any righteousness of their own. God had, in effect, disowned them, when he said to Moses, ver. 12, "They are thy people, they are none of mine, nor shall they be dealt with as mine." 5. Aaron himself fell under God's displeasure for it, though he was the saint of the Lord, and was only brought by surprise or terror to be confederate with them in the sin, ver. 20, "The Lord was very angry with Aaron." No man's place or character can shelter him from the wrath of God, if he have "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Aaron that should have made atonement for them, if the iniquity could have been purged away by sacrifice and offering, did himself fall under the wrath of God: so little did they consider what they did, when they drew him in. 6. It was with great difficulty, and very long attendance, that Moses himself prevailed to turn away the wrath of God, and prevent their utter ruin. He fasted and prayed full forty days and forty nights, before he could obtain their pardon, ver. 18. And some think, twice forty days, ver. 25. Because it is said, "As I fell down before," whereas his errand in the first forty was not of that nature. Others think it was but one forty, though twice mentioned, and again, chap. x. 10. But that was enough to make them sensible how great God's displeasure was against them, and what a narrow escape they had for their lives.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—So strong is our propensity to pride, that it will intrude under one pretence or another: and if it be evident that the might of our arm hath not gotten us our wealth, we shall be ready to conceive that our righteousness hath merited and procured for us the special favour of the Lord; though in reality our wickedness be more evident than our weakness. To remove that ignorance or forgetfulness, which occasions the increase of this absurd self-adulation, ministers must labour and be willing to give offence, by declaring to the people their transgressions; and must not only lay the facts before their eyes, but argue from them, and apply the subject to their consciences for conviction.—When the secret history of each individual shall be produced at the day of judgment, "every mouth will be stopped, and all the world will be proved guilty before God." As we are spared in infinite mercy, we should anticipate that solemn season, and be glad of every assistance in reviewing our past conduct; that, judging and condemning ourselves in this world, we may not be then judged and condemned of the Lord. For now One intercedeth for us before the mercy-seat, who not only fasted forty days, but "died upon the cross," for our sins; through whom we may approach and supplicate for unmerited mercy, and eternal life as the gift of God in him. And "for his sake, not for our righteousness, but for the praise of his glory," and according to the tenour of the covenant of grace, the Lord bestows these blessings upon us: and though we have the verdict of our own consciences against us, that "we have been rebellious" from the beginning of our lives, yea, stubborn and stiffnecked; yet when we humbly call on him, he will save us, write his law in our hearts, and not suffer our enemies to triumph in our destruction.—Alas! that even believers should have so many Massahs, and Taberahs, and Kibroth-hataavahs, to remember! yet we should by no means forget them; but thence draw arguments for deeper humility, more lively gratitude, more simple dependence, and more earnest prayers for the grace of God to hold up our goings in his ways; and for a more watchful walk, and a life more devoted to his service.—Scott.

CHAP. X. THE TRUE CIRCUMCISION.—Moses here cautioned the people not to rest in the outward seal of circumcision, by which they were distinguished as the professed worshippers of JEHOVAH; but to seek earnestly that inward renewal to the divine image, and mortification of all depraved affections, of which circumcision was the outward sign, and which distinguishes the spiritual worshipper. The figurative language here used, denotes the removal of that blindness from the understanding, that obstinacy and perverseness from the will, and that insensibility, carnal self-love, and idolatrous love of worldly things, which render us morally incapable of loving God according to his commandments, or profiting either by his mercies or his judgments. This change is therefore the subject both of promises and of precepts. As we ought to love God with our whole heart, it must be our duty to remove whatever prevents our thus loving him; first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in mine hand.

4 And [r]he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, [s]the ten *commandments, [h]which the LORD spake unto you in the mount, [i]out of the midst of the fire, [k]in the day of the assembly: and the LORD gave them unto me.

5 And [l]I turned myself, and came down from the mount, and [m]put the tables in the ark which I had made; and [n]there they be, as the LORD commanded me.

6 ¶ And the children of Israel [o]took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan to [p]Mosera: [q]there Aaron died, and there he was buried; and Eleazar his son ministered in the priest's office in his stead.

7 From thence they journeyed unto Gudgodah; and from Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters.

8 ¶ At that time [r]the LORD separated the tribe of Levi, to [s]bear the ark of the covenant of the LORD, [t]to stand before the LORD to minister unto him, and [u]to bless in his name, unto this day.

9 Wherefore [x]Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren; the LORD is his inheritance, according as the LORD thy God promised him.

10 ¶ And [y]I stayed in the mount, according to the †first time, forty days and forty nights; and [z]the LORD hearkened unto me at that time also, and the LORD would not destroy thee.

11 And the LORD said unto me, [a]Arise, ‡take thy journey before the people, that they may go in and possess the land which I sware unto their fathers to give unto them.

12 ¶ And now, Israel, [b]what doth the LORD thy God require of thee, but [c]to fear the LORD thy God, [d]to walk in all his ways, and [e]to love him, and to serve the LORD thy God [f]with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, 13 To keep the commandments of the LORD, and his statutes, which I command thee this day [g]for thy good?

14 Behold, [h]the heaven, and the heaven of heavens, is the LORD'S thy God, [i]the earth also, with all that therein is.

15 Only the LORD [k]had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day.

16 [l]Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more [m]stiffnecked.

17 For the LORD your God is [n]God of gods,[1] and [o]Lord of lords, [p]a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which [q]regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward.

18 He [r]doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow, and [s]loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment.

19 [t]Love ye therefore the stranger: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou shalt [u]fear the LORD thy God; him shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou [x]cleave, and [y]swear by his name.

21 He is [z]thy praise,[2] and he is thy God, [a]that hath done for thee these great and terrible things which thine eyes have seen.

22 Thy fathers went down into Egypt [b]with threescore and ten persons; and now the LORD thy God hath made thee [c]as the stars of heaven for multitude.

CHAP. XI.

An exhortation to obedience, 1. A blessing and a curse are set before them, 26.

THEREFORE [a]thou shalt love the LORD thy God, and [b]keep his charge, and [c]his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments, alway.

2 And [d]know ye this day: for I speak not with your children which have not known, and which have not seen [e]the chastisement of the LORD your God, [f]his greatness, [g]his mighty hand, and his stretched-out arm;

3 And [h]his miracles, and his acts, which he did in the midst of Egypt unto Pharaoh the king of Egypt, and unto all his land;

4 And what he did unto the army of Egypt, unto their horses, and to their chariots: [i]how he made the water of the Red sea to overflow them, as they pursued after you, and how the LORD hath destroyed them unto this day;

5 And [k]what he did unto you in the wilderness, until ye came into this place;

6 And what [l]he did unto Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, the son of Reuben: how the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their households, and their tents, and all the *substance that was †in their possession, in the midst of all Israel.

7 But [m]your eyes have seen all the great acts of the LORD, which he did.

8 [n]Therefore shall ye keep all the commandments which I command you this day, [o]that ye may be strong, and go in and possess the land whither ye go to possess it;

9 And that ye may [p]prolong your days in the land which the LORD [q]sware unto your fathers to give unto them, and to their seed, [r]a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 ¶ For the land, whither thou goest in and we are accordingly commanded to do so. (Ezek. xviii. 30—32; Acts iii. 19.) But we are, as fallen sinners, of a contrary disposition; and this contrariety to God and his law is original sin, the source of all our actual trangressions, and the very essence of guilt and misery; "because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be; so then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." In this condition the gospel addresses us, with invitations, promises, and precepts: and when we are convinced of the reasonableness and necessity of the required change, and perceive our utter inability to effect it, we have recourse to the promises; and pleading them in prayer, as well as using all other means of grace, we wait on the Lord to work it in us, nor do we ever wait and trust in vain.—Scott.

LOVE TO MANKIND.—We are here taught our duty to our neighbour, ver. 19, "Love ye the stranger." And if the stranger, much more our brethren, as ourselves. If the Israelites, that were such a peculiar people, so particularly distinguished from all people, must be kind to strangers, much more must we, that are not enclosed in such a pale; we must have a tender concern for all that share with us in the human nature, and, "as we have opportunity," that is, according to their necessities and our abilities, we must "do good unto all men." Two arguments are here urged to enforce this duty: 1. God's common providence, which extends itself to all nations of men, they being all "made of one blood." God "loveth the stranger," ver. 18, that is, he gives to all life, and breath, and all things, even to those that are Gentiles, and "strangers to the commonwealth of Israel," and to Israel's God. He knows those perfectly whom we know nothing of. He gives "food and raiment" even to those to whom he has not showed his word and statutes. God's common gifts to mankind oblige us to honour all men. Or, it denotes the particular care which Providence takes of strangers in distress, which we ought to praise him for, (Ps. cxlvi. 9, the "Lord preserveth the strangers,") and to imitate him, to serve him, and concur with him, therein, being forward to make ourselves instruments in his hand of kindness to strangers. 2. The afflicted condition which the Israelites themselves had been in, when they were strangers in Egypt. They that have themselves been in distress, and have found mercy with God, should sympathize most feelingly with those that are in the like distress, and be ready to show kindness to them. The people of the Jews, notwithstanding these repeated commands given them to be kind to strangers, conceived a rooted antipathy to the Gentiles, whom they looked upon with the utmost disdain, which made them envy them the grace of God, and the gospel of Christ, and that brought a final ruin upon themselves.

GOD'S GREATNESS.—What is it that is thought to make a man great, but great honour, power, and possessions? Think then how great the Lord our God is, and greatly to be feared. 1. He has great honour, a name above every name, ver. 17. He is "God of gods, and Lord of lords." Angels are called gods, so are magistrates, and the Gentiles had "gods many, and lords many," the creatures of their own fancy, but God is infinitely above all these nominal deities. What an absurdity would it be for them to worship other gods, when the God to whom they had sworn allegiance was the "God of gods!" 2. He has great power. He is a "mighty God and terrible," ver. 17, "which regardeth not persons." He has the power of a conqueror, and so he is terrible to those that resist and rebel against him. He has the power of a judge, and so he is just to all those that appeal to him, or appear before him. And it is as much the greatness and honour of a judge to be impartial in his justice, without respect to persons or bribes, as it is to a general to be terrible to the enemy. Our God is both. 3. He has great possessions. Heaven and earth are his, ver. 14, and all the hosts and stars of both. Therefore he is able to bear us out in his service, and to make up the losses we sustain in discharging our duty to him. And yet therefore he has no need of us, or any thing we have or can do; we are undone without him; but he is happy without us.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. BLESSING OF GOD—CANAAN.—Keep the commandments, keep all the commandments "which I command you this day: love God, and serve him with all your heart." 1. Because this was the way to get and keep possession of the promised land. (1.) It was the way to get possession, ver. 8, "That ye may be strong" for war, and so "go in and possess it." So little did they know either of hardship or hazard in the wars of Canaan, that he does not say they should go in and fight for it: no, they had nothing in effect to do but go in and possess it. He does not go about to teach them the art of war, how to draw the bow, and use the sword, and keep ranks, that they might be strong, and go in and possess the land; no, but let them "keep God's commandments," and their religion, while they were true to it, will be their strength, and secure their success. (2.) It was the way to keep possession, ver. 9. "That ye may prolong your days in this land" that your eye is upon. Sin tends to the shortening of the days of particular persons, and to the shortening of the days of a people's prosperity; but obedience will be a lengthening out of their tranquillity. 2. Because the land of Canaan, into which they were going, had a more sensible dependence upon the blessing of heaven, than the land of Egypt had, ver. 10—12. Egypt was a country fruitful enough, but it was all flat, and was watered, not as other countries, with rain, (it is said of Egypt, Zech. xiv. 18, that it has no rain,) but by the overflowing of the river Nile at a certain season of the year; to the improving of which there was necessary a great deal of the art and labour of the husbandman; so that in Egypt a man must bestow as much cost 14 That [z]I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain, and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil.

15 And [a]I will [b]send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest [c]eat, and be full.

16 [d]Take heed to yourselves, that [e]your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them;

17 And then [f]the LORD's wrath be kindled against you, and he [g]shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit; and lest [h]ye perish quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you.

18 ¶ Therefore shall [i]ye lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for [k]a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.

19 And [l]ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

20 And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates;

21 That [m]your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers to give them, [n]as the days of heaven upon the earth.

22 ¶ For [o]if ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you, to do them, [p]to love the LORD your God, to walk in all his ways, and [q]to cleave unto him;

23 Then will the LORD [r]drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations and mightier than yourselves.

24 [s]Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea, shall your coast be.

25 There shall [t]no man be able to stand before you: for the LORD your God shall lay the fear of you, and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, [u]as he hath said unto you.

26 ¶ Behold, [v]I set before you this day a blessing and a curse;[2]

27 [x]A blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you this day:

28 And [y]a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the LORD your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods, which ye have not known.

29 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goest to possess it, that thou shalt [z]put the blessing upon mount Gerizim, and the curse upon mount Ebal.

30 Are they not on the other side Jordan, by the way where the sun goeth down, in the land of the Canaanites, which dwell in the champaign over against [a]Gilgal, beside the plains of Moreh?

31 For [b]ye shall pass over Jordan, to go in to possess the land which the LORD your God giveth you, and ye shall possess it, and dwell therein.

32 And [c]ye shall observe to do all the statutes and judgments which I set before you this day.

CHAP. XII.

Monuments of idolatry are to be destroyed, 1. The place of God's service is to be kept, 5. Blood forbidden, 15. Holy things to be eaten in the holy place, 17. The Levite not to be forsaken, 19.

THESE are [a]the statutes and judgments which ye shall observe to do in the land which the LORD God of thy fathers giveth thee to possess it, [b]all the days that ye live upon the earth.

2 Ye shall [c]utterly destroy all the places wherein the nations which ye shall [*]possess served their gods, [d]upon the high mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree.

3 And ye shall [†]overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, [e]and burn their groves with fire; and ye shall hew down the graven images of their gods, [f]and destroy the names of them out of that place.

4 ¶ Ye [g]shall not do so unto the LORD your God.

5 But [h]unto the place which the LORD your God shall choose out of all your tribes to put his name there, even unto his [i]habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come:

6 And thither ye shall bring [k]your burnt-

[1] It is done by the help of machines, one of which Philo describes, as a wheel, which a man turns with the motion of his feet, by ascending successively the several steps within it, holding in his hands a stay, or rail, placed before him, which is not moveable. This is what Moses means by saying, that in Egypt they water the earth with their feet.—CALMET.

and pains upon a field, as upon a garden of herbs. And this made them the more apt to imagine that the power of their own hands got them this wealth. But the land of Canaan was an uneven country, a land of hills and valleys, which not only gave a more pleasing prospect to the eye, but yielded a greater variety of soils for the several purposes of the husbandman. It was a land that had no great rivers in it, except Jordan, but "drank water of the rain of heaven." And so, (1.) Saved them a great deal of labour. While the Egyptians were ditching and guttering in the fields up to the knees in mud, to bring water to their land, which otherwise would soon become like the heath in the wilderness, the Israelites could sit in their houses, warm and easy, and leave it to God to water their land with the former and the latter rain, which is called "the river of God," (Psal. lxv. 9,) perhaps in allusion to, and contempt of, the river of Egypt, which that nation was so proud of. Note, The better God has provided, by our outward condition, for our ease and convenience, the more we should abound in his service: the less we have to do for our bodies, the more we should do for God and our souls.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—All the Lord's kindness to us, all his wonderful works, his awful judgments, and his precious promises, are intended to teach and induce our love and obedience to him; without which our faith is dead, our knowledge vain, our hope delusion and presumption, and we must be miserable for ever.—Upon condition of perfect love and obedience, the law of God sets before us a blessing; denouncing also a curse upon the disobedient: but we have broken the law, and are under its curse, without remedy from ourselves. In infinite mercy, however, the gospel again sets before us "a blessing and a curse; a blessing if we obey" the call to repentance, faith, and newness of life; but an awful curse, if we neglect so great salvation. Let us then thankfully welcome these glad tidings of great joy; and "give the more earnest heed to the things that we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip:" let us not harden our hearts, but hear this voice of God whilst it is called to-day, and whilst he so kindly invites us to come to him upon a mercy-seat. Urged on by fear of coming short, animated by hope of obtaining the prize, and drawn by love, let us "give diligence to make our calling and election sure." And, recollecting all that we have heard, learned, and experienced of the Lord's power, faithfulness, righteousness, and mercy, from our very youth, let us bear testimony of them to the rising generation. Indeed, we should make these the subjects of our daily converse, and endeavour to bequeath them as a legacy to our children: that they, as well as we, may be "strong in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," encouraged in fighting the good fight of faith; made conquerors over every enemy; and obtain an inheritance in that better land, which the eyes of the Lord watch over, and the glory of the Lord shineth upon and blesseth, to all eternity.—We should not however forget, that we have no reason to expect even temporal comforts, personal, domestic, or public; or the continuance of our external religious advantages, by which the Lord hath hitherto shown his constant care of this land, except as we cleave to him in fear and love, and holy obedience; for in all things sin and misery are most closely connected.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. MONUMENTS OF IDOLATRY.—Among these monuments of idolatry, no mention is made of temples; and it is probable that the tabernacle in the wilderness was the first building ever formed, as an habitation for the Deity; and that a misunderstanding of its meaning and intention gave rise to the custom of building temples in after ages. Before this men seem to have worshipped in high, or in shady places, as favourable to contemplation, or as supposed peculiarly sacred to the Deity, which custom was in many countries retained long afterwards. But the Israelites were strictly enjoined to destroy every thing, which could keep up the memory, that such and such places had been sacred to this or the other idol; and even, as far as possible, to erase from the memory of man the very names of their false gods; that the idolatry itself might sink into oblivion, through all the land of their inheritance. And especially, they must by no means imitate the Canaanites, by offering sacrifices in such places as they chose for themselves, however suitable they might think they were for that purpose.

ONE CENTRAL SPOT OF WORSHIP.—The people had before been directed to bring all their sacrifices to the door of the tabernacle. But at this time the general command was particularly explained, with reference to the promised land; and was expatiated on in a manner which evinced that it was of great importance. Idolatry and superstition would be prevented, and the true object and prescribed method of worship adhered to, when all the sacrifices were offered at the same place, by the priests appointed for that purpose. Brotherly love and harmony in religion would be promoted, by the people thus constantly meeting together, from every part of the land, and joining in sacred ordinances. And the temple, sacrifices, priests, and especially the ark of the covenant, were typical of Christ, through whom alone God can be acceptably worshipped by sinners. Where the ark, in the most holy place of the sanctuary, was stationed by divine appointment; there the LORD put his NAME as the one living and true GOD, the GOD of Israel, "a just GOD and a Saviour." There he made known his glorious perfections: and there only, in ordinary cases, would he accept the sacrifices of his people; that they might feast before him with holy joy, as peculiarly in all things favoured and blessed by him. Yet prayer and praise might be offered any where, with reference to the sacrifices at the altar, and the sprinkling of the blood before the ark.—The place offerings, and your sacrifices, and your [1]tithes,[1] and heave-offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your free-will-offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and of your flocks:

7 And there [m]ye shall eat[2] before the LORD your God; and [n]ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein the LORD thy God hath blessed thee.

8 Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, [o]every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes.

9 For ye are not as yet come to the [p]rest and to the inheritance which the LORD your God giveth you.

10 But when [q]ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the LORD your God [r]giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that [s]ye dwell in safety;

11 Then there shall be [t]a place which the LORD your God shall choose to cause his name to dwell there: thither shall ye bring all that I command you; your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, your tithes, and the heave-offering of your hand, and all [u]your choice vows which ye vow unto the LORD.

12 And [v]ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God, ye, and your sons, and your daughters, and your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and [w]the Levite that is within your gates; [x]forasmuch as he hath no part nor inheritance with you.

13 [y]Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou seest:

14 But [z]in the place which the LORD shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee.

15 ¶ Notwithstanding [a]thou mayest kill and eat flesh in all thy gates, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee: [b]the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the roe-buck, and as of the hart.

16 Only [c]ye shall not eat the blood; ye shall pour it upon the earth as water.[3]

17 ¶ Thou mayest not eat within thy gates [d]the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil, or the firstlings of thy herds, or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou vowest, nor thy free-will-offerings, or heave-offering of thine hand:

18 But [e]thou must eat them before the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt [f]rejoice before the LORD thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto.

19 [g]Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite [h]as long as thou livest upon the earth.

20 ¶ When the LORD thy God shall enlarge thy border,[4] [i]as he hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, [j]I will eat flesh, (because thy soul longeth to eat flesh,) thou mayest eat flesh, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

21 If the place which the LORD thy God hath chosen [k]to put his name there be too far from thee, then thou shalt kill of thy herd, and of thy flock, which the LORD hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou shalt eat in thy gates whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

22 Even [l]as the roe-buck and the hart is eaten, so thou shalt eat them; the unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike.

23 Only be [l]sure that thou eat not the blood: for [m]the blood is the life; and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh.

24 Thou shalt not eat it; [n]thou shalt pour it upon the earth as water.

25 Thou shalt not eat it; [o]that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, [p]when thou shalt do that which is right in the sight of the LORD.

26 Only thy [q]holy things which thou hast, and [r]thy vows, thou shalt take, and go unto the place which the LORD shall choose.

27 And thou shalt offer [s]thy burnt-offerings, the flesh and the blood, upon the altar of the LORD thy God: [t]and the blood of thy sacrifices shall be poured out upon the altar of the LORD thy God, and thou shalt eat the flesh.

28 [u]Observe and hear all these words which I command thee, [z]that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever, when thou doest that which is good and right in the sight of the LORD thy God.

29 ¶ When the LORD thy God shall [y]cut off the nations from before thee, whither thou goest to possess them, and thou [*]succeedest them, and dwellest in their land;

30 Take heed to thyself [z]that thou be not snared [†]by following them, after that they be destroyed from before thee; and that thou enquire not after their gods, saying, [a]How did these nations serve their gods? even so will I do likewise.

31 Thou [b]shalt not do so unto the LORD thy God: for every abomination [‡]to the LORD which he hateth have they done unto their gods; for [c]even their sons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods.

32 What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: [d]thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it.

was not at this time appointed; for that was to be done after the people had got possession of the land. Accordingly, Shiloh was long the appointed place; and after some changes Jerusalem was chosen for the purpose, and continued to enjoy that distinction till the crucifixion of Christ.—Scott.

KINDNESS TO THE LEVITES.—They are commanded to be kind to the Levites. Did they feast with joy? The Levites must feast with them, and rejoice with them, ver. 12, and again ver. 18. And a general caution, ver. 19, "Take heed that thou forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest." There were Levites that attended the altar as assistants to the priests, and these must not be forsaken, that is, the service they performed must be constantly adhered to; no other altar must be set up, than that which God appointed; for that would be to forsake the Levites. But this here seems to be spoken of the Levites that were dispersed in the country, to instruct the people in the law of God, and to assist them in their devotions; for it is "the Levite within their gates," that they are here commanded to make much of. It is a great mercy to have Levites near us, within our gates, that we may ask the law at their mouth, and at our feasts to be a check upon us, to restrain excesses. And it is the duty of people to be kind to their ministers that give them good instructions, and set them good examples. As long as we live, we shall need their assistance, till we come to that world where ordinances will be superseded; and therefore, "as long as we live," we must not forsake the Levites. The reason given, ver. 12, is, because "the Levite has no part nor inheritance with you;" so that he cannot grow rich by husbandry or trade; let him therefore share with you in the comfort of your riches. They must give the Levites their tithes and offerings, settled on them by the law, because they had no other maintenance.

IDOLATROUS CUSTOMS TO BE ESCHEWED.—"Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day." Never was there a better governor than Moses, and one would think never a better opportunity of keeping up good order and discipline than now among the people of Israel, when they lay so closely encamped under the eye of their governor; and yet it seems there was much amiss, and that many irregularities had crept in among them. We must never expect to see any society perfectly pure and right, and as it should be, till we come to the heavenly Canaan. They had sacrifices, and religious worship, courts of Justice, and civil government, and by the stoning of the man that "gathered sticks on the Sabbath-day," it appears there was great strictness used in guarding the most weighty matters of the law; but being frequently upon the remove, and always at uncertainty, 1. They could none of them observe the solemn feasts, and the rites of cleansing, with the exactness that the law required: And 2. Those among them that were disposed to do amiss, had opportunity given them to do it unobserved, by the frequent interruptions which their removes gave to the administration of justice. But (says Moses) when ye come to Canaan, ye "shall not do as we do here." Note, When the people of God are in an unsettled condition, that may be tolerated and dispensed with, which would by no means be allowed at another time. Cases of necessity are to be considered while the necessity continues; but that must not be done in Canaan, which was indulged in the wilderness. While a house is in the building, a great deal of dirt and rubbish is suffered to lie by it, which must all be taken away when the house is built. Moses was now about to lay down his life and government, and it is a comfort to him to foresee that Israel would be better in the next reign than they had been in his. They must not worship the Lord by any of those rites or ceremonies which the nations of Canaan had made use of in the service of their gods, ver. 29—32. They must not so much as inquire into the modes and forms of idolatrous worship. What good would it do them to "know those depths of Satan?" Rev. ii. 24. It is best to be ignorant of that which there is danger of being infected by. They must not introduce the customs of idolaters. It would be absurd to make those their patterns, whom God had made their slaves and captives, cut off and destroyed from before them.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We cannot serve God and Mammon, nor worship the true God and idols, nor depend upon Christ Jesus and superstitious or self-righteous confidences. No coalition ought so much as to be attempted in these cases. True religion springs from the subversion of every false dependence, and the dethroning of every idol, and tends to the extirpation of every rival and opponent, that the Lord may be our only portion and salvation, and receive all our worship and obedience. Nor can we ever approach him with acceptance, but in the way which he has revealed, and in the ordinances which he has appointed; for our wisdom, or imagination, is in this case not in the least to be trusted. In Christ Jesus, as in the true temple, "all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily;" to him we come by humble faith, and receive the pardon, the reconciliation, and the grace which he bestows from his mercy-seat: thus we learn to love him, to obey his commandments, and to present our spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, and of every work of compassion and kindness performed for his sake. There we find acceptance of our imperfect services, and learn to delight in obedience: for the ways of our reconciled Father are "ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace:" and our satisfaction will be augmented in proportion as we abound in love and good works. But we must not be satisfied even with that measure of diligence which passes current in the visible church; where too often many allow themselves, and are connived at by others, in "doing whatsoever is right in their own eyes." We must consider what the word of God requires: we must remember those primitive times, when

IF there arise among you [a]a prophet, or [b]a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder,

2 And [c]the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them;

3 Thou shalt [d]not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the LORD your God [e]proveth you, to know whether [f]ye love the LORD your God with all your heart, and with all your soul.

4 Ye shall [g]walk after the LORD your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him, [h]and cleave unto him.

5 And that [i]prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath spoken to [k]turn* you away from the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, to thrust thee out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in: so shalt thou [l]put the evil away from the midst of thee.

6 ¶ If [m]thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, [n]which is as thine own soul, [o]entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, [p]which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers;

7 Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth;

8 Thou shalt not [q]consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither [r]shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him:

9 But [s]thou shalt surely kill him; [t]thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people.

10 And thou shalt [u]stone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the LORD thy God, [x]which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of [†]bondage.

11 And [y]all Israel shall hear, and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this is among you.

12 ¶ If thou [z]shalt hear say in one of thy cities, which the LORD thy God hath given thee to dwell there, saying,

13 Certain men, [‡]the [a]children of Belial, [b]are gone out from among you,[1] and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which ye have not known;

14 Then shalt thou [c]enquire, and make search, and ask diligently: and, behold, if it be truth, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought among you;

15 Thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the sword, [d]destroying it utterly, and all that is therein, and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the sword.

16 And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the street thereof, and shalt burn with fire the city, and all the spoil thereof every whit, for the LORD thy God: and it shall be [e]an heap for ever; it shall not be built again.

17 And there shall [f]cleave nought of the [§]cursed thing to thine hand: that [g]the LORD may turn from the fierceness of his anger, and shew thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee, [h]as he hath sworn unto thy fathers;

18 When thou shalt hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, [i]to keep all his commandments which I command thee this day, to do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD thy God.

God's children are not to disfigure themselves in mourning, 1. What may be eaten, and what not, 3. Of tithes, 22.

YE are [a]the children[1] of the LORD your God. [b]Ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead.

2 For [c]thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God, and the LORD hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth.

"great grace was upon all" the company of Christians, and reflect how they lived; and we must by faith contemplate those who have arrived at their rest and inheritance, and endeavour to conceive how they love the Lord and rejoice in serving him, and be ourselves pressing forward after that perfection.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. FALSE PROPHETS.—It is here supposed, that professed prophets would arise and "give signs and wonders," (that is, predict remarkable events which would come to pass accordingly, or work apparent miracles,) and then endeavour to seduce the people into idolatry. Thus a divine interposition would be pleaded in support of a practice directly contrary to the first principles of true religion. But those first principles having been sufficiently demonstrated, and it being impossible that God should contradict himself; the Israelites were commanded to treat the prophet as a deceiver, and his apparent miracles and prophecies as impostures; and to consider that the Lord permitted such things, in order to prove whether they were cordially devoted in love to his worship, or were glad of a pretence for turning aside to idolatry. Nay, they must put the deceiver to death without mercy. The existence and perfections of the one living and true God are fully proved, by the works of creation and providence; the revelation made to Israel by Moses had been authenticated by the most public and stupendous miracles; and the worship of JEHOVAH alone was the fundamental principle of that revelation. No miracles therefore could be admitted as a proof, that the people might violate the first and great commandment of the law, just before given from Mount Sinai; for it was impossible such miracles could be wrought by JEHOVAH; and if wrought by another, he must be the rival and enemy of JEHOVAH. Those things indeed in the law given by Moses, which related to the external forms of worship, being changeable in their nature, might be superseded by a future revelation; and here the evidence of miracles, if public and incontestable, was admissible. Yet it is observable, that our Lord and his apostles did not rest the Christian revelation on miracles only, but they constantly appealed to the Old Testament: the prophecies and promises of which, when fairly interpreted, were suited to raise an expectation of exactly such a change in externals as they effected, and which at the same time fully established all the grand principles and requirements of preceding revelations. In all cases where the evident testimony of the sacred oracles is not evaded or contradicted, miracles may be considered as the seal of God to the doctrine taught by those who work them: but when the grand principles of Scripture are opposed, they must be allowed insufficient to counterbalance the immense weight of evidence by which that has been authenticated.—Scott.

NO MERCY TO IDOLATERS.—It is our duty to prefer God and religion before the best friends we have in the world. 1. We must not, in complaisance to our friends, break "God's law," ver. 8. "'Thou shalt not consent to him,' nor go with him to his idolatrous worship, no not for company, or curiosity, or to gain a better interest in his affections." It is a general rule, "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not," Prov. i. 10. 2. We must not, in compassion to our friends, obstruct the course of God's justice. He that offers such a thing, must not only be looked upon as an enemy, or dangerous person, whom one should be afraid of, and swear the peace against, but as a criminal or traitor, whom, in zeal for our sovereign Lord, his crown and dignity, we are bound to inform against, and cannot conceal without incurring the guilt of a great misprision, ver. 9. "Thou shalt surely kill him." By this law the persons enticed were bound to prosecute the seducer, and to give evidence against him before the proper judges, that he might suffer the penalty of the law, and that without delay, which the Jews say is here intended in that phrase, as it is in the Hebrew, "killing thou shalt kill him:" neither the prosecution nor the execution must be deferred; and he that was first in the former, must be first in the latter, to show that he stood to his testimony, "'Thy hand shall be first upon him, to mark' him out as an anathema; and then the hands of all the people, to put him away as an accursed thing." The death he must die, was that which was looked upon among the Jews as the severest of all other. He must be stoned: and his accusation written is, that he has sought to thrust thee away, by a kind of violence, "from the Lord thy God," ver. 10. Those are certainly our worst friends, that would "thrust us from God," our best friend: and whatever draws us to sin, separates between us and God, it is a design upon our life, and to be resented accordingly.—Henry.

CHAP. XIV. MODERATION IN MOURNING.—"Ye shall not cut yourselves," ver. 1. This forbids, (as some think,) not only their "cutting themselves" at their funerals, either to express their grief, or with their own blood to appease the infernal deities, but their wounding and mangling themselves in the worship of their gods, as Baal's prophets did, 1 Kings xviii. 28, or their marking themselves by incisions in their flesh, for such and such deities, which in them, above any, would be an inexcusable crime, who in the sign of circumcision bore about with them in their bodies the marks of the Lord Jehovah. So that, 1. They are forbidden to deform or hurt their own bodies upon any account. Methinks this is like a parent's charge to his little children, that are foolish, careless, and wilful, and are apt to play with knives—"Children, ye shall not cut yourselves." This is the intention of those commands which oblige us to deny ourselves: the true meaning of them, if we understood them right, would appear to be, "Do yourselves no harm." And this also is the design of those providences which most cross us, [4] What was allowed to an alien, was forbidden to the Hebrews, as an holy people, not because morally evil, or therefore unlawful on a moral account, but because it was unbecoming a people consecrated to the service of Jehovah. Hence, what the Hebrews were allowed for food was of best esteem in common use; and what they were forbidden, was of least esteem, and reckoned too mean for a good table: and, as Dr Spencer observes, these things continue so in the eastern nations to the present times.—LOWMAN.

29 And the Levite, (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and [d]the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; [e]that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest.

CHAP. XV.

The seventh year, a year of release for the poor, 1. It must be no hindrance to lending or giving, 7.

AT the end of every [a]seven years thou shalt make a release.

2 And this is the manner of the release: Every [a]creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it; he shall not [b]exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother; because it is called the LORD's release.

3 Of [c]a foreigner thou mayest exact it again: but that which is thine with thy brother thine hand shall release;

4 [f]Save when there shall be no poor among you; for the LORD shall [d]greatly bless thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it:

5 [e]Only if thou carefully hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe to do all these commandments which I command thee this day.

6 For the LORD thy God blesseth thee, as he promised thee: and [f]thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and [g]thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee.

7 ¶ If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates, in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, [h]thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother;

8 But [i]thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.

9 Beware [k]that there be not a [‡]thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and [l]thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought, and [m]he cry unto the LORD against thee, and it be [n]sin unto thee.

10 Thou shalt surely give him, and [o]thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: [p]because that for this thing the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto.

to remove from us those things by which we are in danger of doing ourselves harm. Knives are taken from us, lest we cut ourselves. They that are dedicated to God as a holy people, must do nothing to disfigure themselves; the body is for the Lord, and is to be used accordingly. 2. They are forbidden to disturb and afflict their own minds with inordinate grief for the loss of near and dear relations. "Ye shall not express or exasperate your sorrow, even upon the most mournful occasions, by cutting yourselves, and making baldness between your eyes, like men enraged, or resolvedly hardened in sorrow for the dead, as those that have no hope," 1 Thess. iv. 13.

RESTRICTIONS IN DIET.—1. Concerning beasts, here is a more particular enumeration of those which they were allowed to eat, than was in Leviticus, to show that they had no reason to complain of their being restrained from eating swine's flesh, and hares, and rabbits, (which were all that were then forbidden, but are now commonly used,) when they were allowed so great a variety, not only of that which we call butcher's meat, ver. 4, which alone was offered in sacrifice, but of venison, which they had great plenty of in Canaan, "the hart, and the roe-buck, and the fallow deer," ver. 5, which, though never brought to God's altar, was allowed them at their own table. See chap. xii. 22. When of all these (as Adam of "every tree of the garden,") they might freely eat, those were inexcusable, who, to gratify a perverse appetite, or (as should seem) in honour of their idols, and in participation of their idolatrous sacrifices, "ate swine's flesh, and made broth of abominable things" (made so by this law) "in their vessels," Isa. lxv. 4. 2. Concerning fish, there is only one general rule given, that whatsoever had not fins and scales, (as shell-fish and eels, beside leeches and other animals in the water that are not proper food,) was "unclean and forbidden," ver. 9, 10. 3. No general rule is given concerning fowl, but those are particularly mentioned that were to be unclean to them, and there are few or none of them which are here forbidden, that are now commonly eaten; and whatsoever is not expressly forbidden, is allowed, ver. 11—20. "Of all clean fowls ye may eat." They are further forbidden, (1.) To eat the flesh of any creature that died of itself, because the blood was not separated from it, and beside the ceremonial uncleanness which it lay under, (from Lev. xi. 39,) it is not wholesome food, nor ordinarily used among us, except by the poor. (2.) To "seethe a kid in its mother's milk, either to gratify their own luxury, supposing it a dainty bit, or in conformity to some superstitious custom of the heathen. The Chaldee paraphrasts read it, "Thou shalt not eat flesh-meats and milk-meats together." And so it would forbid the use of butter, as sauce to any flesh.—Henry.

SECOND TITHE.—Ver. 22—29. These verses require a second tithe from the produce of the land, which, with that appropriated for the maintenance of the Levites, amounted to a fifth part. Two years together the people were commanded to bring this second tithe to Jerusalem, either in kind or in money; and to feast upon it religiously before the Lord, that they might be drawn to spend the more time at the temple, in the society of the priests, at the ordinances of God, and among their brethren. But on the third year they were required to spend it in hospitably entertaining and relieving the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow; that is, in every kind of charity. This appointment was evidently intended to counteract the covetousness, distrust, and selfishness of the human heart; to promote friendliness, liberality, and cheerfulness; to raise a perpetual fund for the use of the poor; and to teach the people that they would never so comfortably enjoy their worldly portion, as when they shared it with their necessitous brethren. They were taught to convert the common blessings of Providence into a sacred ordinance, by accompanying their most free use of them with the exercises of religion; and this was the way to learn to fear God always, and to obtain his blessing upon all the works of their hands. Some vindicate feasting from these laws; and certainly such temperate, religious, and charitable feasting, is allowable; but what has this in common with sensual, luxurious, and ungodly banquets?—Scott.

CHAP. XV. RELIEF TO DEBTORS.—It is supposed that the debtor was an Israelite, ver. 3, an alien could not take the benefit of this law: and that he was poor, ver. 4, that he did not borrow for trade or purchase, but for the subsistence of his family; and that now he could not pay it without reducing himself to poverty, and coming under a necessity of seeking relief in other countries, which might be his temptation to revolt from God. The law is not, that the creditor shall not receive the debt, if the debtor, or his friends for him, can pay it; but he shall not exact it by legal process. The reasons of this law are, 1. To put an honour upon the sabbatical year, "because it is called the Lord's release," ver. 2. That was God's year for their land, as the weekly Sabbath was God's day for themselves, their servants, and cattle; and as by the resting of their ground, so by the release of the debts, God would teach them to depend upon his providence. This year of release typified the grace of the gospel, in which is proclaimed the acceptable year of the Lord, and by which we obtain the release of our debts, that is, the pardon of our sins, and we are taught to forgive injuries, as we are, and hope to be forgiven of God. 2. It was to prevent the falling of any Israelite into extreme poverty; so the margin reads, ver. 4, "To the end there shall be no poor among you," none miserably and scandalously poor, to the reproach of their nation and religion, the reputation of which they ought to preserve. 3. God's security is here given by a divine promise, that whatever they lost by the poor debtors, it should be made up to them in the 11 For [q]the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, [r]Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.

12 ¶ And[s] if thy brother,[1] an Hebrew man, or an Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, and serve thee six years, then in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee.

13 And when thou sendest him out free from thee, [t]thou shalt not let him go away empty:

14 Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine-press: of that wherewith [u]the LORD thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give unto him.

15 And [x]thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day.

16 And it shall be, [y]if he say unto thee, I will not go away from thee; (because he loveth thee and thine house, because he is well with thee;)

17 Then thou shalt take an awl,[2] and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy servant [z]for ever: and also unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise.

18 It shall not seem hard unto thee when thou sendest him away free from thee; for he hath been worth [a]a double hired servant to thee, in serving thee six years: and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all that thou doest.

19 ¶ All [b]the firstling males that come of thy herd,[3] and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the LORD thy God: [c]thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy bullock, nor shear the firstling of thy sheep:

20 Thou [d]shalt eat it before the LORD thy God year by year, in the place which the LORD shall choose, thou and thy household.

21 And [e]if there be any blemish therein, as if it be lame, or blind, or have any ill blemish, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the LORD thy God:

22 Thou shalt eat it within thy gates; [f]the unclean and the clean person shall eat it alike, as the roe-buck, and as the hart.

23 Only [g]thou shalt not eat the blood thereof; thou shalt pour it upon the ground as water.

blessing of God upon all that they had and did, ver. 4—6. Let them take care to do their duty, and then God would bless them with such great increase, that what they might lose by bad debts, if they generously remitted them, should not be missed out of their stock at the year's end. Not only, "the Lord shall bless thee," ver. 4, but he "doth bless thee," ver. 6. It is altogether inexcusable, if though God has given us abundance, so that we have not only enough, but to spare, we are rigorous and severe in our demands from our poor brethren.

MITIGATION OF SLAVERY.—Here is, 1. A repetition of the law that had been given concerning Hebrew servants, who either had sold themselves for servants, or were sold by their parents through extreme poverty, or were sold by the court of judgment for some crime committed. The law was, (1.) That they should serve but six years, and in the seventh should go out free, ver. 12; compare Exod. xxi. 2. And if the year of jubilee happened before he served out his time, that would be his discharge. God's Israel were a free people, and must not be compelled to perpetual slavery; thus are God's spiritual Israel called unto liberty. (2.) That if, when their six years were expired, they had no mind to go out free, but would rather continue in service, as having less care, though taking more pains, than their masters; in that case, they must lay themselves under an obligation to serve for ever, that is, for life, by having "their ears bored to the door-posts," ver. 16—17. Compare Exod. xxi. 6. If hereby a man disgraced himself with some, as of a mean and servile spirit, that had not a due sense of the honour and pleasure of liberty; yet, we may suppose, with others he got reputation, as of a quiet, contented spirit, humble, and diligent, and loving, and not "given to change." 2. Here is an addition to this law, requiring them to put some small stock into their servants' hands to set up with for themselves, when they sent them out of their service, ver. 13, 14. It was to be supposed that they had nothing of their own, and that their friends had little or nothing for them, else they would have been redeemed before they were discharged by law; they had no wages for their service, and all they got by their labour was their master's, so that their liberty would do them little good, having nothing to begin the world with, therefore they are here commanded to furnish them liberally with corn and cattle.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. REPETITION OF LAW—PASSOVER.—They must "eat unleavened bread" [illegible] "no leavened bread" must be seen in all their coasts, ver. 3, 4, 8. [illegible] called "bread of affliction," because neither [illegible] and therefore proper to signify the heaviness [illegible] keep in remembrance the haste in which [illegible] came out, the case being so urgent that they could not stay for the leavening of the bread they took with them for their march. The Jewish writers tell us, that the custom at the passover supper was, that the master of the family brake this unleavened bread, and gave to every one a piece of it, saying, "This is," that is, this signifies, represents, or commemorates, (which explains that saying of our Saviour, "This is my body,") "the bread of affliction, which your fathers did eat in the land of Egypt." The gospel meaning of this feast of unleavened bread the apostle gives us, 1 Cor. v. 7, "Christ our passover being sacrificed for us," and we having participated of the blessed fruits of that sacrifice to our comfort, "let us keep the feast" in a holy conversation, free from "the leaven of malice" toward our brethren, and hypocrisy toward God, and "with the unleavened bread of sincerity" and love.

PENTECOST.—Seven weeks after the passover, the feast of pentecost was to be observed, concerning which they are here directed from whence to number their seven weeks, "from the time thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn," ver. 9, that is, from the morrow after the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, for on that day (though it is probable the people did not begin their harvest till the feast was ended) messengers were sent to reap a sheaf of barley, which was to be offered to God as the first-fruits, Lev. xxiii. 10. Some think it implies a particular care which Providence would take of their land with respect to the weather, that their harvest should be always ripe and ready for the sickle just at the same time. And, it should seem, those general words, "Thou shalt observe and do these statutes," are added here for a particular reason, because this feast was kept in remembrance of the giving of the law upon mount Sinai, fifty days after they came out of Egypt; now the best way of expressing our thankfulness to God for his favour to us in giving us his law, is, to "observe and do according to the precepts" of it.

FEAST OF TABERNACLES.—There is no repetition of the law concerning the sacrifices that were to be offered in great abundance at this feast, which we had at large, Num. xxix. 12, &c. because the care of these belonged to the priests and Levites, who had not so much need of a repetition as the people had, and because the spiritual part of the service, which consisted in holy joy, was most pleasing to God, and was to be the perpetual duty of a gospel-conversation which this feast was typical of. Observe what stress is laid upon it here, "Thou shalt rejoice in thy feast," ver. 14, "and because the Lord shall bless thee, thou shalt surely rejoice," ver. 15. Note, 1. It is the will of God that his people should be a cheerful people. If they that were under the law must rejoice before God, much more must we that are under the grace of the gospel, which makes it our [illegible] duty, not only to [illegible] rejoice in our feasts," but to "rejoice evermore; to rejoice

15 [y]Seven days shalt thou keep a solemn feast unto the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD shall choose: [z]because the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thine increase, and in all the works of thine hands; therefore thou shalt surely rejoice.

16 ¶ [a]Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the LORD thy God in the place which he shall choose; in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles: and [b]they shall not appear before the LORD empty.

17 Every man shall give [l]as he [c]is able, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee.

18 ¶ [d]Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment.

19 Thou shalt not [e]wrest judgment; thou shalt not [f]respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the *words of the righteous.

20 †That which is [g]altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest [h]live, and inherit the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

21 Thou shalt not [i]plant thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the LORD thy God, which thou shalt make thee.

22 Neither shalt thou set thee [k]up any ‡image, [l]which the LORD thy God hateth.

Things sacrificed must be sound, 1. Idolaters must be slain, 2. Of hard controversies, 8. The election, 14, and duty of a king, 16.

THOU [a]shalt not sacrifice unto the LORD thy God any bullock or *sheep wherein is blemish, or [b]any evil favouredness: [c]for that is an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

2 ¶ If there be found among you, within any of thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee, [d]man or woman, that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the LORD thy God, [e]in transgressing his covenant,

3 And hath gone and served other gods, and worshipped them, either [f]the sun, or moon, or any of the host of heaven, [g]which I have not commanded;

4 And it be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and [h]enquired diligently, and, behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in Israel;

5 Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman, which have committed that wicked thing, unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and shalt [i]stone them with stones, till they die.

6 At [k]the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death be put to death; but at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death.

7 The [l]hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people: [m]so thou shalt put the evil away from among you.

8 ¶ If there [n]arise a matter too hard[1] for thee in judgment, [o]between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between stroke and stroke, being matters of controversy, within thy gates; then shalt thou arise, and [p]get thee up into the place which the LORD thy God shall choose:

9 And thou shalt come unto [q]the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and enquire; and [r]they shall shew thee the sentence of judgment.

10 And [s]thou shalt do according to the sentence which they of that place which the LORD shall choose shall shew thee; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee:

11 According to [t]the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall shew thee, [u]to the right hand, nor to the left.

12 And the man that [x]will do presumptuously, †and will not hearken unto [y]the priest that standeth to minister there before the LORD thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die: and [z]thou shalt put away the evil from Israel.

13 And all the people [a]shall hear, and fear, and do no more [b]presumptuously.

14 ¶ When [c]thou art come unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, [d]I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me:

15 Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee [e]whom the LORD thy God shall choose; one [f]from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother.

16 But he shall not [g]multiply horses[2] to himself, nor [h]cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the LORD hath said unto you, [i]Ye shall henceforth return no more that way.

17 Neither [k]shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away; [l]neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold.

in the Lord always." 2. When we rejoice in God ourselves, we should do what we can to assist others also to rejoice in him by comforting the mourners, and supplying the necessitous, that even "the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, may rejoice with us."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The frequent repetitions of the same laws forms a humiliating reproach of man's unteachableness in spiritual things; for God doeth nothing in vain.—From the example of Moses, ministers and parents may learn to renew their instructions and admonitions with their latest breath, that the survivors may have them associated with every remembrance of them.—A believer should not forget, for one day, his original state of guilt and misery, his gracious deliverance, and the price which it cost the Redeemer, that gratitude and joy in the Lord may, during the residue of his life, be mingled with godly sorrow, mortification of sin, and humble patience under the tribulations which lie in the way to the kingdom of heaven.—Every one of our services must be performed in communion with the church of Christ; and in dependence on him, our temple, altar, sacrifice, and passover; "with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." We should indeed be thankful that our attendance on God's ordinances does not require such long and expensive journeys, as that of Israel did: but if our hearts be right with God, we shall so delight in his service, that the labour required in it will be our pleasure, or we shall be ashamed that it is not. The expense incurred in making the heart of the poor and destitute rejoice, according to the Lord's blessing upon us, will be our own heartfelt satisfaction: and we shall not so much as wish to "appear before the Lord empty;" but shall desire to be rich in good works, ready to distribute and willing to "communicate," in whatever can glorify God or do good to mankind.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. JUDICIAL DECISIONS.—This law is addressed to the magistrates in the different parts of the land, before mentioned, chap. xvi. 18. In many cases of life and death, or of property, or concerning the law of retaliation, they might find perplexing difficulties. Such causes were therefore to be referred to the decision of the superior tribunals, which were held at the place where the tabernacle was fixed.—The priests and Levites, having the most leisure, and being especially appointed to the study of the law, which was not only the "rule of conscience," but likewise "the law of the land," by their learning would be best qualified to act as judges; and probably the sanhedrim and other superior courts of justice were chiefly composed of them, though not without some persons of the other tribes. The judge here mentioned may mean either the high priest, or such other supreme magistrate, as God from time to time should raise up among them. To these the appeal must be made: and, with all their advantages, it was not likely they would give a false sentence, whilst they continued free from gross apostacy in religion, and corruption in morals. As, however, the law related, not to "matters of faith and conscience," but merely "to the administration of justice in the land;" it would be better that an individual should sometimes be aggrieved, than that the advantages of magistracy should be abridged: therefore he who presumptuously refused to submit, whether magistrate or private person, was ordered to be put to death. In every state there must be some final award, from which there lies no appeal, and that must be submitted to, even though in some cases it should be unjust: but this gives no countenance to the monstrous claim, which some have made, of being "absolute interpreters of doctrines and precepts, in matters of conscience," to which all ought to submit, however evidently their decisions contradict the word of God. In this case it suffices to say, "we must obey" and believe "God rather than man;" as Peter replied to the successors of those very persons, to whom this authority was originally given, and on whom it had at that time devolved.—Scott.

CHOICE OF A KING.—Laws are given to the electors of the empire, what rules they must go by in making their choice, ver. 14, 15. It is here supposed that the people would, in process of time, be desirous of a king, whose royal pomp and power would be thought to make their nation look great among their neighbours. Their having a king is neither promised as a mercy, nor commanded as a duty, (nothing could be better for them than the divine regimen they were under,) but it is permitted them, if they desired it: if they would but take care to have the ends of government answered, and God's laws duly observed and put in execution, they should not be tied to any one form of government, but should be welcome to have a king. Though something irregular is supposed to be the principle of the desire, that they might be like the nations, (whereas God many ways distinguished them from the nations,) yet God would indulge them in it, because he intended to serve his own purposes by it, in making the regal government typical of the kingdom of the Messiah.

LAWS FOR THE KING.—Laws are also given to the prince that should be elected, for the due administration of the government. 1. He must carefully avoid every thing that would divert him from God and religion. Riches, honours, and pleasures are the three great hinderances of godliness, ("the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life,") especially to those in high stations: against these therefore the king is here warned. (1.) He must not gratify the love of honour by multiplying horses, ver. 16. He that rode upon a horse (a stately creature) in a country where asses and mules were generally used, looked very great; and therefore, though he might have horses for his own saddle and chariots, yet he must not set "servants on horseback,"

Kgs. x. 7, nor have many horses for his officers and guards; when God was their king, his judges rode on asses, Judg. v. 10, xii. 14, nor must he multiply horses for war, lest he should trust too much to them, Ps. xx. 7, xxxiii. 17; Hos. xiv. 3. The reason here given against his multiplying horses is, because it would produce a greater correspondence with Egypt, (which furnished Canaan with horses, 1 Kings x. 28, 29,) than was fit that the Israel of God should have, who were brought thence with such a high hand. (2.) He must not gratify the love of pleasure by multiplying wives, ver. 17, as Solomon did to his undoing, 1 Kings xi. 1, that his heart, being set upon them, turn not away from holiness and every thing that is serious, and especially from the exercise of faith and devotion, to which nothing is a greater enemy than the indulgence of the flesh. (3.) He must not gratify the love of riches by greatly multiplying silver and gold. A competent treasure is allowed him, and he is not forbidden to be a good husband of it, but must not greatly multiply money so as to oppress his people by raising it, (as Solomon seems to have done, 1 Kings xii. 4,) nor so as to deceive himself, by trusting to it and setting his heart upon it, Ps. lxii. 10. He must not multiply it to ostentation. David multiplied silver and gold, but it was for the service of God, 1 Chron. xxix. 3, not for himself, but for his people, not for his own family. 2. He must carefully conform himself to the law of God, and make that his rule. This must be to him better than horses, honours, and pleasures, than many horses or many wives, better than corn and silver. He must write himself a copy of the law out of the original in the custody of the priests that attended the sanctuary, ver. 18. Some think he was only to write out this book of Deuteronomy, which is an abstract of the whole law, briefly, plainly, and faithfully, observed by King Josiah, Josiah, which, being [illegible] of Moses, which [illegible] Old Testament.—Born in the reign of a persecuting tyrant, his life was sought in his infancy, and wonderfully preserved, whilst many other infants were destroyed. At the entrance of his work, he rejected the proposal of "the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;" as Moses did the prospect of honour and affluence in Egypt; and preferred a suffering, poor, and despised life. He was opposed by those very persons, for whose sake he had thus voluntarily impoverished himself; yet in the appointed time and manner, he accomplished the redemption of his people. His meekness and patience far exceeded those by which Moses was distinguished. He united in one person the offices of Prophet, Priest, and King. His transfiguration reminds us of Moses' face shining when he came down from the mount. He feeds his people with the true manna, and gives them living water to drink. Many of his miracles resembled those of Moses; but especially his commanding the winds and waves, and walking upon the sea, remind us of the Red Sea divided at the word of Moses, that Israel might pass through.—He was opposed by his brethren as well as by the people, and was especially objected to for espousing the Gentiles as his church. All the prophets and apostles spake as his delegates; (as all the former enforced the law of Moses;) the whole Scripture is his word, and all ministers obtain their authority, and receive their instructions, from him. His knowledge of the Father, and his intimate fellowship with him, are unexampled and appropriate. His life was spent, closed, and laid down for the benefit of his people, and for their sins; and his resurrection precluded the exact knowledge of his sepulchre, and should have prevented superstitious veneration for it. When he left his disciples, he promised them the Teacher and Comforter, as Moses promised a Prophet like to himself to Israel. [illegible] and it will most awfully be required of those who reject his [illegible] who are resolved to his instructions, or who refuse to have him to reign over [illegible] with this remembrance calls for [illegible]

A. M. 2553.—B. C. 1451.

3 Thou shalt [c]prepare thee a way, and divide the coasts of thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee to inherit, into three parts,[1] that every slayer may flee thither.

4 ¶ And this is the case of [d]the slayer which shall flee thither, that he may live: Whoso killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not [f]in time past;

5 As when a man goeth into the wood[2] with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the [g]head slippeth from the [h]helve, and [i]lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; [e]he shall flee unto one of those cities, and live:

6 Lest [f]the avenger of the blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and [g]slay him; whereas he was [g]not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not [f]in time past.

7 Wherefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt separate three cities for thee.

8 And if the LORD thy God [h]enlarge thy coast, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which he promised to give unto thy fathers;

9 [i]If thou shalt keep all these commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, to love the LORD thy God, and to walk ever in his ways; then shalt thou add three cities more for thee, besides these three:

10 That [k]innocent blood be not shed in thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee.

11 ¶ But [l]if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him [t]mortally that he die, and fleeth into one of these cities;

12 Then the elders of his city shall send and [m]fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die.

13 [n]Thine eye shall not pity him: but [o]thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee.

14 ¶ Thou [p]shalt not remove thy neighbour's land-mark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

15 ¶ One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any SIN, in any sin that he sinneth: [q]at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established.

16 ¶ If [r]a false witness rise up against any man, to testify against him [s]that which is wrong; are spoken in parables." "No man cometh to the Father but by him;" for "he is able to save to the uttermost all them that come to God by him; seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." No one of Adam's fallen race can know God, or learn his truth and will, or approach him with comfort and acceptance, except through Christ; any more than Israel could have endured the revelation of God, and his words from Sinai's fiery top, without the typical mediation of Moses. This is unspeakably the most important resemblance; and so decided and unambiguous a divine declaration on this infinitely important subject, in this ancient book, is peculiarly worthy of observation.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. CITIES OF REFUGE.—The appointment of these cities of refuge we had before, Exod. xxi. 13, and the law laid down concerning them at large, Numb. xxxv. 10, &c. 1. The appointing of three cities in Canaan for this purpose. Moses had already appointed three on that side Jordan, which he saw the conquest of; and now he bids them, when they were settled in the other part of the country, to appoint three more, ver. 1—3, 7. The country was to be divided into three districts, as near as might be equal, and a city of refuge in the centre of each, so that every corner of the land might have one within reach. Thus Christ is not a refuge at a distance which we must ascend to heaven, or go down to the deep for; but the word is nigh us, and Christ is the word, Rom. x. 8. The gospel brings salvation "to our door," and there it knocks for admission. 2. The use to be made of these cities, ver. 4—6. It is supposed it might so happen, that a man might be the death of his neighbour without any design upon him, (either from a sudden passion, or malice-prepense,) but purely by accident, as by the flying off of an axe-head, which is the instance here given, with which every case of this kind was to be compared, and by it adjudged. See how human life lies exposed daily, and what deaths we are often in, and what need therefore we have to be always ready, our souls being continually in our hands. How are the sons of men "snared in an evil time, when it falls suddenly upon them?" Eccles. ix. 12. An evil time indeed it is, when this happens, not only to the slain but to the slayer. 3. The appointing of three cities more for this use, in case God should hereafter enlarge their territories, and the dominion of their religion; that all those places which came under the government of the law of Moses in other instances, might enjoy the benefit of that law in this instance, ver. 8, 9. QUESTS, which the number intimates should be as large as those their first conquests were; wherever the border of Israel went, this privilege must attend it, that "innocent blood be not shed," ver. 10. Though God is the Saviour and Preserver of all men, and has a tender regard to all lives, yet the blood of Israelites is in a particular manner precious to him, Ps. lxxii. 14.—It is provided that the cities of refuge should be no sanctuary or shelter to a wilful murderer, but even thence he should be fetched, and delivered to the avenger of blood, ver. 11—13. This shows that wilful murder must never be protected by the civil magistrate; he bears the sword of justice in vain, if he suffers those to escape the edge of it, that lie under the guilt of blood, which he by office is the avenger of. During the dominion of the papacy here in our own land, before the Reformation, there were some churches, and religious houses, (as they called them,) that were made sanctuaries for the protection of all sorts of criminals that fled to them, wilful murderers not excepted, so that (as Stamford says, in his Pleas of the Crown, lib. 2, ch. xxxviii.) the government follows not Moses but Romulus; and it was not till about the latter end of Henry the Eighth's time, that this privilege of sanctuary for wilful murder was taken away; when in that, as in other cases, the word of God came to be regarded more than the dictates of the see of Rome.

PUNISHMENT OF PERJURY.—A false witness was to incur the same punishment which was to have been inflicted upon the person he accused, ver. 16—21. 1. The criminal here is a false witness, who is said to "rise up," against a man, not only because all witnesses stood up when they gave in their evidence, but because a false witness did indeed rise up as an enemy and an assailant against him whom he accused. "If two," or "three," or many witnesses concurred in a false testimony, they were all liable to be prosecuted upon this law. 2. The person wronged or brought into peril by the false testimony, is supposed to be the appellee, ver. 17. And yet if the person were put to death upon the evidence, and afterward it appeared to be false, any other person, or the judges themselves, ex-officio—"by virtue of their office," might call the false witness to account. 3. If it appeared that a man had knowingly and maliciously borne false witness against his neighbour, though the mischief he designed him thereby was not [illegible] go the same penalty which his evidence would have [illegible] Nec lex est justior ulla—"Nor could any law be more [illegible] neighbour [illegible] was to be punished with [illegible]

[2] The Jewish writers frequently mention two kinds of war—that which was particularly commanded by God, as that against the nations which the Israelites were commanded to drive out; and that which was chosen by the Jews on just provocation, or in their own defence against other people. These words, as well as the foregoing, refer to the latter of the two, as appears from ver. 15, compared with ver. 5-8, and Num. xxxii. 7.—KIDDER.

2 Then [b]thy elders and thy judges shall come forth, and they shall measure unto the cities which are round about him that is slain.

3 And it shall be, that the city which is next unto the slain man, even the elders[1] of that city shall take [c]an heifer, which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke;

4 And the elders of that city shall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which is neither eared nor sown, and [d]shall strike off the heifer's neck there in the valley:

5 And the priests, the sons of Levi, shall come near; [e](for them the LORD thy God hath chosen to minister unto him, and to bless in the name of the LORD;) and [f]by their *word shall every controversy and every stroke be tried.

6 And all the elders of that city, that are next unto the slain man, shall [g]wash their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley:

7 And they shall answer and say, [h]Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it.

8 Be merciful, O LORD, unto thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed, and [i]lay not innocent blood †unto thy people of Israel's charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them.

9 So [k]shalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from among you, [l]when thou shalt do that which is right in the sight of the LORD.

10 ¶ When [m]thou goest forth to war against thine enemies, and the LORD thy God hath delivered them into thine hands, and thou hast taken them captive,

11 And seest among the captives a beautiful woman,[2] and hast [n]a desire unto her, [o]that thou wouldest have her to thy wife;

12 Then thou shalt bring her home to thine house; and [p]she shall shave her head, and ‡pare her nails;

14 And it shall be, if thou have no delight in her, then thou shalt let her go whither she will; but [r]thou shalt not sell her at all for money, thou shalt not make merchandise of her, §because thou hast humbled her.

fight must be discharged; whether the indisposition did arise, 1. From the circumstances of a man's outward condition. As (1.) If he had lately built or purchased a new house, and had not taken possession of it, had not dedicated it, ver. 5, that is, made a solemn festival for the entertainment of his friends, that came to him to welcome him to his house; let him go home and take the comfort of that which God has blessed him with, till, by enjoying it for some time, he become less fond of it, and consequently less disturbed in the war by the thoughts of it, and more willing to die, and leave it. For that is the nature of all our worldly enjoyments, that they please us best at first; after a while we see the vanity of them. Some think that this dedication of their houses was a religious act, and that they took possession of them with prayers and praises, with a solemn devoting of themselves and all their enjoyments to the service and honour of God; David penned the 30th Psalm on such an occasion, as appears by the title. Note, He that has a house of his own should dedicate it to God, by setting up and keeping up the fear and worship of God in it, that he may have a church in his house; and nothing should be suffered to divert a man from this. Or, (2.) If a man had been at a great expense to "plant a vineyard," and longed to "eat of the fruit" of it, which, for the first three years he was forbidden to do, by that law, Lev. xix. 23, &c. let him go home, if he has a mind, and gratify his own humour with the fruits of it, ver. 6. See how indulgent God is to his people in innocent things, and how far from being a hard master. Since we naturally covet to eat the labour of our hands, rather than an Israelite should be crossed therein, his service in war shall be dispensed with. Or, (3.) If a man had made up his mind to be married, and the marriage were not solemnized, he was at liberty to return, ver. 7, as also to tarry at home for one year after marriage, chap. xxiv. 5, for the terrors of war would be disagreeable to a man who had just welcomed the soft scene of domestic attachment. And God would not be served in his wars by pressed men that were forced into the army against their will, but they must all be perfectly volunteers, Ps. cx. 3, "Thy people shall be willing." In running the Christian race, and fighting the good fight of faith, we must "lay aside every weight," and all that which would clog and divert our minds, and make us unwilling. The Jewish writers agree that this liberty to return was allowed only in those wars which they made voluntarily, (as Bishop Patrick expresses it,) not those which were made by the divine command against Amalek and the Canaanites, in which every man was bound to fight. 2. If a man's indisposition to fight arose from the weakness and timidity of his own spirit, he had leave to return from the war, ver. 8. This proclamation Gideon made to his army, and it detached about two-thirds of them, Judg. vii. 3. Some make the fearfulness and faint-heartedness, here supposed, to arise from the terrors of an evil conscience, which would make a man afraid to look death and danger in the face. It was then thought that men of loose and profligate lives would not be good soldiers, but must needs be both cowards in an army, and curses to it, the shame and trouble of the camp; and therefore those who were conscious to themselves of notorious guilt, were shaken off.—Henry.

LAWS OF WAR.—Ver. 10—18. We must suppose, in the cases here intended, that the Israelites had some warrantable cause of levying war, which covetousness, ambition, and the thirst of dominion could not be. When, therefore, they had been injured or assaulted by any foreign nation, they were required to proceed in the manner here prescribed; for the Lord purposed by these means to enlarge their dominions whilst they continued obedient. There were doubtless wise reasons why they were not only allowed, but, as it seems, commanded to put to death all the males who were capable of resistance. The lives and property of all men are the Lord's, forfeited to his justice, to be disposed of at his pleasure and for his glory. These regulations, however, are not the rule of our conduct, which must be dictated by the general law of love, and that prohibits unnecessary bloodshed and plunder, in war as well as in peace. One reason of this severity might be to shadow forth the fatal consequences of persisting in rebellion and enmity against God, and in contempt of the proposal of peace and reconciliation set before men in the gospel. Some are of opinion that no terms of peace might, in any case whatever, be offered or allowed to the devoted inhabitants of Canaan; because their measure of wickedness was filled up, and they would be a constant temptation to the Israelites: but we shall meet with events in the course of this history, which will not easily comport with the absolute interpretation.—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. EXPIATION OF MURDER, THE CRIMINAL BEING UNDETECTED.—Ver. 1—9. This law was intended to increase the horror of murder, and to promote the detection of the criminal, by a public and solemn transaction, under the management of the magistrates of the nearest city, associated with the priests; by putting numbers upon inquiry, by calling upon every one to clear himself, and by warning all men not to conceal the criminal. The "heifer which had not drawn in the yoke," represented the murderer, the son of Belial, who refused to bear the yoke of God's law; and the "rough valley" might denote the worthlessness of the criminal's character, or the disagreeableness of the business. "Striking off the neck of the heifer," not by the priests but by the elders, expressed the desert of the criminal, and their readiness thus to punish him if they could detect him. "Washing their hands" was an external sign of the protestation of innocence, and ignorance, concerning the murder, which they were his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved first-born before the son of the hated, which is indeed the first-born:

17 But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the first-born, [x] by giving him a double portion of all [s] that he hath: for he is [y] the beginning of his strength; the right of the first-born is his.

18 ¶ If a man have [z] a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not [a] obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, [b] when they have chastened him, [c] will not hearken unto them;

19 Then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, [d] and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place:

20 And they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; [e] he is a glutton and a drunkard.

21 And [f] all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die: [g] so shalt thou put evil away from among you; and all Israel shall hear, and fear.

22 ¶ And if a man have committed [h] a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and [i] thou hang him on a tree;

23 His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for [k] he that is hanged is [l] accursed of God;) that [i] thy land be not defiled, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

THOU [a] shalt not see thy brother's ox or his sheep go astray, and [b] hide thyself from them: thou shalt in any case bring them again unto thy brother.

2 And if thy brother be not nigh unto thee, or if thou know him not; then thou shalt bring it unto thine own house, and it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it, and [c] thou shalt restore it to him again.

3 In like manner shalt thou do with his ass, and so shalt thou do with his raiment; and with all lost thing of thy brother's, which he hath lost, and thou hast found, shalt thou do likewise: thou mayest not hide thyself.

4 ¶ Thou shalt not see thy brother's ass or his ox fall down by the way, and hide thyself from them; [d] thou shalt surely help him to lift them up again.

5 ¶ The [e] woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment:[1] for all that do so are [f] abomination unto the LORD thy God.[2]

6 ¶ If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way in any tree, or on the ground, whether they be young ones or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, [g] thou shalt not take the dam with the young:

7 But thou shalt in any wise let the dam go,[3] and take the young to thee; [h] that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days.

8 ¶ When thou buildest a new house, [i] then thou shalt make a battlement for [k] thy roof,[4] that [l] thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence.

9 ¶ Thou [m] shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds; lest the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the [*] fruit of thy vineyard, be defiled.

10 ¶ Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together.

11 ¶ Thou shalt not wear a garment of divers sorts, as of woollen and linen together.

12 ¶ Thou shalt make thee [n] fringes upon the four [†] quarters of thy vesture, wherewith thou coverest thyself.

13 ¶ If any man take a wife, and [o] go in unto her, and hate her,

14 And give [p] occasions of speech [5] against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her I found her not a maid:

15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate:

16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her;

17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city.

18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him;

19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel; and she shall be his wife: [q] he may not put her away all his days.

20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel:

21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall [r] stone her with stones that she die; because [s] she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's required to make: the prayer, which the priests are supposed to have added, strongly declared that murder contaminates, and leaves guilt upon every land, and every person, who does not endeavour by all proper means to condign punishment; and the whole shadowed forth the atonement and intercession of Christ, through which iniquity is pardoned by a merciful God to his redeemed people.

[1] It was an idolatrous custom for men to wear the flowered garments of women when they worshipped Venus, and for women to wear a coat of mail and armour when they worshipped Mars, these dresses being accounted more pleasing to them, as better suiting their particular characters; for Venus was supposed to be the goddess of pleasure and love, and Mars the god of arms and war. The idolatrous notion of deities of different sexes was a great corruption of the knowledge of the true God, and gave great occasion for debauchery and impure rites, even in their religious worship. It was this custom which the present law was designed to discountenance. — LOWMAN.

KINDNESS TO FEMALE CAPTIVES.—Ver. 10—14. The case here regulated would inevitably take place on some occasions: and this statute implies no approbation of an Israelite's marrying a heathen captive, induced merely by her beauty; especially as it does not exclude the case of those who were previously married. If, however, a man became enamoured of his captive, he was not allowed to use force or authority to gratify his inclination, or to proceed with precipitation; but to take time for reflection. By taking the captive into the house, and there keeping her retired, her disposition would be discovered more easily; and if that proved disagreeable, the passion might abate. The becoming attire and ornaments, in which she might be taken captive, being changed for the mean habit of a mourner, might tend to diminish her attractions. "Shaving her head" would certainly have this effect; and the words rendered, pairing her nails, seem rather to mean, letting them grow. Some, however, think she was in this interim to be instructed in the law; and that these were external tokens of her renouncing idolatry, and embracing the religion of Israel. Her grief, also, for the death of her parents, if slain, or for her separation from them, would subside, and her mind be more reconciled to her condition; and if at last the Israelite continued in the same mind, he might marry her.—But in case he humbled her, and afterwards did not choose to continue her as his wife, he must not keep her as a slave, or sell her, but must give her her liberty, and act towards her according to the regulations made concerning women when divorced by their husbands.—All these circumstances would help to increase the caution of the Israelites, and tend to prevent them from rashly entering into these improper connexions.

PARENTAL IMPARTIALITY.—Ver. 15—17. As the words rendered "have two wives," may with greater exactness be translated, if a man shall have had two wives, it does not exclusively apply to the case of polygamy, but equally to that of him who had two wives in succession. In either case, the double portion, which according to custom was allotted to the heir, must be given to the eldest son, though not the son of the best beloved wife; which would counteract the effect of unjust and unreasonable partialities, and be a sort of compensation to her, who had the misfortune to be comparatively slighted and hated.

PUNISHMENT OF A REBELLIOUS CHILD.—Ver. 18—21. This law has great wisdom and mercy couched under its apparent severity; and it could not fail of producing most salutary effects, as far as any regard was paid to it. The parents were the only prosecutors; both must concur in the prosecution; and the elders of the city must decide the cause. The prosecution could not be admitted but for stubbornness and rebellion, connected with gluttony and drunkenness, and persisted in after rebukes and corrections; and these vices tended directly to ruin families and communities. The offender must be convicted and proved incorrigible, by evidence sufficient to induce the judges to denounce sentence, and the men of the city to execute it. Natural affection would seldom be so overcome, even by the basest crimes, as to admit both parents thus to join in prosecuting a son, much less to do so without sufficient cause; and in the very few instances in which hasty rage, or implacable resentment might induce parents to attempt such a horrid unnatural murder, as a needless prosecution must imply, the most effectual precautions were taken to prevent the consequences. The execution of the law must of course very seldom take place; and if ever it did, it could not fail to excite general attention and alarm, and prove a salutary warning to tens of thousands.—Scott.

CHAP. XXII. APPAREL.—CHASTITY.—Ver. 5. This prohibition no doubt was intended to exclude the customs of the heathen worshippers, who shamefully violated it for the worst of purposes; yet it is of moral tendency, and of general obligation; as it is added, "for all that do so are an abomination unto the LORD," which is never annexed to a merely ceremonial institution. The practice prohibited is not only indecent and of bad appearance, but it has in all ages been made subservient to lewdness, and to obtain opportunities of perpetrating the grossest crimes; to prevent which it is of vast importance that the distinction of the sexes should be visibly marked in their garments, without variation.—Let stage-players and others of similar occupations well consider (among other and great evils connected with their line of life,) how they will answer to God for their continual violation of this express commandment. And they who encourage and reward them for this disobedience, should ask themselves how far they are accessaries to their guilt; and let young people remember that this change of apparel is not to be considered as a frolic, but as an act of rebellion against God.—The spirit of the commandment also requires the distinction of the appearance, deportment, and occupations of the sexes. A man appearing effeminate, and affecting the appropriate employments of women—and a woman of a masculine appearance and behaviour, who engages in the exercises of men—are unnatural and offensive characters.—Scott.

MINUTE REGULATIONS.—Odd mixtures are here forbidden, ver. 9, 10. Much of this we met with before, Lev. xix. 19. There appears not any thing at all of moral evil in these things, and therefore we now make no conscience of sowing wheat and rye house: [t]so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

22 ¶ If [u]a man be found lying with a woman married to an husband, then they shall both of them die,[6] both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman: so shalt thou put away evil from Israel.[7]

23 ¶ If a damsel that is a virgin be [x]betrothed unto an husband, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her;

24 Then ye shall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die; the damsel, because she cried not, being in the city; and the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's [y]wife:[8] [z]so thou shalt put away evil from among you.

25 ¶ But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man ‡force her, and lie with her: then the man only that lay with her shall die:

26 But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel [a]no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter:

27 For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damsel [b]cried, and there was none to save her.

28 ¶ If a man find [c]a damsel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found;

29 Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife; [d]because he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days.

30 ¶ A [e]man shall not take his father's wife,[9] nor [f]discover his father's skirt.

[7] The commandment relating to adultery is of the utmost consequence to the peace of families and to the welfare of society, and forbids an iniquity most odious in the sight of God—an offence which all human laws condemn, but which they do not always punish as strictly as it deserves. By the law of Moses, death was the punishment of adultery; and restitution, with a fine, was the punishment of theft. But in Christian nations, I know not how and wherefore his rule is inverted, and it is safer to commit adultery than to steal, though surely it ought not to be so. —JORTIN.

7 ¶ Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite; for [i]he is thy brother: thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian; [k]because thou wast a stranger in his land.

8 The children that are begotten of them shall [l]enter into the congregation of the LORD in their [m]third generation.

9 ¶ When the host goeth forth against thine enemies, then [n]keep thee from every wicked thing.

10 ¶ If there be among you any man [o]that is not clean, by reason of uncleanness that chanceth him by night, then shall he go abroad out of the camp; he shall not come within the camp:

11 But it shall be, [p]when evening †cometh on, he shall [q]wash himself with water; and when the sun is down, he shall come into the camp again.

18 ¶ Thou shalt not bring the [a]hire of a whore, or the price [b]of a dog,[1] into the house of the LORD thy God [c]for any vow; for even both these are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

19 ¶ Thou shalt not [d]lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of any thing that is lent upon usury.

20 Unto [e]a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury, but unto thy brother thou shalt together, ploughing with horses and oxen together, and wearing linsey-woolsey garments; but hereby is forbidden either, 1. A conformity to some idolatrous customs of the heathen. Or, 2. That which is contrary to the plainness and purity of an Israelite. They must not gratify their own vanity and curiosity by putting those things together, which the Creator in infinite wisdom had made asunder; they must not be unequally yoked with unbelievers; nor mingle themselves with the unclean, as an ox with an ass. Nor must their profession and appearance in the world be motley, or party-coloured, but all of a piece, all of a kind.

PRESERVATION OF CHASTITY.—These laws relate to the seventh commandment, laying a restraint, by laying a penalty upon those fleshly lusts which war against the soul. 1. If a man, lusting after another woman, to get rid of his wife, slander her and falsely accuse her, as not having the virginity she pretended to when he married her, upon the disproof of his slander, he must be punished, ver. 13—19. What the meaning of that evidence is, by which the husband's accusation was to be proved false, the learned are not agreed, nor is it at all necessary to inquire—they for whom this law was intended, no doubt understood it; it is sufficient for us to know, that this wicked husband, who had thus endeavoured to ruin the reputation of his own wife, was to be scourged, and fined, and bound out from ever divorcing the wife he had thus abused, ver. 18, 19. Upon this dislike of her, he might have divorced her, if he had pleased, by the permission of the law, chap. xxiv. 1, but then he must have given her her dowry; if therefore, to save that, and to do her the greater mischief, he would thus destroy her good name, it was fit that he should be severely punished for it, and for ever after forfeit the permission to divorce her. 2. If the woman that was married as a virgin, were not found to be one, she was to be stoned to death at her father's door, ver. 20, 21. If the uncleanness had been committed before she was betrothed, it would not have been punished as a capital crime; but she must die for the abuse she put upon him whom she married, being conscious to herself of her being defiled, while she made him believe her to be a chaste and modest woman. But some think that her uncleanness was punished with death, only in case it was committed after she was betrothed, supposing there were few come to maturity but what were betrothed, though not yet married. Now, (1.) This gave a powerful caution to young women to flee fornication, since, however concealed before, so as not to mar their marriage, it would, very likely, be discovered after, to their perpetual infamy and utter ruin. 3. If any man, single or married, lay with a married woman, they were both to be put to death, ver. 22. This law we had before, Lev. xx. 10. For a married man to lie with a single woman, was not a crime of so high a nature, nor was it punished with death, because not introducing a spurious brood into families, under the character of legitimate children. 4. If a damsel were betrothed and not married, she was from under the eye of her intended husband, and therefore she and her chastity were taken under the special protection of the law. (1.) If her chastity were violated by her own consent, she was to be put to death, and her adulterer with her, ver. 23, 24. And it shall be presumed that she consented, if it were done in the city, or in any place where, had she cried out, help might speedily have come in to prevent the injury offered her. Qui tacet, consentire videtur—Silence implies consent. Note, It may be presumed that those willingly yield to a temptation, (whatever they pretend,) who will not use the means and helps they might be furnished with to avoid and overcome it. Nay, her being found in the city, a place of company and diversion, when she should have kept under the protection of her father's house, was an evidence against her, that she had not that dread of the sin, and the danger of it, which became a modest woman. Note, They that needlessly expose themselves to temptation, justly suffer for the same, if, ere they are aware, they be surprised and caught by it. Dinah lost her honour, to gratify her curiosity with a sight of the "daughters of the land." By this law the Virgin Mary was in danger of being made a public example, that is, of being stoned to death, but that God by an angel cleared the matter to Joseph. (2.) If she were forced, and never consented, he that committed the rape was to be put to death, but the damsel was to be acquitted, ver. 25—27.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. CORPOREAL SOUNDNESS.—Ver. 1. It is evident that this law was not meant to exclude mutilated Israelites, either from the common benefits of civil society, or any essential religious advantages, but merely to lay them under a disgraceful distinction. This would tend to discourage parents from mutilating their children, a practice which was exceedingly common in those ages and countries. To this they might often be induced, by the custom which prevailed, of employing eunuchs in the houses of the great and the courts of princes: so that they often rose to the highest posts of honour and authority. Some expositors therefore consider the phrase "shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD," as meaning, that they should be incapable of bearing any office in that government, which was placed over the people of God, who must thus enter a protest against this custom, and deliver selfish parents from this temptation. But others think, that the persons intended might not enter the inner court of the sanctuary, or join in celebrating the sacred feasts, as in full communion with the congregation of the LORD; but must be contented to worship without, as uncircumcised Gentiles were allowed to do. Indeed it is probable that the exclusion related to both these particulars: for as the blemished priests might not officiate at the altar; it is reasonable to conclude, that not lend upon usury; [f]that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

21 ¶ [g]When thou shalt vow a vow unto the LORD thy God, thou shalt not slack[2] to pay it: for the LORD thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee.

22 But if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee.

23 [h]That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt keep and perform; even a free-will-offering, according as thou hast vowed [i]unto the LORD thy God, which thou hast promised with thy mouth.

24 ¶ When thou comest[3] into thy neighbour's vineyard, then [k]thou mayest eat grapes thy fill at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel.

25 When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, [l]then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn.

WHEN a man [a]hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some *uncleanness in her; then [b]let him write her a bill of [†]divorcement, and give it in her hand, [c]and send her out of his house.

2 And when she is departed out of his house, [d]she may go and be another man's wife.

3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife;

4 [e]Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the LORD: and [f]thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

5 ¶ When [g]a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to war, [‡]neither shall he be charged with any business; but he shall be free at home one year, and shall [h]cheer up his wife which he hath taken.

6 ¶ No man [i]shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge: [1] for he taketh a man's [k]life to pledge.

7 ¶ If a man be [l]found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and maketh merchandise of him, or selleth him; [m]then that thief shall die: [n]and thou shalt put evil away from among you.

the blemished Israelite must neither enter the inner court of the sanctuary, nor fill up any public office in the congregation; in order that the people and ordinances of God might be preserved in purity and honour.—Scott.

CLEANLINESS IN THE CAMP.—The camp of the Lord must have nothing offensive in it, ver. 12—14. It is strange that the divine law, or at least the solemn order and direction of Moses, should extend to a thing of this nature; but the design of it was to teach them, 1. Modesty and good decorum; nature itself teaches them thus to distinguish themselves from beasts that know no shame. 2. Cleanliness, and (though not niceness, yet) neatness, even in their camp. Impurity is offensive to the senses God has endued us with, prejudicial to the health, a wrong to the comfort of human life, and an evidence of a careless slothful temper of mind. 3. Purity from the pollutions of sin; if there must be this care taken to preserve the body clean and sweet, much more should we be solicitous to keep the mind so. 4. A reverence of the divine majesty. This is the reason here given; "for the Lord thy God walketh" by his ark, the special token of his presence, "in the midst of thy camp;" with respect to that external symbol this external purity is required, which (though not insisted on in the letter when that reason ceases, yet) teaches us to preserve inward purity of soul, in consideration of the eye of God, which is always upon us. By this expression of respect to the presence of God among them, they were taught both to fortify themselves against sin, and to encourage themselves against their enemies with the consideration of that presence. 5. A regard one to another. The filthiness of one is noisome to many; this law of cleanliness therefore teaches us not to do that which will be justly offensive to our brethren, and grieve them. It is a law against nuisances.—Henry.

PURITY OF PUBLIC MORALS.—The magistrate was commanded not to connive at, much less to license, houses of prostitution and uncleanness; and not to allow any person openly to carry on the infamous trade of a prostitute, or sodomite, but to expel and extirpate such nuisances to the uttermost. The words used, denote persons dedicated or consecrated, that is, to the basest kinds of lewdness: according to infamous licentiousness and unnatural vices often openly perpetrated at the temples of idolaters, from which much of the gains of the priests and priestesses arose. For neither in this, nor any other place where the word sodomite is used in our translation, is there, in the original, any allusion to Sodom, or its inhabitants. The priest must not accept any oblations or sacrifices brought by persons of such vile characters; for God would not, though they should attempt to cloak their wickedness, or compensate for it, by making and performing religious vows, Prov. vii. 14. If the price of a dog be understood literally, not only the vileness of the animals, but their greediness, and resemblance of shamelessly lewd persons, must be considered as the reason of the restriction, and the extraordinary association. Many, however, understand it of the hire of unnatural crimes: yet figurative language is hardly admissible in statutes.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. DIVORCE.—Ver. 1—4. Divorces were always a deviation from the original institution of marriage, consequent upon man's depravity, the inconstancy of his mind, and the impetuosity of his passions. This customary deviation, God did not please, in the judicial law, the magistrate's rule, totally to prohibit; lest it should occasion the cruel treatment, or even the murder of those women who were become disagreeable to their husbands. The "uncleanness," on account of which the Israelites were suffered for the hardness of their hearts, to put away their wives, was not adultery, or any suspicion of it, for both these cases were otherwise provided against; but some ceremonial uncleanness, or disease, or some natural or moral objection, which formed a real grievance. In the days of Christ, the Jewish teachers, having construed the permission into a commandment extended it to the most frivolous matters, so that a licentious mind could not desire more allowance. Hence divorces prevailed, to the disuse of polygamy, and to the still greater hardship of the women, who were sent away, one after another, under colour of this law, on various pretexts, to make way for a new object of the roving affections. This accounts for the discourses of Christ being more explicitly against divorces, though the reason of them equally determines against polygamy, "for from the beginning it was not so." But whilst divorces were allowed, they were also regulated. A man could not, in a fit of anger, send away his wife, but must have time for reflection, while the legal instrument was preparing. For he must give her a bill of divorce properly authenticated, and, probably, specifying the reason; and we may suppose some provision was also made her out of her husband's substance. And it was no part of God's law to prohibit either party from marrying again; which restraint, when imposed by an absurd policy, is often no better than authorizing fornication. The woman might marry again and again, if set at liberty; but she must never more return to her former husband. This restriction, whilst it would operate as a check to inconstancy and rashness in the husband, would prevent the shameful practice of exchanging and lending wives, which prevailed in many nations. Israel would be preserved from that national guilt which such crimes enhance: and, as far as these regulations were adhered to, some of the worst effects of divorces would in good measure be prevented.—Scott.

KINDNESS TO SERVANTS.—Masters are commanded to be just to their poor servants, ver. 14, 15. 1. They must not oppress them, either by overloading them with work, giving them undue and unreasonable rebukes, or withholding from them proper maintenance.

Stripes must not exceed forty, 1. The ox is not to be muzzled, 4. Of raising seed unto a brother, 5. Of the immodest woman, 11. Of unjust weights, 13. The memory of Amalek is to be blotted out, 17.

IF there be a [a]controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them; then they shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked.

2 And it shall be, if the wicked man be [b]worthy to be beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face,[1] according to his fault, by a certain number.

3 Forty stripes he may give him, and [c]not exceed: lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee.

4 ¶ [d]Thou shalt not [e]muzzle the ox when he [*]treadeth out the corn.

5 ¶ If [f]brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger:[2] her [†]husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her.

6 And it shall be, that [g]the first-born which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, [h]that his name be not put out of Israel.

7 And if the man like not to take his [‡]brother's wife, then let his brother's wife [i]go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother.

8 Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her;

9 Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and [k]loose his shoe from off his foot,[3] and [l]spit in his face, and shall answer and say, [m]So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house.

10 And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.

11 ¶ When men strive together one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for [n]to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets;

12 Then thou shalt cut off her hand, [o]thine eye shall not pity her.

13 ¶ Thou shalt not have [p]in thy bag [§]divers weights, a great and a small.

14 Thou shalt not have in thine house [‖]divers measures, a great and a small.

15 But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have: [q]that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

16 For all that do such things, and [r]all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

17 ¶ Remember [s]what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt;

18 How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and [t]he feared not God.

19 Therefore it shall be, [u]when the LORD thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that [x]thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it.

AND it shall be, [a]when thou art come in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and possessest it, and dwellest therein,

2 That [b]thou shalt take of the first of all the fruit of the earth, which thou shalt bring of thy land that the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt put it in a basket, and shalt [c]go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to place his name there.

3 And thou shalt go unto [d]the priest that shall be in those days, and say unto him, I profess this day unto the LORD thy God, that I am come unto the country [e]which the LORD sware unto our fathers for to give us.

4 And the priest shall take the basket out of thine hand, and set it down [f]before the altar of the LORD thy God.

5 And thou shalt speak and say before the LORD thy God, [g]A Syrian[1] [h]ready to perish was my father; and [i]he went down into Egypt, and sojourned there with [k]a few, and [l]became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous:

A servant, though a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, must not be abused, "For 'thou wast a bondman' in the land where thou wast a stranger, ver. 18, and thou knowest what a grievous thing it is to be oppressed by a taskmaster, and therefore, in tenderness to those that are servants and strangers, and in gratitude to that God who set thee at liberty, and settled thee in a country of thy own, 'Thou shalt not oppress a servant.'" Let not masters be tyrants to their servants, for "their master is in heaven." See Job xxxi. 13. 2. They must be faithful and punctual in paying them their wages. "'At his day thou shalt give him his hire,' not only pay it him in full, without fraud, but pay it in time, without farther delay. As soon as he has done his day's work, if he desire it, let him have his day's wages," as those labourers, Matt. xx. 8, "when even was come." He that works by day's wages is supposed to live from hand to mouth, and cannot have to-morrow's bread for his family, till he is paid for his day's labour. If the wages be withheld, (1.) It will be grief to the servant, for, poor man, he "sets his heart upon it," or, as the word is, he "lifts up his soul to it," he is earnestly desirous of it, as the reward of his work, Job vii. 2, and depends upon it as the gift of God's providence for the maintenance of his family. A compassionate master, though it should be somewhat inconvenient to himself, would not disappoint the expectation of a poor servant that is so fond to think of receiving his wages. But that is not the worst. (2.) It will be guilt to the master. "The injured servant will cry against thee to the Lord;" since he has no one else to appeal to, he will lodge his appeal in the court of heaven, and it will be sin to thee. Or if he do not complain, the cause will speak for itself, the "hire of the labourers which is kept back by fraud," will itself "cry," Jam. v. 4. It is a greater sin than most people think it is, and will be found so in the great day, to put hardships upon poor servants, labourers, and workmen, that we employ. God will do them right, if men do not.—Henry.

CHAP. XXV. MARRIAGE OF A BROTHER'S WIDOW.—Here is the law settled concerning the marriage of a brother's widow. It appears from the story of Judah's family, that this had been an ancient usage, Gen. xxxviii. 8, for the keeping up of distinct families. The case put is a case that often happens, of a man's dying without issue, it may be in the prime of his time, soon after his marriage, and while his brethren were yet so young as to be unmarried. Now in this case, 1. The widow was not to marry again into any other family, unless all the relations of her husband did refuse her, that the estate she was endowed with might not be alienated. 2. The husband's brother, or next of kin, must marry her, partly out of respect to her, who, having forgotten her own people and her father's house, should have all possible kindness showed her by the family into which she was married; and partly out of respect to the deceased husband, that though he was dead and gone, he might not be forgotten, nor lost out of the genealogies of his tribe; for the first-born child, which the brother or next kinsman should have by the widow, should be denominated from him that was dead, and entered in the genealogy as his child, ver. 5, 6. Under that dispensation we have reason to think men had not so clear and certain a prospect of living themselves on the other side death, as we have now, to whom "life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel;" and therefore they could not but be the more desirous to live in their posterity, which innocent desire was in some measure gratified by this law, an expedient being found out, that though a man had no child by his wife, "yet his name should not be put out of Israel," that is, out of the pedigree, or, which was equivalent, remain there under the brand of childlessness. The Sadducees put a case to our Saviour upon this law, with a design to perplex the doctrine of the resurrection by it, Matt. xxii. 24, &c., perhaps insinuating that there was no need of maintaining the immortality of the soul, and a future state, since the law had so well provided for the perpetuating of men's names and families in the world. But, 3. If the brother or next of kin declined to do this good office to the memory of him that was gone, what must be done in that case? Why, (1.) He shall not be compelled to do it, ver. 7. If he like her not, he is at his liberty to refuse her, which, some think, was not permitted in this case before this law of Moses. Affection is all in all to the comfort of that relation; that is a thing which cannot be forced, and therefore the relation should not be forced without it. (2.) Yet he shall be publicly disgraced for not doing it. The widow, as the person most concerned for the name and honour of the deceased, was to complain to the elders of his refusal; if he persist in it, she was to "pluck off his shoe, and spit in his face," in open court, (or as the Jewish doctors moderate it, spit "before" his face,) thus to fasten a mark of infamy upon him, which was to remain with his family after him, ver. 8—10. Note, Those justly suffer in their own reputation who do not do what they ought to preserve the name and honour of others. He that would not build up his brother's house, deserved to have this blemish put upon his own, that it should be called "the house of him that had his shoe loosed," in token that he deserved to go barefoot. In the case of Ruth, we find this law executed, Ruth iv. 7, but because, upon the refusal of the next kinsman, there was another ready to perform the duty of an husband's brother, it was that other that plucked off the shoe, and not the widow; Boaz, and not Ruth.—Henry.

7 And when [n]we cried unto the LORD God of our fathers, the LORD heard our voice, and [o]looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppression:

8 And [p]the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with great terribleness, and with signs, and with wonders:

9 And [q]he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even [r]a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 And now, behold, [s]I have brought the first-fruits of the land which thou, O LORD, hast given me. [t]And thou shalt set it before the LORD thy God, [u]and worship before the LORD thy God.

11 And thou shalt [x]rejoice in every good thing which the LORD thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine house, thou, and the Levite, and the stranger that is among you.

12 ¶ When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase [y]the third year, which is the year of tithing, and [z]hast given it unto the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, that they may eat within thy gates, and be filled;

13 Then thou shalt say before the LORD thy God, I have brought away the hallowed things[2] out of mine house, and also have given them unto the [a]Levite, and unto the stranger, to the fatherless, and to the widow, according to all thy commandments which thou hast commanded me: [b]I have not transgressed thy commandments, neither have I [c]forgotten them.

14 I have not [d]eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean use, nor given ought thereof for [e]the dead: but I have hearkened to the voice of the LORD my God, and have done according to all that thou hast commanded me.

15 [f]Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and [g]bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou swarest unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

16 ¶ [h]This day the LORD thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes and judgments: thou shalt therefore [i]keep and do them with all thine heart, and all thy soul.

17 Thou hast [k]avouched the LORD this day to be thy God, [l]and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to [m]hearken unto his voice:

18 And [n]the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all his commandments;

CHAP. XXVII.

The people are to write the law upon stones, 1; and to build an altar of whole stones, 5. The curses from mount Ebal, 14.

AND Moses, with the elders of Israel, commanded the people, saying, [a]Keep all the commandments which I command you this day.

2 And it shall be, [b]on the day when ye shall pass over Jordan [c]unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, that thou shalt set thee up [d]great stones, and plaster them with plaster.

3 And [e]thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over; that thou mayest go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, [f]a land that floweth with milk and honey; as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee.

4 Therefore it shall be, when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye shall set up these stones, which I command you this day, [g]in mount Ebal, and thou shalt plaster them with plaster.

5 And [h]there shalt thou build an altar unto the LORD thy God, an altar of stones: [i]thou shalt not lift up any iron tool upon them.

6 Thou shalt build the altar of the LORD thy God of whole stones; and thou shalt offer [k]burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD thy God:

7 And thou shalt offer [l]peace-offerings, and shalt eat there, and [m]rejoice before the LORD thy God.

8 And [n]thou shalt write upon the stones all the words of this law [o]very plainly.

9 ¶ And Moses, and the priests the Levites, spake unto all Israel, saying, Take heed, and hearken, O Israel; [p]This day thou art become the people of the LORD thy God.

10 Thou [q]shalt therefore obey the voice of the LORD thy God, and do his commandments and his statutes, which I command thee this day.

11 ¶ And Moses charged the people the same day, saying,

12 These shall stand upon [r]mount Gerizim to bless the people, when ye are come over Jordan; [s]Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin.

13 And these shall stand upon [t]mount Ebal[1] [*]to curse; [u]Reuben, Gad, and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.

14 ¶ And [x]the Levites shall speak, and must go on with it, when the priest had set down the basket before the altar, as a present to God their great Landlord, ver. 3, 4. 1. He must begin with a receipt in full for the good land which God had given them, ver. 3. "I profess that I am come" now at last, after forty years' wandering, "unto the country which the Lord sware to give us." This was most proper to be said when they came first into Canaan; probably, when they had been long settled there, they varied from this form. Note, When God has made good his promises to us, he expects that we should own it, to the honour of his faithfulness; this is like giving up the bond, as Solomon does, 1 Kings viii. 56; "There has not failed one word of all his good promise." And our creature comforts are then doubly sweet, when we see them flowing from the fountain of the promise. 2. He must remember and own the mean original of that nation, which he was a member of; how great soever they were now, and he himself with them, their beginning was very small, which ought thus to be kept in mind throughout all the ages of their church by this public confession, that they might not be proud of their privileges and advantages, but might for ever be thankful to that God whose grace chose them when they were so low, and raised them so high. Two things they must own for this purpose. (1.) The meanness of their common ancestor. "A Syrian ready to perish was my father," ver. 5. Jacob is here called an Aramite, or Syrian, because he lived twenty years in Padan-Aram; his wives were of that country, and his children were all born there, except Benjamin; and perhaps the confessor means not Jacob himself, but that son of Jacob who was the father of his tribe. However it be, both father and sons were more than once ready to perish, by Laban's severity, Esau's cruelty, and the famine in the land; which last was the occasion of their going down into Egypt. "Laban the Syrian sought to destroy my father," so the Chaldee; "had almost destroyed him," so the Arabic. (2.) The miserable condition of their nation in its infancy. They sojourned in Egypt as strangers, they served there as slaves, ver. 6, and that a great while; as their father was called a Syrian, they might be called Egyptians; so that their possession of Canaan being so long discontinued, they could not pretend any tenant-right to it. A poor, despised, oppressed people they were in Egypt, and therefore, though now rich and great, had no reason to be proud, or secure, or forgetful of God. 3. He must thankfully acknowledge God's great goodness, not only to himself in particular, but to Israel in general. (1.) In bringing them out of Egypt, ver. 7, 8. It is spoken of here as an act of pity, "he looked on our affliction;" and an act of power, he "brought us forth with a mighty hand." This was a great salvation, fit to be remembered upon all occasions, and particularly upon this, they need not grudge to bring a basket of "first-fruits" to God, for to him they owed it, that they were not now bringing in the tale of bricks to their cruel taskmasters. (2.) In settling them in Canaan, ver. 9, "He hath given us this land." Observe, He must not only give thanks for his own lot, but for the land in general, which was given to Israel; nor only for this year's profits, but for the ground itself which produced them, which God had graciously granted to his ancestors, and entailed upon his posterity. Note, The comfort we have in our particular enjoyments, should lead us to be thankful for our share in public peace and plenty; and with present mercies we should bless God for the former mercies we remember, and the further mercies we expect and hope for. 4. He must offer to God his basket of first-fruits, ver. 10. I have "brought the first-fruits of the land," (like a pepper-corn,) as a quit-rent for "the land which thou hast given me." Note, Whatever we give to God, it is but "of his own" that we "give him," 1 Chron. xxix. 14. And it becomes us, who receive so much from him, to study what we shall render to him. The basket he set before God; and the priests, as God's receivers, had the first-fruits, as perquisites of their place and fees for attending, Num. xviii. 12.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVII. THE LAW INSCRIBED ON A PUBLIC MONUMENT.—The people are commanded to set up a monument on which they must "write the words of this law." 1. The monument itself was to be very mean; only rough unhewn stone plastered over; not polished marble or alabaster, nor brass tables, but common plaster upon stone, ver. 2. It is repeated again, ver. 4, and orders given that it be written, not very finely, to be admired by the curious, but very plainly, that he that runs might read it, Hab. ii. 2. The word of God needs not to be set off by the art of man; not embellished with the "enticing words of man's wisdom." But, 2, The inscription was to be very great, "All the words of this law," ver. 3, and again, ver. 8. Some understand it only of the covenant between God and Israel, mentioned, chap. xxvi. 17, 18. Let this heap be set up for a witness, like that memorial of the covenant between Laban and Jacob, which was nothing but a heap of stones thrown hastily together, upon which they did eat together in token of friendship, Gen. xli. 46, 47, and that stone which Joshua set up, Josh. xxiv. 27. Others think that the curses of the covenant in this chapter were written upon this monument; the rather, because it was set up in mount Ebal, ver. 4. Others think that the whole book of Deuteronomy was written upon this monument; or at least the statutes and judgments from chap. xii. to the end of chap. xxvi. They must also set up an altar. By the words of the law which were written upon the plaster, God "spake to them;" by the altar, and the sacrifices offered upon it, they spake to God; and thus was communion kept up between them and God. The word and prayer must go together. Though they might not of their own heads, set up any other altar beside that 17 Cursed [e]be he that removeth his neighbour's land-mark: and all the people shall say, Amen.

18 Cursed be [f]he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way: and all the people shall say, Amen.

19 Cursed be he that [g]perverteth the judgment of the stranger, fatherless, and widow: and all the people shall say, Amen.

20 Cursed be [h]he that lieth with his father's wife; because he uncovereth his father's skirt: and all the people shall say, Amen.

21 Cursed be [i]he that lieth with any manner of beast: and all the people shall say, Amen.

22 Cursed be [k]he that lieth with his sister, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother: and all the people shall say, Amen.

23 Cursed be [l]he that lieth with his mother-in-law: and all the people shall say, Amen.

24 Cursed [m]be he that smiteth his neighbour secretly: and all the people shall say, Amen.

25 Cursed be he that [n]taketh reward to slay an innocent person: and all the people shall say, Amen.

26 [o]Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this [p]law to do them: and all the people shall say, Amen.

The blessings for obedience, 1. The curses for disobedience, 15.

AND it shall come to pass, [a]if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe and [b]to do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the LORD thy God [c]will set thee on high above all nations of the earth:

2 And all these blessings shall [d]come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God.

3 Blessed [e]shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be [f]in the field.

4 Blessed shall be the [g]fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.

5 Blessed shall be [h]thy basket and thy store.*

6 Blessed shalt thou [i]be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out.

7 The LORD [k]shall cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out against thee one way, and [l]flee before thee seven ways.

8 The LORD shall [m]command the blessing upon thee [n]in thy [†]store-houses, and in all that thou [o]settest thine hand unto; and he shall bless thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

9 The LORD shall [p]establish thee an holy people unto himself, [q]as he hath sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, and walk in his ways.

10 And all people of the earth shall see that thou art [r]called by the name of the LORD, [s]and they shall be afraid of thee.

11 And the LORD shall make thee [t]plenteous [‡]in goods, in the fruit of thy [§]body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers to give thee.

12 The LORD shall [u]open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season, and [x]to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt [y]lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow.

13 And the LORD shall make thee [z]the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; [a]if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them:

14 And [b]thou shalt not go aside from any of the words which I command thee this day, to the right hand or to the left, to go after other gods to serve them.

15 ¶ But it shall come to pass, [c]if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes, which I command thee this day, that [d]all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee.

16 Cursed shalt thou be [e]in the city, and cursed shalt thou be [f]in the field.

17 Cursed shall be [g]thy basket and thy store.

18 Cursed shall be [h]the fruit of thy body, and [i]the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.

19 Cursed shalt thou be [k]when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out.

at the tabernacle, yet, by the appointment of God, they might, upon a special occasion. Elijah built a temporary altar of twelve unhewn stones like this here, when he brought Israel back to this covenant which was now made, 1 Kings xviii. 31, 32. Now, (1.) This altar must be made of such stones as they found ready upon the field, not new cut out of the rock, much less squared artificially; "Thou shalt not lift up any iron tool upon them," ver. 5. Christ, our Altar, is a "stone cut out of the mountain without hands," Dan. ii. xxxiv. 35, and therefore "refused by the builders," as having no form or comeliness, but accepted of God the Father, and made the Head of the corner. (2.) Burnt-offerings and peace-offerings must be offered upon this altar, ver. 6, 7, that by them they might give glory to God, and obtain favour. Where the law was written, an altar was set up close by it, to signify, that we could not look with any comfort upon the law, being conscious to ourselves of the violation of it, if it were not for the great Sacrifice by which atonement is made for sin; and the altar was set up on mount Ebal, the mount on which those tribes stood, that said, "Amen," to the curses, to intimate, that through Christ we are "redeemed from the curse of the law."—Henry.

GERIZIM AND EBAL.—Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal lay near together, with a valley between; and what was spoken in a loud voice on the one, might be heard on the other. No doubt the blessings, as well the curses, were audibly pronounced and ratified in a general manner, by the tribes appointed for that purpose: so that by this solemnity, all Israel deliberately consented to the national covenant; declared that they expected the blessings, stipulated to them, only in a way of obedience; and confessed that, individually and nationally, they should merit, and might expect, to be accursed of God, if they were disobedient to his commandments. But some priests and Levites were chosen to pronounce from Mount Ebal the subsequent particular curses; though the tribe of Levi stood on Mount Gerizim. No mention is made of any special acts of obedience on account of which blessings were pronounced; as the blessings do not belong to those who obey some and neglect others of God's commandments; "for he that keepeth the whole law, and offendeth in one point, is guilty of all."—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. BLESSING PROMISED.—It is promised that the providence of God should prosper them in all their outward concerns. These blessings are said to overtake them, ver. 2. Good people sometimes, under a sense of their own unworthiness, are ready to fly from the blessing, and to conclude that it belongs not to them; but the blessing shall find them out and follow them notwithstanding; thus in the great day, the blessing will overtake the righteous that say, "Lord, when saw we thee hungry, and fed thee?" Matt. xxv. 37. It is promised, 1. That they should be safe and easy; a blessing should come upon them wherever they were, in the city, or in the field, ver. 3. Whether their habitation was in the town or country; whether they were husbandmen or tradesmen; whether their business called them into the city or into the field; they should be preserved from the dangers, and have the comforts, of every scene. This blessing should attend them in their journeys, going out and coming in, ver. 6. Their persons should be protected, and the affair they went about should succeed well. Observe here, what a necessary and constant dependence we have upon God, both for the continuance and comfort of this life. We need him at every turn, in all the various moments of life; we cannot be safe if he withdraw his protection, nor easy if he suspend his favour: but if he bless us, go where we will, it is well with us. 2. That their families should be built up in a numerous issue; blessed "shall be the fruit of thy body," ver 4, and in that the Lord shall "make thee plenteous," ver. 11, in pursuance of the promise made to Abraham, that his seed should be "as the stars of heaven" for multitude, and that God would be a God to them, than which, a greater blessing, and more comprehensive, could not be entailed upon "the fruit of their body;" see Isa. lxi. 9. 3. That they should be rich, and have an abundance of all the good things of this life, which are promised them, not merely that they might have the pleasure of enjoying them, but (as Bishop Patrick observes out of one of the Jewish writers) that they might have wherewithal to honour God, and might be helped and encouraged to serve him cheerfully, and to proceed and persevere in their obedience to him. A blessing is promised, (1.) On all they had without doors, corn and cattle in the field, ver. 4, 11. Their cows and sheep particularly, which should be blessed for the owners' sake, and made blessings to them. In order to this, it is promised that God would give them "rain in due season," which is called his good treasure, ver. 12, because with this river of God the earth is enriched, Psal. lxv. 9. Our constant supplies we must see coming from God's good treasure, and own our obligations to him for them; if he withhold his rain, the fruits both of the ground and of the cattle soon perish. (2.) On all they had within doors, the basket and store, ver. 5, the storehouses or barns, ver. 8. When it is brought home, God will bless it, and not blow upon it as sometimes he does, Hag. i. 6, 9. We depend upon God and his blessing, not only for our yearly corn out of the field, but for our daily bread out of our basket and store, and therefore are taught to pray for it every day. 4. That they should have success in all their employments, which would be a constant satisfaction to them; "'The Lord shall command the blessing' (and it is he only that can command it) upon thee, not only in all thou hast, but in all thou dost, all 'that thou settest thine hand unto,'" ver. 8. This intimated that even when they were rich, they must not be idle, but must find some good employment or other to set their hand to, and God would own their

A. M. 2553.—B. C. 1451.

20 The LORD shall [l]send upon thee cursing, [m]vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand [l]unto for to do, [n]until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the wickedness of thy doings, whereby thou hast forsaken me.

21 The LORD shall make [o]the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he have consumed thee from off the land whither thou goest to possess it.

22 The LORD shall smite thee with [p]a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, [l]and with an extreme burning, and with the [s]sword, and with [q]blasting, and with mildew: and they shall pursue thee until thou perish.

23 And [r]thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron.

24 The LORD shall [t]make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed.

25 The LORD shall [u]cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; [v]and shalt be [t]removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

26 And [x]thy carcase shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and no man shall [y]fray them away.

27 The LORD will smite thee [z]with the botch of Egypt, and with the [a]emerods, and with [b]the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed.

28 The LORD shall smite thee [c]with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart:

29 And thou shalt [d]grope at noon-day, as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways; and [e]thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore, and no man shall save thee.

30 [f]Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her: thou [g]shalt build an house, and thou shalt not dwell therein: thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not [‡]gather the grapes thereof.

31 Thine [h]ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof: thine ass shall be violently taken away from before thy face, and shall not be [§]restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to rescue them.

32 Thy [i]sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look, and [k]fail with longing for them all the day long; and there shall be no might in thine hand.

33 The [l]fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up; and [m]thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed alway:

34 So that thou shalt be [n]mad for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

35 The LORD shall smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with [o]a sore botch that cannot be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the top of thy head.

36 The LORD shall [p]bring thee, and thy king, which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and [q]there shalt thou serve other gods,[2] wood and stone.

37 And thou shalt [r]become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations whither the LORD shall lead thee.

38 Thou [s]shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather but little in: [t]for the locust shall consume it.

39 Thou shalt plant vineyards, and dress them, but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes: [u]for the worms shall eat them.

40 Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not [x]anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit.

41 Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but [l]thou shalt not enjoy them: [y]for they shall go into captivity.

42 All [z]thy trees, and fruit of thy land, shall the locust [*]consume.

43 The stranger that is within thee [a]shall get up above thee very high, and thou shalt come down very low.

44 He shall [b]lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail.

45 Moreover, [c]all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed; [d]because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee.

46 And they shall be upon thee for [e]a sign, and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever.

47 Because thou [f]servedst not the LORD thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things;

48 Therefore shalt thou [g]serve thine enemies, which the LORD shall send against thee, [h]in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put [i]a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee.

49 [j]The LORD shall bring [k]a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift [l]as the eagle flieth; [m]a nation whose tongue thou shalt not [†]understand; industry, and "bless the work of their hand," ver. 12, for that which makes rich, and keeps so, is the blessing of the Lord upon the hand of the diligent, Prov. x. 4, 22. 5. That they should have honour among their neighbours, ver. 1, "The Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations." He made them so by taking them into covenant with himself, chap. xxvi. 19. And he would make them more and more so by their outward prosperity, if they would not by sin disparage themselves. Two things should help to make them great among the nations. (1.) Their wealth, ver. 12, "'Thou shalt lend to many nations' upon interest," (which they were allowed to take from the neighbouring nations,) "but thou shalt not have occasion to borrow." This would give them great influence with all about them: for the borrower is servant to the lender. It may be meant of trade and commerce, that they should export abundantly more than they should import, which would keep the balance on their side. (2.) Their power, ver. 13, "The Lord shall make thee the head," to give law to all about them, to exact tribute, and to arbitrate all controversies. Every sheaf should bow to theirs; which should make them so considerable, that "all the people of the earth" should be "afraid of them," ver. 10, that is, should reverence their true grandeur, and dread making them their enemies. The flourishing of religion among them, and the blessing of God upon them, would make them formidable to all their neighbours, terrible as an army with banners. 6. That they should be victorious over their enemies, and prosper in all their wars.

CURSES THREATENED.—1. Bodily diseases are threatened; that they should be epidemical in their land. These God sometimes makes use of for the chastisement and improvement of his own people, "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." But here they are threatened to be brought upon his enemies, as tokens of his wrath, and designed for their ruin. So that according to the temper of our spirits, under sickness, accordingly it is to us a blessing or a curse. But whatever sickness may be to particular persons, it is certain that epidemical diseases raging among a people, are national judgments, and are so to be accounted. He here threatens, (1.) Painful diseases, ver. 35, a sore botch, beginning in the legs and knees, but spreading like Job's boils from head to foot. And (2.) Shameful diseases, ver. 27, the botch of Egypt, (such boils and blains as the Egyptians had been plagued with, when God brought Israel from among them,) and the emerods and scab, vile diseases, the just punishment of those who by sin had made themselves vile. (3.) Mortal diseases. The pestilence, ver. 21, the consumption, (put for all chronical diseases,) and the fever, (for all acute diseases,) ver. 22; see Lev. xxvi. 16, and all incurable, ver. 27. 2. Famine, and scarcity of provisions; and this, (1.) For want of rain, ver. 23, 24, "Thy heaven over thy head," that part that is over thy land, "shall be as dry as brass," while the heavens over other countries shall distil their dews; and when the heaven is as brass, the earth of course will be as iron, so hard and unfruitful. Instead of rain, the dust shall be blown out of the highways into the field, and spoil the little that there is of the fruits of the earth. (2.) By destroying insects. The locust should destroy the corn, so that they should not have so much as their seed again, ver. 38, 42. And the fruit of the vine, which should make glad their hearts, should all be worm-eaten, ver. 39. And the olive, some way or other, should be made to cast its fruit, ver. 40. The heathen use many superstitious customs in honour of their idol-gods, for preserving the fruits of the earth; but Moses tells Israel that the only way they had to preserve them, was to keep God's commandments; for he is a God that will not be sported with like their idols, but will be served in spirit and in truth. This threatening we find fulfilled in Israel, 1 Kings xvii. 1; Jer. xiv. 1, &c.; Joel i. 4. 3. That they should be smitten before their enemies in war, who, it is likely, would be the more cruel to them, when they had them at their mercy, for the severity they had used against the nations of Canaan, which their neighbours in after-ages would be apt to remember against them, ver 25. 4. That they should be infatuated in all their counsels, so as not to discern their own interest, nor bring any thing to pass for the public good, ver 28, 29, "The Lord shall smite thee with madness and blindness." Note, God's judgments can reach the minds of men, to fill them with darkness and horror, as well as their bodies and estates; and those are the sorest of all judgments, which make men a terror to themselves, and their own destroyers. 5. That they should be plundered of all their enjoyments, stripped of all by the proud and imperious conqueror, such as Benhadad was to Ahab, 1 Kings xx. 5, 6. Not only their houses and vineyards should be taken from them, but their wives and children, ver. 30, 32. Their dearest comforts, which they took most pleasure in, and promised themselves most from, should be the entertainment and triumph of their enemies. As they had dwelt in houses which they builded not, and eaten of vineyards which they planted not, chap. vi. 10, 11, so others should do by them. Their oxen, asses, and sheep, like Job's, should be taken away before their eyes, and they should not be able to recover them, ver. 31. And all the fruit of their land and labours should be devoured and eaten up by the enemy; so that they, and theirs, would want necessaries, while their enemies were revelling with that which they had laboured for.—Henry.

DISPERSION, EXILE, AND DEATH.—Ver. 64. A Jewish writer, quoted by Bishop Patrick, has these words: "In the Roman captivity, the Jews were dispersed and dissipated through all the regions of the East and West; for every nation of which the Roman army consisted, when they returned to their own countries, carried some of them along with them, into Greece, Germany, Italy, Spain, France, and all other

50 A nation [t]of [u]fierce countenance,[3] which [v]shall not regard the person of the old, nor shew favour to the young:

51 And he shall eat [p]the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed: [q]which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee.

52 And he shall [r]besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land; and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, throughout all thy land, which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

53 And thou shalt eat [s]the fruit of thine own [t]body,[4] the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, which the LORD thy God hath given thee, in the siege, and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee:

54 So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, [u]his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward [w]the wife of his bosom, and toward the remnant of [x]his children which he shall leave:

55 So that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children whom he shall eat; because he hath nothing left him in the [y]siege, and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee in all thy gates.

56 The tender and [z]delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, [a]her eye shall be evil toward the husband of her bosom, and toward her son, and toward her daughter,

57 And toward her [1]young one that [b]cometh out from between her feet, and toward her children which she shall bear: for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly in the siege and straitness, wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates.

58 [c]If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest [d]fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD;

59 Then the LORD will make [e]thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and sore sicknesses, and of long continuance.

60 Moreover, he will bring upon thee [f]all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee:

61 Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD *bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed.

62 And ye shall be left [g]few in number, whereas ye were [h]as the stars of heaven for multitude; because thou wouldest not obey the voice of the LORD thy God.

63 And it shall come to pass, that as the LORD [i]rejoiced over you[5] to do you good, and to multiply you; so the LORD will [k]rejoice over you to destroy you, and to bring you to nought: and ye shall be [l]plucked from off the land whither thou goest to possess it.

64 And the LORD shall [m]scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and [n]there thou shalt serve other gods,[6] which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone.

65 And among these nations [o]shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but [p]the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, [q]and sorrow of mind:

66 And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; [r]and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life:

67 In [s]the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

68 And the LORD shall [t]bring thee into Egypt again with ships, by the way whereof I spake unto thee, Thou shalt see it no more again: and [u]there ye shall be sold unto your enemies for bond-men and bond-women, and no man shall buy you.

An exhortation to obedience, 2. The people enter into a covenant before the Lord, 10.

THESE are [a]the words of the covenant which the LORD commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, [b]besides the covenant which he made with them in Horeb.

2 ¶ And Moses called unto all Israel, and said unto them, [c]Ye have seen all that the LORD did before your eyes in the land of Egypt unto Pharaoh, and unto all his servants, and unto all his land;

3 The great [d]temptations which thine eyes have seen, the signs, and those great miracles;

4 Yet the LORD hath not [e]given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day.

5 And I have led you forty years in the wilderness: [f]your clothes are not waxen old upon you, [g]and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot.

6 Ye have not [h]eaten bread, [i]neither have

[v] How singularly applicable this characteristic was of the Romans, may appear from the following instance out of many. In a war which broke out between the Romans and Samnites (year of Rome 412), the latter attributed their defeat, after a long and obstinate engagement, to the fierce looks of the Romans. They said, that "the eyes of the Romans seemed to be on fire, their countenances were wild, and their looks furious; and that this excited more terror in them than any thing else."—HALES.

countries, which either Christians or Mohammedans now possess." Indeed it is certain they have been ever since scattered abroad throughout the earth: so that, as to their national existence, the judgments of God have pursued them even to their destruction.—"It is too common for the Jews, in popish countries, to comply with the idolatrous worship,—and to bow down to stocks and stones, rather than that their effects should be confiscated."—[Bp. Newton.] "The Spanish and Portugal inquisitions reduce them to the dilemma of being either hypocrites, or burnt.—They are very numerous in those countries, but confounded with the ecclesiastics, &c. In vain the great lords of Spain make alliances, change their names, and take ancient scutcheons; they are still known to be of Jewish race, and Jews themselves. The convents of monks and nuns are full of them. Orobio, who relates the fact, knew these dissemblers: he was one of them, and bent the knee before the sacrament. Moreover, he brings proof of his assertion, in maintaining that there are in the synagogue of Amsterdam, brothers and sisters, and near relations, to good families in Spain and Portugal, &c., who came to do penance for the crime they have committed in dissembling."—[Basnage's History of the Jews.] As the latter part of this prophecy evidently relates to the present state of the Jews, as even their own writers allow; the prediction, that in their dispersed state, "they should serve other gods, which neither they nor their fathers had known, even wood and stone," seems so evidently to mark out this hypocritical compliance with the new idolatry of the anti-christians, in the worship of the images of saints and angels, as even to add to the credibility of the extraordinary facts here stated by their historian. Ver. 65—67. The dispersed Jews would find no alleviation or respite from misery. Accordingly they have hitherto found no country, in which they are treated as denizens: all suspect them as enemies, and behave to them as aliens; if they do not harass, oppress, and persecute them. It may be useful to state a fact or two, out of very many, in illustration of these verses.—"A dreadful massacre was made of the Jews at Lisbon, (1506,) for three days together; where men were not suffered to die of their deadly wounds, but were dragged by their mangled limbs into the market-place, where the bodies of the living and the slain, with others half alive and half dead, were burnt together in heaps. The spectacle was so horrible, that it quite astonished the rest of this wretched people, two thousand of which perished in this barbarous manner. Parents durst not mourn for their children, nor children for their parents;—so that their hearts no doubt were ready to break with grief."—"A decree was made, (in Spain, 1493,) that all the Jews should either change their religion, or quit the country in three months. Three hundred thousand, old and young, men and women, went away on foot in one day, not knowing whither to go. Some went into Portugal, others into Navarre, where they conflicted with many calamities: for some became a prey, or perished by famine and pestilence—others committed themselves to the sea: but there they met with new disasters. Many were sold for slaves, many drowned, many burnt in the ships that were set on fire. After this a plague swept away the rest of these miserable wretches, who were hated by all mankind: so that all that vast number perished, except a very few."—(Bp. Patrick.)—Nothing seems more suited to confirm a sensible but hesitating inquirer concerning the truth of revelation, than a careful comparison of this chapter, and of the prophecies of the New Testament respecting the Jews, with their actual history to the present day: this appears to be capable of effecting every thing which any external evidence imaginable can effect; and the demonstration thence deduced, and which may be continually re-examined at leisure, and with deliberation, seems more convincing than miracles, which are transient acts, and can only be reviewed in the testimony with which they are authenticated. "What stronger proof can we desire of the divine legation of Moses?—How these instances may affect others I know not, but for myself I must acknowledge, that they not only convince, but amaze and astonish me beyond expression."—[Bishop Newton.] Ver. 68. Many of the Jews rebelliously went into Egypt after the Babylonish captivity, and there miserably perished. Multitudes went thither, and settled under the successors of Alexander. But this verse seems especially to point out an event, which took place subsequent to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and the desolation made by Adrian. Numbers of the captives were sent by sea into Egypt, (as well as into other countries,) and sold for slaves at a vile price, and for the meanest offices; and many thousands were left to perish for want; for the multitude was so great, that purchasers could not be found for them all at any price. God had brought the nation out of Egypt triumphantly, and had forbidden them to return; and had not their sin incurred the severest vengeance, he would never have permitted them to have been forced thither: but, by their iniquities, they provoked him to reduce them to as abject a condition, as that from which he had redeemed them.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIX. MAN'S BLINDNESS.—Ver. 4. Fallen man never makes a proper use of his senses and faculties, and of religious instruction, and outward advantages, without the special grace of God. An entire indisposedness to that which is spiritually good, and a strong propensity to evil, the effects of our fall in Adam, are the sources of all actual wickedness, and render us the objects of the Lord's holy abhorrence, and righteous displeasure. No doubt Omnipotence could overcome these in every man: but the exercise of the power of God is directed by infinite wisdom, and regulated as most conducive to his glory. No sinner can deserve so vast a benefit from his offended Creator: but every man might ye drunk wine or strong drink; that ye might know that I am the LORD your God.

7 And when ye came unto this place, [k]Sihon the king of Hesbon, and Og the king of Bashan, came out against us unto battle, and we smote them:

8 And we took their land, and gave it for an inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh.

9 [l]Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do.

10 ¶ Ye [m]stand this day all of you before the LORD your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Israel,

11 Your little ones, your wives, and thy [n]stranger that is in thy camp, from [o]the hewer[t] of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water;

12 That [p]thou shouldest [*]enter into covenant with the LORD thy God, and [q]into his oath, which the LORD thy God maketh with thee this day;

13 That he may [r]establish thee to-day for a people unto himself, and that [s]he may be unto thee a God, as he hath said unto thee, and as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.

14 Neither with you only [t]do I make this covenant and this oath;

15 But with him that standeth here with us this day before the LORD our God, and [u]also with him that is not here with us this day:

16 (For ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt, and how we came [x]through the nations which ye passed by;

17 And ye have seen their abominations, and their [†]idols, wood and stone, silver and gold, which were among them:)

18 Lest there [y]should be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe, whose heart turneth away this day from the LORD our God, to go and serve the gods of these nations; [z]lest there should be among you a root that beareth [‡]gall and wormwood;

19 And it come to pass, when he heareth the words of [a]this curse, [b]that he bless himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, [c]though I walk in the [§]imagination of mine heart, [d]to add [‖]drunkenness to thirst:

20 The LORD [e]will not spare him; but then the anger of the LORD and [f]his jealousy shall [g]smoke against that man, and [h]all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him, and the LORD shall [i]blot out his name from under heaven.

21 And the LORD shall [k]separate him unto evil out of all the tribes of Israel, according to all the curses of the covenant that [*]are written in this book of the law:

22 So that the generation to come of your children that shall rise up after you, and the stranger that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses [†]which the LORD hath laid upon it;

23 And that the whole land thereof is [l]brimstone, and [m]salt, and burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, [n]like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, which the LORD overthrew in his anger, and in his wrath;

24 Even all nations shall say, [o]Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?

25 Then men shall say, [p]Because [q]they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt:

26 For [r]they went and served other gods, and worshipped them, [s]gods whom they knew not, and [‡]whom he had not [§]given unto them:

27 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against this land, to bring upon it [t]all the curses that are written in this book:

28 And the LORD [u]rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and cast them into another land, [x]as it is this day.

29 The [y]secret things belong unto the LORD our God; but those things which are [z]revealed belong unto us [a]and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

CHAP. XXX.

Great mercies promised to the penitent, 1. The commandment is manifest, 11. Death and life set before them, 15.

AND [a]it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, [b]the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and [c]thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations [d]whither the LORD thy God hath driven thee,

2 And shalt [e]return unto the LORD thy God, and shalt obey his voice, according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, [f]with all thine heart, and with all thy soul;

3 That [g]then the LORD thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return, and [h]gather thee from all the nations whither the LORD thy God hath scattered thee.

4 If any of thine be driven out [i]unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the righteously have been left to the effects of his corrupt propensities, which are never admitted as an excuse for sinful actions. Indeed, men in general perceive no occasion for renewing grace, they have no desire after it, and will use no means to obtain it. But, on the contrary, by their voluntary wickedness, they do violence to natural conscience, and the common sense of mankind, and thus often provoke God judicially to leave them to themselves. He hath, however, appointed certain methods to be employed, to convince sinners that the change is absolutely necessary: and they are commanded and encouraged to seek it.

THE ANCIENT COVENANT.—Ver. 10—12. The national covenant made with Israel, typified the covenant of grace; and it also represented the outward dispensation of the gospel. This covenant is confirmed with true believers "for the good of them and of their children after them;" and, in their families, the profession of Christianity is principally continued. Thus they enjoy permanent religious advantages, which are seldom withdrawn, unless they renounce the religion of their forefathers, or evince a total disregard to it. As others likewise embrace the gospel, their families also become a part of the visible church, which thus spreads from nation to nation, and descends from one generation to another. The infant-offspring, therefore, of such persons as are favoured with the gospel, are greatly interested in the conduct of their parents; and they who value the blessings of the new covenant as their own portion, and desire them as the portion of their beloved children, and intend to bring them up accordingly, seem equally authorized and required to bring them under the external obligations, and to seek for them the external pledges of it, as these Israelitish parents were. This transaction might, in many ways, at the time and afterwards, benefit both the parents and their offspring; as it had a direct tendency to stir up the parents to pray for their children, and to instruct them as they grew up; and if, when they came to years of understanding, they were reminded how solemnly they, as well as their parents, had entered into covenant with God, it would tend to restrain their passions, awaken their consciences, and excite them personally to seek the covenanted blessings, which could only be forfeited by their own wilful sins. It therefore pleased God to order the covenant to be ratified, not only by the principal persons in Israel, or by the adults, but by the women and children, nay, by the strangers and meanest slaves; that is, by the whole company.—Scott.

IDOLATRY—ITS BANEFUL RESULTS.—"Idolatry would be the ruin of their nation;" it would bring plagues upon the land that connived at this root of bitterness, and received the infection; as far as the sin spread, the judgment should spread likewise. The ruin is described. It begins with plagues and sickness, ver. 22, to try if they will be reclaimed by lesser judgments; but if not, it ends in a total overthrow, like that of Sodom, ver. 23. As that valley which had been like the garden of the Lord for fruitfulness, was turned into a lake of salt and sulphur, so should the land of Canaan be made desolate and barren, as it has been, ever since the last destruction of it by the Romans. The lake of Sodom bordered close upon the land of Israel, that by it they might be warned against the iniquity of Sodom; but, not taking the warning, they were made as like to Sodom in ruin as they had been in sin. The reason of this it would be inquired into by the generations to come, ver. 22, who would find the state of their nation in all respects the reverse of what it had been; and when they read both the history and the promise, would be astonished at the change. The stranger likewise, and the nations about them, as well as particular persons, would ask, "Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land?" ver. 24. Great desolations are thus represented elsewhere as striking the spectators with amazement, 1 Kings ix. 8, 9; Jer. xxii. 8, 9. It was time for the neighbours to tremble, when judgment thus "began at the house of God," 1 Pet. iv. 17. The emphasis of the question is to be laid upon this land; the land of Canaan; this good land, the glory of all lands; this land flowing with milk and honey. A thousand pities that such a good land as this should be made desolate; but this is not all; it is this holy land; the land of Israel, a people in covenant with God; it is Immanuel's land; a land where God was known and worshipped, and yet thus wasted. Note, (1.) It is no new thing for God to bring desolating judgments upon a people that in profession are near to him, Amos iii. 2. (2.) He never does this without a good reason.—Henry.

DIVINE MYSTERIES.—Ver. 29. Man ought not to intrude into those things which it has pleased God to conceal from him; for who can penetrate into the secrets of his wisdom, or discover his decrees and counsels, the reasons of his conduct, and the mysteries of his nature, further than he reveals them? "Secret things belong to the LORD;" and all inquiries into them are arrogant and presumptuous. But he hath revealed every thing that can be really beneficial; and our attention in this respect should reach to the whole of these discoveries, and terminate with them. "Those things which are revealed belong to us;" not to increase our stock of barren notions, but to encourage and regulate our obedience, "that we may do all the words of this law."—Scott.

CHAP. XXX. TRUE PENITENCE.—Observe here, 1. How the repentance is described which is the condition of these promises. (1.) It begins in "serious consideration," ver. 1. "Thou shalt call to mind that which thou hadst forgotten, or not regarded." Note, Consideration is the first step toward conversion, Isa. xlvi. 8. "Bring to mind, O ye transgressors." The prodigal son came to himself first, and then to his father. That which they should call to mind, is the blessing and the curse. If sinners would but LORD thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee.

5 And the LORD thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers.

6 And the LORD thy God [k]will circumcise[l] thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, [l]to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live.

7 And the LORD thy God will [m]put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee.

8 And [n]thou shalt return, and obey the voice of the LORD, and do all his commandments, which I command thee this day.

9 And the LORD thy God will [o]make thee plenteous in every work of thine hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good: for the LORD will again [p]rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers;

10 If thou shalt [q]hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes, which are written in this book of the law, and if thou [r]turn unto the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.

11 ¶ For this commandment, which I command thee this day, it is not hidden [s]from thee, neither is it far off:

12 It is [t]not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

13 Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, [u]Who shall [x]go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

14 But the word is [y]very nigh unto thee, [z]in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

15 ¶ See, [a]I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil;

16 In that I command thee this day [b]to love the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply: and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

17 But [c]if thine [d]heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them;

18 I [e]denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it.

19 [f]I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, [g]that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore [h]choose life, [i]that both thou and thy seed may live;

20 That thou mayest [k]love the LORD thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest [l]cleave unto him; (for he is [m]thy life, and the length of thy days;) that [n]thou mayest dwell in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

CHAP XXXI.

Moses encourageth the people and Joshua, 1; he delivereth the law unto the priests, to read it every seventh year to the people, 9. God giveth Moses a song to testify against the people, 19. Joshua receiveth a charge, 23.

AND Moses went and spake these words unto all Israel.

2 And he said unto them, [a]I am an hundred and twenty years old this day; [b]I can no more go out and come in: also the LORD hath said unto me, [c]Thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

3 The LORD [d]thy God, he will go over before thee, and he will destroy these nations from before thee, and thou shalt possess them: [e]and Joshua, he shall go over before thee, as the LORD hath said.

4 And [f]the LORD shall do unto them as he did to Sihon and to Og, kings of the Amorites, and unto the land of them, whom he destroyed.

5 And the LORD shall give them up before your face, that ye may do unto them [g]according unto all the commandments which I have commanded you.

6 [h]Be strong, and of a good courage, [i]fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the LORD thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; [k]he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

7 ¶ And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, [l]Be strong, and of a good courage: [m]for thou must go with this people unto the land which the LORD hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it.

8 And the LORD, [n]he it is that doth go before thee; [o]he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed.

9 ¶ And [p]Moses wrote this law,[1] and [q]delivered it unto [r]the priests the sons of Levi, [s]which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and unto all the elders of Israel.

10 And Moses commanded them, saying, [t]At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles,

11 When all Israel is come [u]to appear before the LORD thy God [x]in the place which seriously consider the happiness they have lost by sin, and the misery they have brought themselves into, and that by repentance they may escape that misery, and recover that happiness, they would not delay to "return to the Lord their God." The prodigal "called to mind the blessing and the curse," when he considered his present poverty, and the plenty of bread "in his father's house," Luke xv. 17. (2.) It consists in sincere conversion. The effect of the consideration cannot but be godly sorrow and shame, Ezek. vi. 9, vii. 16. But that which is the life and soul of repentance, and without which the most passionate expressions are but a jest, is "returning to the Lord our God," ver. 2. If thou return, ver. 10, "with all thy heart and with all thy soul." We must return to our allegiance to God as our Lord and Ruler, our dependence upon him as our Father and Benefactor, our devotedness to him as our highest end, and our communion with him as our God in covenant. We must return to God from all that which stands in opposition to him, or competition with him. In this return to God, we must be upright—with the heart and soul, and universal—with all the heart and all the soul. (3.) It is evidenced by a constant obedience to the holy will of God. If thou shalt "obey his voice," ver. 2, "thou and thy children;" for it is not enough that we do our duty ourselves, but we must train up and engage our children to do it. Or, this comes in as the condition of the entail of the blessing upon their children, provided their children kept close to their duty. This obedience must be with an eye to God, Thou shalt "obey his voice," ver. 8, and hearken to it, ver. 10. It must be sincere and cheerful and entire, "with all thy heart, and with all thy soul," ver. 2. It must be from a principle of love, and that love too must be "with all thy heart, and with all thy soul," ver. 6. It is the heart and soul that God looks at, and requires; he will have that or nothing, and entire or not at all. And it must be universal; "according to all that I command thee," ver. 2; and again, ver. 8, "to do all his commandments." For he that allows himself in the breach of one commandment, involves himself in the guilt of contemning them all, James ii. 10. An upright heart has "respect to all God's commandments," Ps. cxix. 6.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When eternal salvation is thus proposed unto us, and the acceptance or refusal of it fairly referred to our choice, nothing can prevent our felicity but our own folly and wickedness: and they who refuse the offered grace, eventually choose and love death and perdition, and are cruel to their own souls. The ministers of Christ ought therefore plainly to declare, that except sinners repent, they will surely perish; as well as to set before them, in the most solemn and affecting manner, "life and death, blessing and cursing," that if they cannot prevent their destruction, they may deliver their own souls. And in this case, not only will they at last become witnesses against them, but heaven and earth will bear record, that they deserve their doom, and have none to blame but themselves. But are we sensible of the reality and importance of the eternal state? Do we "choose that good part which shall never be taken from us?" Let us beg of God to "circumcise our hearts," to subdue our lusts, and to implant his love: then shall we be prepared for serious reflection, for godly sorrow, and true repentance; then shall we value his salvation and hope in his mercy; then shall we return to him as our rest and portion, worship and obey him as the Lord our God, and cleave unto him as our father and our friend. Then will every ordinance and every act of obedience, be pleasant; love and gratitude will enlarge our hearts; and justice, temperance, truth, and kindness will mark our paths; every good gift will be communicated from a reconciled God; every enemy will by degrees be subdued, and at length destroyed; and a blessing will be reserved for our posterity when we are gone to glory. And should the only wise God see good to withhold temporal benefits, and command afflictions as our lot, he will support and comfort us, and all will have a salutary and a happy event.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXI. LAST APPEAL OF MOSES.—"Loth to part" (we say) "bids oft farewell;" Moses does so to the children of Israel: not because he was loth to go to God, but because he was loth to leave them, fearing, that when he had left them, they would leave God: he had finished what he had to say to them by way of counsel and exhortation: here he calls them together to give them a word of encouragement, especially with reference to the wars of Canaan, which they were now to engage in. It was a discouragement to them, that Moses was to be removed, at a time when he could so ill be spared: though Joshua was continued to fight for them in the valley, they would want Moses to intercede for them on the hill, as he did, Exod. xvii. 10. But there is no remedy; "Moses can no more go out and come in," ver. 2. Not that he was disabled by any decay either of body or mind: for his "natural force was not abated," chap. xxxiv. 7. But he cannot any longer discharge his office: for, 1. "He is an hundred and twenty years old," and it is time for him to think of resigning his honour, and returning to his rest. He that had arrived at so great an age then, when seventy or eighty was the ordinary stint, as appears by the prayer of Moses, Ps. xc. 10, might well think that he had accomplished as a hireling his day. 2. He is under a divine sentence, "Thou shalt not go over Jordan." Thus a full stop was put to his usefulness; hitherto he must go, hitherto he must serve, but no further. So God had appointed it, and Moses acquiesces: for I know not why any of us should desire to live a day longer than while God has work for us to do; nor shall we be accountable for more time than is allotted he shall choose, [y] thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing.

12 [z] Gather the people together, [a] men, and women, and children, and thy stranger that is within thy gates, [b] that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the LORD your God, and observe to do all the words of this law;

13 And that [c] their children, which have not known any thing, may hear, and learn to fear the LORD your God, as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Behold, thy days approach [d] that thou must die: call Joshua, and present yourselves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that [e] I may give him a charge. And Moses and Joshua went, and [f] presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the LORD [g] appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of a cloud: and the pillar of the cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Behold, [h] thou shalt [*] sleep with thy fathers; and this people will rise up, [i] and go a whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land whither they go to be among them, and will [k] forsake me, and [l] break my covenant which I have made with them.

17 Then [m] my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and [n] I will forsake them, and I will [o] hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall [†] befall them; so that they will say in that day, [p] Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us?

18 And [q] I will surely hide my face in that day, for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods.

19 ¶ Now therefore write ye [r] this song for you, [s] and teach it the children of Israel: [t] put it in their mouths, that this song may be [u] a witness for me against the children of Israel.

20 For [x] when I shall have brought them into the land which I sware unto their fathers, [y] that floweth with milk and honey, and they shall [z] have eaten, and filled themselves, and [a] waxen fat; [b] then will they turn unto other gods, and serve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant.

21 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are befallen them, that [c] this song shall testify [‡] against them as a witness; for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed: for [d] I know their imagination which they [§] go about, even now, before I have brought them into the land which I sware.

22 ¶ Moses [q] therefore wrote this song the same day, and taught it the children of Israel.

23 And [r] he gave Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said, Be strong, and of a good courage: for [s] thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I sware unto them: and I will be with thee.

24 ¶ And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of [t] writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished,

25 That Moses commanded the Levites, which [u] bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, saying, 26 Take this book of the law, and put it [x] in the side of the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, that it may be there for [y] a witness against thee.

27 For [z] I know thy rebellion, and thy [a] stiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, [b] ye have been rebellious against the LORD; and how much more after my death?

28 [c] Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and [d] call heaven and earth to record against them.

29 For I know that after my death ye will utterly [e] corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; [f] and evil will befall you in [g] the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.

30 And Moses [h] spake in the ears of all the congregation of Israel the words of this song, until they were ended.

Moses' song, which setteth forth God's mercy and vengeance, 1; he exhorteth them to set their hearts upon it, 46.

GIVE [a] ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.

2 My doctrine shall [b] drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew; as the small rain upon the tender herb, and [c] as the showers upon the grass:

3 Because [d] I will publish the name of the LORD; [e] ascribe ye greatness unto our God.

4 He is [f] the Rock, [g] his work is perfect; for [h] all his ways are judgment: [i] a God of truth, and [k] without iniquity; just and right is he.

us. But though Moses must not go over himself, he is anxious to encourage those that must.—Henry.

MEANS OF INSTRUCTION AND WARNING.—Ver. 10—13. The people had before been commanded, by every means in their power, to become acquainted themselves, and to make their children acquainted, with the truths and precepts delivered to them: but in these verses, a method is enjoined, of rendering them known to the nation in general, which the rulers must superintend and carry into effect.—Every seventh year the law was to be publicly read, and the people must be summoned to assemble, that they might hear it. Doubtless this was not merely confined to one person, or place; but numbers were engaged in different situations, so that every one might have an opportunity of hearing: and the Jews have a tradition that the king, judge, or high priest, was the chief reader, in the court of the tabernacle or temple; and they add several particulars concerning the manner in which the service was performed, which only contain their opinion how it ought to have been done.—The sabbatical year, and the feast of tabernacles, were selected for this ordinance; when the people, being more exempt than usual from employment and care, might be supposed to assemble at the sanctuary in greater numbers than at other times; and though the men alone were obliged to attend, it might be supposed that many of the women, children, and servants would come on this occasion.—A few instances of the observation of this command are recorded; but the neglect of it seems to have been one main cause of the nation being so soon carried away into idolatry and iniquity. "The people perished for lack of knowledge," through the ignorance, or remissness, of the rulers and priests.—The plenty and cheapness of Bibles indeed place the inhabitants of this favoured land in a very different situation from that of the Israelites: so that we can hardly form a due conception of their disadvantages in this respect. Indeed, the case was the same to a considerable degree, not only till the coming of Christ, but even till the art of printing was invented; for copies of the Scriptures never became so plentiful and cheap, as to enable poor people in general to procure them, till this invaluable, though much perverted, discovery was made.—Scott.

APOSTACY PREDICTED.—Israel would "forsake God," ver. 16. And we may be sure that, if the covenant between God and man be broken, the blame must lie on man, it is he that breaks it; we have often observed it, that God never leaves any, till they first leave him. Worshipping the gods of the Canaanites, (who had been the natives, but from henceforward were to be looked upon as the strangers, of that land,) would undoubtedly be counted a deserting of God, and like adultery, a violation of the covenant. Thus still, those are revolters from Christ, and will be so adjudged, who either make a god of their money by reigning covetousness, or a god of their belly by reigning sensuality. They that "turn to other gods," ver. 18, forsake their own mercies. This apostacy of theirs is foretold to be an effect of their prosperity, ver. 20, "They shall have eaten and filled themselves," that is all they will aim at in eating, to gratify their own appetites, and then they will wax fat, grow secure and sensual: their security will take off their dread of God and his judgments; and their sensuality will incline them to the idolatries of the heathen, which "made provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts of it." Note, God has a clear and infallible foresight of all the wickedness of the wicked, and has often covenanted with those who, "he knew, would deal very treacherously," Isa. xlviii. 8, and conferred many favours on those who, he knew, would deal very ungratefully. Then God would forsake Israel: and justly does he cast them off, who had so unjustly cast him off, ver. 17, "My anger shall be kindled against them, and I will forsake them." His providence would forsake them, no longer to protect and prosper them, and then they would become a prey to all their neighbours. His Spirit and grace would forsake them, no longer to teach and guide them, and then they would be more and more bigoted, besotted, and hardened in their idolatries.—Henry.

SACRED POETRY.—Ver. 19. Poetry, when well composed, and upon an interesting subject, is exceedingly attractive, as well as easily fixed and retained in the memory; and in almost every nation, in the earlier stages of civilization, or literature, men delight in poetical compositions, which are learned, recited, or sung with a sort of enthusiastic eagerness. To this propensity of the human mind the Lord was pleased to adapt his instructions: a sacred song, containing the substance of the preceding addresses, was appointed to be composed by Moses, doubtless under divine inspiration; with whom Joshua, as his coadjutor and successor, was joined; and on him it would devolve, to see that the subsequent command was obeyed. For the people were required to learn it, and to teach it to their children from generation to generation. Thus they would have it frequently in their memories and mouths, when the other parts of the law were generally neglected: and indeed God himself engaged that it should not be forgotten.—This song, (which was also a prophecy,) in after ages, when the predictions contained in it had received their accomplishment, would vouch the divine inspiration of Moses; show the cause of the people's miseries; bear witness to the justice of God and against their wickedness; and form a powerful call to them, to repent and return to him, as the only method in which they could obtain deliverance.—Scott.

that [q]hath bought thee? hath he not [r]made thee, and established thee?

7 ¶ [s]Remember the days of old, consider the years of [t]many generations: [u]ask thy father, and he will shew thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee.

8 When the [x]Most High [y]divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, [z]he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel:

9 For [a]the LORD's portion is his people; Jacob is the [b]lot of his inheritance.

10 He [c]found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; he [d]led him about, [e]he instructed him, [f]he kept him as the apple of his eye.

11 As [g]an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings;

12 So [h]the LORD alone did lead him, and there was [i]no strange god with him.

13 He made him [k]ride on the high places of the earth, that he might eat the increase of the fields; and he made him to suck [l]honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock;

14 [m]Butter of kine, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed [n]of Bashan, and goats, with [o]the fat of kidneys of wheat: and thou didst drink the pure [p]blood of the grape.

15 ¶ But [q]Jeshurun waxed fat, and [r]kicked: thou art [s]waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness: [t]then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed [u]the Rock of his salvation.

16 They [x]provoked him to jealousy with strange gods, with [y]abominations provoked they him to anger.

17 They [z]sacrificed unto devils, [a]not to God; to [b]gods whom they knew not, [c]to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not.

18 Of [d]the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast [e]forgotten God that formed thee.

19 ¶ And [f]when the LORD saw it, he [g]abhorred them, because of the provoking [h]of his sons and of his daughters.

20 And he said, [i]I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end shall be: for they are [k]a very froward generation, [l]children in whom is no faith.

21 They have [m]moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger [n]with their vanities: and [o]I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation.

22 For [k]a fire is kindled in mine anger, and [t]shall burn unto [l]the lowest hell, and [s]shall [m]consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire [n]the foundations of the mountains.

23 I will [o]heap mischiefs upon them; I will [p]spend mine arrows upon them.

24 They shall be [q]burnt with hunger, and devoured with [r]burning heat, and with bitter destruction: I will also send [s]the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of [t]serpents of the dust.

25 The [u]sword without, and terror [x]within, shall [y]destroy both [z]the young man and the virgin, the suckling also, with the man of gray hairs.

26 I said, [a]I would scatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men.

27 Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, [b]lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest [c]they should say, [d]Our hand is high, and the LORD hath not done all this.

28 For they are [e]a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them.

29 O [f]that they were wise, that they understood this, that [g]they would consider their latter end!

30 How should [h]one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight, except their Rock had [i]sold them, and the LORD had [k]shut them up?

31 For [l]their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges.

32 For their vine is [m]of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: [n]their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter:

33 Their wine is [o]the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps.

34 Is not this [p]laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures?

35 [q]To me belongeth vengeance and recompence; [r]their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and [s]the things that shall come upon them make haste.

36 For [t]the LORD shall judge his people, and [u]repent himself for his servants, when he seeth that their [x]power is gone, and there is [y]none shut up, or left.

37 And he shall say, [z]Where are their gods, their rock in whom they trusted;

38 Which did [a]eat the fat of their sacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings? let them rise up and help you, and be [b]your protection.

justice of the divine proceedings against a rebellious and backsliding people, for he had said, chap. xxxi. 28, that he would in this song call heaven and earth to record against them. Heaven and earth would sooner hear than this perverse and unthinking people; for they revolt not from their obedience to their Creator, but "continue to this day, according to his ordinances, as his servants," Ps. cxix. 89—91, and therefore will rise up in judgment against rebellious Israel. Heaven and earth will be witness against sinners, witnesses of the warning given them, and of their refusal to take the warning; see Job xx. 27, the "heaven shall reveal his iniquity, and the earth shall rise up against him." Or heaven and earth are here put for the inhabitants of both, angels and men: both shall agree to justify God in his proceedings against Israel, and to "declare his righteousness," Ps. l. 6. See Rev. xix. 1, 2. 2. "My doctrine shall drop as the rain." (1.) "It shall be a beating, sweeping rain to the rebellious;" so one of the Chaldee paraphrasts expounds the first clause. Rain is sometimes sent for judgment, witness that with which the world was deluged; and so the word of God, as to some it is reviving and refreshing, and a "savour of life unto life," so to others it is terrifying and killing, and a "savour of death unto death." (2.) It shall be as a sweet and comfortable dew to those who are rightly prepared to receive it. Observe, [1.] The subject of this song is doctrine; he had given them a song of praise and thanksgiving, Exod. xv., but this is a song of instruction, for in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, we are not only to give glory to God, but to "teach and admonish one another," Col. iii. 16. Hence many of David's psalms are entitled Maschil, to give instruction. [2.] This doctrine is fitly compared to rain and showers which come from above, to make the earth fruitful, and "accomplish that for which they are sent," Isa. lv. 10, 11, and depend not upon the wisdom or will of man, Mic. v. 7. It is a mercy to have this rain come often upon us, and our duty to "drink it in," Heb. vi. 7. [3.] He promises that his doctrine shall drop and distil as the dew, and the small rain, which descend silently and without noise. The word preached is then likely to profit, when it comes gently, and sweetly insinuates itself into the hearts and affections of the hearers. [4.] He bespeaks their acceptance and entertainment of [illegible] that it might be as sweet and pleasant and welcome to them, as rain to the [illegible] earth," Ps. lxxii. 6. And the word of God is then likely to do us good, when [illegible] acceptable.—Henry.

—Ver. 4. "He is the Rock:" this is the first time God is called a Rock, in [illegible] intimating thereby to Israel, that his unchangeable power, faithfulness, [illegible] from an impregnable foundation.

frequently sheltered the inhabitants from the heat of the sun, from impetuous tempests, and from hostile invasions.—"His work is perfect." Absolute perfection is in God alone: relative perfection is all that belongs to creatures, and it belongs to them all, as he at first made them; to a worm as much as to an archangel. Every work of God is the result of perfect goodness, the contrivance of perfect wisdom, and the effect of perfect power; and is complete, in its kind and for its use, and to fill its appointed station in the grand scale of existence. Every providential dispensation is perfectly expressive of his divine justice, truth, goodness, and wisdom. His law is perfectly holy, just, and good: and is perfectly suited to answer the ends which he proposed in giving it: his gospel is perfect also, and suited to answer still nobler and more important ends.—Scott.

PROVIDENCE.—When the earth was divided among the sons of men, in the days of Peleg after the flood, and each family had its lot, in which it must settle, and by degrees grow up into a nation, then God had Israel in his thoughts, and in his eye; for, designing this good land into which they were now going, to be in due time an inheritance for them, he ordered that the posterity of Canaan, rather than any other of the families then in being, should be planted there in the meantime, to keep possession, as it were, till Israel was ready for it: because those families were under the curse of Noah, by which they were condemned to servitude and ruin, Gen. ix. 25, and therefore would be the more justly, honourably, easily, and effectually rooted out, when the fulness of time was come that Israel should take possession. Thus he set the bounds of that people with an eye to the designed number of the children of Israel, that they might have just as much as would serve their turn. And some observe, that Canaan himself, with his eleven sons, Gen. x. 15, &c. makes up just the number of the twelve tribes of Israel.—Henry.

GOD'S TENDER LOVE.—Ver. 11, 12. The eagle is remarkable for her tender care of her young, and for the pains that she uses, and the methods which she employs, in teaching them to fly; stirring them up out of the nest, fluttering in the air over them to show them how to use their wings, and even carrying them upon her own wings; so that in order to destroy the young eagles, the body of the old one must on some occasions first be pierced. Thus the Lord, by the message of Moses and Aaron, excited and encouraged the enslaved Israelites to leave Egypt, and effectually assisted and protected them in so doing. And, by the gospel, and the influence of the Holy Spirit, he excites sinners to leave Satan's bondage, and instructs, defends, and effectually assists them. The last circumstance of the eagle's tender care of her young is beautifully emblematical of his love, who interposed between divine justice and our guilty souls, and [illegible] in both Testaments, [illegible]

there is no god with me: [u]I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: [x]neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand.

40 For [y]I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live for ever.

41 If I [z]whet my glittering sword, and mine hand take hold on judgment, [a]I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward [b]them that hate me.

42 I will [c]make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh; and that with the blood of the slain, and of the captives, from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy.

43 [†]Rejoice, [d]O ye nations, with his people; for he will [e]avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to his adversaries, and [f]will be merciful unto his land, and to his people.

44 ¶ And Moses came and [g]spake all the words of this song in the ears of the people, he and [‡]Hoshea the son of Nun.

45 And Moses made an end of speaking all these words to all Israel:

46 And he said unto them, [h]Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law.

47 For it is [i]not a vain thing for you; because it is your life: and through this thing ye shall prolong your days in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it.

48 ¶ And [k]the LORD spake unto Moses that self-same day, saying,

49 Get thee up into this [l]mountain Abarim, unto mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, that is over against Jericho, [m]and behold the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel for a possession;

50 And [n]die in the mount whither thou goest up, and be gathered unto thy people; [o]as Aaron thy brother died in mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people:

51 Because [p]ye trespassed against me among the children of Israel at the waters of [§]Meribah-Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin; [q]because ye sanctified me not in the midst of the children of Israel.

52 Yet [r]thou shalt see the land before thee; but thou shalt not go thither unto the land which I give the children of Israel.

JESHURUN.—These people were called Jeshurun, an upright people, so some; a seeing people, so others; but they soon lost the reputation both of their knowledge and of their righteousness; for, being well fed, 1. They "waxed fat," and "grew thick," that is, they indulged themselves in all manner of luxury and gratifications of their appetites, as if they had nothing to do but to "make provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts of it." They "grew fat," that is, they grew big and unwieldy, unmindful of business, and unfit for it; dull and stupid, careless and senseless; and this was the effect of their plenty. Thus the "prosperity of fools destroys them," Prov. i. 32. Yet this was not the worst of it. 2. They "kicked:" they grew proud and insolent, and "lifted up the heel" even against God himself; if God rebuked them, either by his prophets or by his providence, they "kicked against the goad," as an "untamed heifer," or a "bullock unaccustomed to the yoke," and in their rage persecuted the prophets, and flew in the face of providence itself.

MOSES WARNED OF HIS DEATH.—1. God here reminds him of the sin he had been guilty of, for which he was excluded Canaan, ver. 51, that he might the more patiently bear the rebuke because he had sinned; and that now he might renew his sorrow for that unadvised word, for it is good for the best of men to die repenting of the infirmities they are conscious to themselves of. It was an omission that was thus displeasing to God; he did "not sanctify God," as he ought to have "done before the children of Israel," he did not carry himself with a due decorum, in executing the orders he had then received. 2. He reminds him of the death of his brother Aaron, ver. 50, to make his own the more familiar, and the less formidable. Note, It is a great encouragement to us when we die, to think of our friends that have gone before us through that darksome valley, especially of Christ, our elder Brother and great High Priest. 3. He sends him up to a high hill from thence to take a view of the land of Canaan and then die, ver. 49, 50. The remembrance of his sin might make death terrible, but the sight God gave him of Canaan, took off the terror of it, as it was a token of God's being reconciled to him, and a plain indication to him, that though his sin shut him out of the earthly Canaan, yet it should not deprive him of that better country, which in this world can only be seen, and that with an eye of faith. Note, Those may die with comfort and ease whenever God calls for them, (notwithstanding the sins they remember against themselves,) who have a believing prospect and a well-grounded hope of eternal life beyond death.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIII. URIM AND THUMMIM.—Ver. 8. Levi was the dying prophet's own tribe; but he only mentioned it, as the tribe which the Lord had chosen for himself: and, as the welfare of Israel was so immediately connected with the Levitical priesthood, he expatiated the more in his benediction and prophecy concerning it. The Urim and Thummim, or "illuminations and perfections," by which the high priest inquired of the Lord, formed one distinguishing token of his favour to this tribe: and Moses prophetically prayed for the continuance of these to the succeeding high priests, during many generations; which implied also the continuance of all needful gifts and graces to every order of that tribe, that they might fill up their several places, to the glory of God, and the maintenance of true religion in Israel.—It is however confessed by the Jews, that the "Urim and Thummim" were lost in the Babylonish captivity, and that nothing was substituted in their room: but in our "Holy One," our great High Priest, whom Aaron and his sons feebly shadowed forth, the things signified remain, and from him are communicated to all his true ministers and people, according to their measure.

BLESSING OF JOSEPH.—Ver. 13—16. It is here predicted, that the inheritance of the tribes, descended from Joseph, should, through the blessing of God, be peculiarly fertile. By the seasonable rains, and refreshing dews, those "precious things" which come down from above, and make the earth fruitful; and by the springs, which issue from beneath, and the benign influences of the sun, all kinds of valuable productions, peculiar to each revolving moon in succession, would be abundantly afforded. The mountains and hills of Joseph would grow vines, and olives, and timber-trees; and from beneath would be dug metals and minerals, and stone for building. In short, their land should abound with every precious production, that the earth and its fulness can afford; all which, with a variety of spiritual privileges, would descend upon these tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh from the good-will and peculiar kindness of JEHOVAH.—The first appearance of the LORD in the burning bush seems to have been recollected with grateful pleasure by the dying prophet; and he characterized Him, who would thus bless the sons of Joseph, from this circumstance, that he condescended, as "the God of Abraham" and his seed, to dwell in a mean bush; and had now taken up his more abiding residence in the midst of Israel, who was equally unworthy of such an honour; but would in like manner be preserved by his gracious presence.—Joseph had been especially beloved by Jacob; he was renowned for piety, wisdom, and usefulness; his memory was dear to Israel and to Moses.

ZEBULUN.—Ver. 18, 19. It was predicted that Zebulun would prosper, and consequently "rejoice in his going out:" that is, say some, as a merchant, "for he was a haven of ships." Thus "he sucked the abundance of the seas and of the treasures hid in the sand;" that is, he reaped, as it were, the harvest of the sea, or worked its mines. In this 18 ¶ And of Zebulun he said, [o]Rejoice, Zebulun, in thy going out; and, Issachar, in thy tents.

19 They shall [p]call the people unto the mountain; there [q]they shall offer sacrifices of righteousness: for they shall [r]suck of the abundance of the seas, and of treasures hid in the sand.

20 ¶ And of Gad he said, [s]Blessed be he that enlargeth Gad: [t]he dwelleth as a lion, and [u]teareth the arm with the crown of the head.

21 And he provided [x]the first part for himself, because there, in [y]a portion of the lawgiver, was he [‡]seated; and [z]he came with the heads of the people, he executed the justice of the LORD, and his judgments with Israel.

27 The [l]eternal God is thy [m]refuge, and [n]underneath are the everlasting arms: and he shall [o]thrust out the enemy from before thee, and shall say, Destroy them.

28 [p]Israel then shall dwell in safety alone: [q]the fountain of Jacob shall be upon a land of corn and wine; also [r]his heavens shall drop down dew.

29 [s]Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people [t]saved by the LORD, [u]the shield of thy help, and who is [x]the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall be [‡]found liars unto thee; and [y]thou shalt tread upon their high places.

case, we may understand his "calling the people to the mountain," of the endeavours, which those of this tribe would use, in bringing the strangers, with whom they traded, acquainted with true religion.—But, as the Zebulunites were situated, as some suppose, at a distance from the Mediterranean sea, and upon the sea of Tiberias; perhaps their fishery was intended, and not their foreign trade: and in this way, the sea yields a revenue more valuable than the productions of mines of gold, and almost equal to the harvest of the plain.

ASHER.—Ver. 24, 25. Asher signifies blessed: and to this tribe Moses predicted a numerous increase, with much love and friendship from their brethren; and likewise most excellent olive-oil in vast abundance.—Some suppose that the promise, "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass," referred to the productive mines of iron and brass which abounded in Asher's lot, and were thus continually under his feet; but it hath long been interpreted as a proverbial expression; which, indeed, is the most natural and obvious meaning of the words. If a man were about to travel in rough roads, or to climb craggy precipices, or to be stationed upon a slippery eminence, it would be useful for him to have plates of iron or brass fixed to his shoes! and, in like manner, the Lord would prepare Asher for every difficulty which he would have to encounter. According to this interpretation, the words, "and, as thy days, thy strength," are explanatory of the preceding clause, and signify, that as the day of trial required, strength should be communicated; or, as some expound the passage, "As thy wants, so shall be thy sufficiency."—Scott.

GLORY OF ISRAEL.—Never was people so well seated and sheltered, ver. 27, "The eternal God is thy refuge!" Or, as the word signifies thy habitation or mansion-house, in whom thou art safe and easy, and at rest, as a man in his own house. Every Israelite indeed is at home in God; the soul returns to him, and reposes in him as its resting-place, Psal. cxvi. 7, its hiding-place, Psal. xxxii. 7. And they that make him their habitation, shall have all the comforts and benefits of a habitation in him, Psal. xci. 1. Moses had an eye to God as the habitation of Israel, when they were wandering in the wilderness, Psal. xc. 1, "Lord thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations." And now that they were going to settle in Canaan, they must not change their habitation; still they will need, and still they shall have, the eternal God for their dwelling-place; without him Canaan itself would be a wilderness, and a land of darkness.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIV. PISGAH.—Ver. 1—4. The last chapter closed the words and writings of Moses, and this chapter must have been added by another hand: but it is uncertain whether by Joshua, or by Samuel, or by some other prophet. Some indeed maintain, that Moses himself wrote it, by the spirit of prophecy. This, however, is not at all probable; but, by whomsoever it was written, the information must have been originally communicated by immediate revelation. Perhaps the three last verses were added as late as the days of EZRA: but all the subsequent books of Scripture assume as undoubted facts the things recorded in it. Moses appeared reluctant to leave his work; but, that being finished, he manifested no unwillingness to die. He now acquiesced in the will of God who refused him an entrance into Canaan; he was animated with the immediate prospect of glory, which loosened all earthly attachments, and supplied him with strength and spirits to ascend the mountain, where he was to put off the tabernacle of his body; and it seems probable, that he went alone, and died without a witness, or companion to close his eyes.—Scott.

THE DEATH OF MOSES.—Moses had reason to desire to live a while longer in the world. He was old, it is true, but he had not yet "attained to the years of the life of his fathers;" his father, Amram, lived to be 137; his grandfather, Kohath, 133; his great-grandfather, Levi, 137, Exod. vi. 16—20. And why must Moses, whose life was more serviceable than any of theirs, die at one hundred and twenty; especially since he felt not the decays of age, but was as fit for service as ever? Israel could ill spare him at this time; his conduct and his converse with God would be as great a happiness to them in the conquest of Canaan as the courage of Joshua. It bore hard upon Moses himself, when he had gone through all the fatigues of the wilderness, to be prevented from enjoying the pleasures of Canaan; while he had borne the burden and heat of the day, to resign the honour of finishing the work to another, and that not his son, but his servant, who must enter into his labours; we may suppose that this was not pleasant to flesh and blood. But "the man Moses was very meek;" God will have it so, and he cheerfully submits. 1. He is here called "the servant of the Lord," not only as a good man, all the saints are God's servants; but as a useful man, eminently useful, who had served God's counsels in bringing Israel out of Egypt, and leading them through the wilderness. It was more his honour to be the servant of the Lord than to be king in Jeshurun. 2. Yet he dies. Neither his piety nor his usefulness would exempt him from the stroke of death. God's servants must die that they may rest from their labours; receive their recompense, and make room for others. When God's servants are removed, and must serve him no longer on earth, they go to serve him better, to serve him day and night in his temple. 3. He dies in the land of Moab, short of Canaan, while as yet he and his people were in an unsettled condition, and not entered into their rest. In the heavenly Canaan there will be no more death.—Henry.

BOOK OF JOSHUA.

WE now enter on that portion of the Old Testament which is commonly distinguished as historical. For, though the books of Moses contain a large proportion of history, and are the only authentic records existing of those primæval ages, and though several of the prophetical books are in part historical, yet these, having been denominated "the law and the prophets," from the grand peculiarities of each, the books before us may properly be called historical, by way of distinction. From the death of Moses to that of Nehemiah, at least 1050 years intervened; indeed, some genealogies in Nehemiah extend beyond that period; and of this succession of ages these books contain a connected and regular narrative, which is extremely interesting to the sober student, as well as edifying to every pious reader. If we except some Phenician fragments, filled with inconsistencies, and of doubtful authority, and a few traditions concerning the Egyptians and Assyrians, distorted by the most extravagant relations, and evidently replete with fables, there is scarcely anything extant which gives us the least information of what was transacted in any of the nations of the world, during by far the greatest part of this period. For it does not yet appear that any dependence can be placed on those narratives from the Eastern world which have lately been brought into Europe, and have excited considerable attention; and which some have so highly extolled, as to insinuate, not only that they rendered questionable other ancient histories, hitherto of approved authority, but that their testimony ought to have some weight, even in opposition to the records of the Scripture. Yet it is notorious that they are so disfigured by fable or allegory as to be scarcely intelligible, and that they relate events of the most extravagant and incredible antiquity. Leaving these, however, till fuller investigation has shewn what credit they deserve, it is obvious to remark, that Herodotus, who used to be called the father of history, is supposed to have been contemporary with Ezra and Nehemiah, the latest writers of these scriptural records; and all that he collected concerning times long preceding his own, is generally allowed to be of doubtful authority, and in great measure fabulous. Yet the history on which we are entering, though modern compared with that contained in the books of Moses, commences at least 1000 years before the days of this father of history! And (except as sceptics choose to confound well-attested public miracles, wrought by the Almighty God for the most important of all purposes, with the absurd and pernicious fables of pagan writers) the whole narrative is exceedingly probable and rational, and accords with the known character and general conduct of mankind in the various circumstances in which they are placed. It also agrees with the most sober traditions, and detached fragments, of antiquity; and serves to elucidate many obscure parts of profane history, and to decide many questions in respect of ancient chronology. It also coincides with the manners and customs of those Eastern regions, in the remotest ages, as far as any accounts of them have come down to us.

We are not expressly informed who was the writer of each book in this collection; but we have several intimations that the prophets, or seers, of whom continual mention is made, were employed in this service (1 Chr. xxix. 29; 2 Chr. xii. 15; xx. 34; xxvi. 22). It is indeed not improbable that the contemporary prophets wrote the principal transactions of their own times, under the superintendency of the Holy Spirit, by whom they were preserved from error and partiality, guided in selecting such facts as were most proper to be recorded, and instructed immediately where ordinary sources of information failed; and that subsequent prophets, under the same superintendency, gave the history its present form. Perhaps some parts of it were compiled from ancient records as late as the times of Ezra, who was himself an inspired writer, and the rest revised by him and his assistants, with some short notes, elucidating the several parts of the narrative; and this may account for a few expressions which seem to belong to later times than those of the events related, as well as for the references to some books then known, but not now extant. Very little history, subsequent to the days of Ezra, is transmitted to us; and a few incidents or genealogies, which seem to pertain to a rather later period, might be added by the prophet Malachi. But the canon of the Old Testament, for substance the same as we now have it, was evidently settled in the time of Ezra, and has never since received any material alteration.

These books, however, were undoubtedly a part of the sacred Scriptures, to which our Lord and his apostles continually appealed, and which the Jews in general received as the oracles of God, and as given by inspiration from him. And it is exceedingly worthy of notice, that the several parts of the Bible thus reciprocally attest each other, and presuppose the undoubted truth of the history recorded, and the divine authority of the doctrines and commandments delivered in them; so that, like the stones in a well-constructed arch, each supports and is supported by all the rest. In particular, the Psalms, the prophetical books, and every part of the New Testament, assume as acknowledged truth that these historical records contain undoubted facts; and these several divisions of the sacred volume often constitute an important comment on each other.

The difficulty, nay, the impossibility, of several authors, of various educations and talents, exactly agreeing together, when they have not had known truth as their guide, or while left under the power of their different prejudices, must be obvious to every one who duly considers the subject. Indeed, when this agreement is evident, it excites a general suspicion that they wrote in concert; but when this could not be the case, the coincidence (for example, between private letters and a public history) forms a striking proof that both are authentic. But the Scriptures afford us the only perfect example of such a coincidence among writers who could not possibly act in concert, and who, in many things of small consequence, were not careful to avoid the appearance of disagreement, where it might easily have been done.

The books on which we now enter do not contain a complete political history of Israel, but merely a connected account of the most material events, or of such as were most suited to convey important instruction; and, as transactions which, in the general estimate of mankind, are considered as comparatively little, frequently inculcate the most salutary lessons of heavenly wisdom, these are often very fully recorded, while the more splendid concerns of courts and camps are passed over in silence, or but cursorily noticed.

CHAP. I.

The Lord appointeth Joshua to succeed Moses, 1. Extent of the promised land, 3. God encourageth Joshua, 5, 9. Joshua prepareth the people to pass over Jordan, 10.

NOW after [a]the death of Moses, the servant of the LORD; it came to pass, that the LORD spake unto [b]Joshua the son of Nun, [c]Moses' minister, saying,

2 [d]Moses my servant is dead; now therefore [e]arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel.

3 Every place that [f]the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses.

4 From [g]the wilderness and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea, toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast.

5 There [h]shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: [i]as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: [k]I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

6 [l]Be strong and of a good courage: for [*]unto this people shalt thou [m]divide for an inheritance the land [n]which I sware unto their fathers to give them.

7 Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law [o]which Moses my servant commanded thee: [p]turn not from it to the right hand or to the left,[q] that thou mayest [†]prosper whithersoever thou goest.

8 This [r]book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but [s]thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest [t]observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt [‡]have good success.

9 [u]Have not I commanded thee? Be strong, and of a good courage; [x]be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the LORD thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.

CHAP. I. CALL OF JOSHUA.—Concerning Joshua's call to the government, observe here, 1. The time when it was given him, "After the death of Moses." As soon as ever Moses was dead, Joshua took upon him the administration, by virtue of his solemn ordination in Moses's life-time; an interregnum, though but for a few days, might have been of ill consequence; but, it is probable, that God did not speak to him to go forward toward Canaan, till after the thirty days of mourning for Moses were ended; not, as the Jews say, because the sadness of his spirit during those days unfitted him for communion with God; (he sorrowed not as one that had no hope;) but by this solemn pause, and a month's adjournment of the public councils, even now when time was so very precious to them, God would put an honour upon the memory of Moses, and give time to the people not only to lament their loss of him, but to repent of their miscarriages toward him during the forty years of his government. 2. The call itself; Now therefore arise. First, Though Moses is dead, the work must go on, therefore arise, and go about it. Let not weeping hinder sowing, nor the withering of the most useful hands be the weakening of ours; for when God has work to do, he will either find or make instruments fit to carry it on. Moses the servant is dead, but God the Master is not, he lives for ever. Secondly, "Because Moses is dead, therefore the work devolves upon thee as his successor, for hereunto thou wast appointed. Therefore there is need of thee to fill up his place, Up, and be doing." Note, (1.) The removal of useful men should quicken survivors to be so much the more diligent in doing good. Such and such are dead, and we must die shortly, therefore let us work while it is day. (2.) It is a great mercy to a people, if, when useful men are taken away in the midst of their usefulness, others are raised up in their stead to go on where they broke off. Joshua must arise to finish what Moses began, thus the latter generations enter into the labours of the former. And thus Christ, our Joshua, does that for us which could never be done by the law of Moses, justifies, Acts xiii. 39, and sanctifies, Rom. viii. 3. The life of Moses made way for Joshua, and prepared the people for what was to be done by him: thus the law is a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. And then the death of Moses made room for Joshua: thus we are dead to the law of our first husband, that we may be married to Christ, Rom. vii. 4. 3. The particular service he was now called out to. "Arise, go over this Jordan," this river which you have in view, and on the banks of which you lie encamped. This was a trial to the faith of Joshua, whether he would give orders to make preparation for passing the river, when there was no visible way of getting over it, at least, not at this place and at this time, when "all the banks were overflown," chap. iii. 15. He had no pontons or bridge of boats by which to convey them over, and yet he must believe, that God having ordered them over, would open a way for them. Going over Jordan was going into Canaan; thither Moses might not, could not, bring them, Deut. xxxi. 2. Thus the honour of bringing the many sons to glory is reserved for Christ the Captain of our salvation, Heb. ii. 10.

JOSHUA'S FIRST ORDERS.—Joshua gives public notice, that they were "to pass over Jordan within three days." These orders, I suppose, were not given till after the return of the spies that were sent to bring an account of Jericho, though the story of that affair follows, ch. ii. And perhaps that was such an instance of his jealousy, and excessive caution, as made it necessary that he should be so often bidden as he was, to be strong and of a good courage. Observe with what assurance Joshua says it to the people, because God had said to him, "Ye shall pass over Jordan, and shall possess" the land. We greatly honour the truth of God, when we stagger not at the promise of God. He gives them directions to prepare victuals, not to prepare transport vessels; he that bore them out of Egypt upon eagles' wings, would in like manner bear them into Canaan, to bring them to himself, Exod. xix. 4. But those that were minded to have other victuals beside the manna, which had not yet ceased, must prepare it, and have it ready against the time appointed. Perhaps, though the manna did not quite cease till they were come into Canaan, chap. v. 12, yet since they were come into a land inhabited, Exod. xvi. 35, where they might be furnished in part with other provisions, it did not fall so plentifully, nor did they gather so much as when they had it first given them in the wilderness, but decreased gradually, and therefore they are ordered to provide other victuals, in which perhaps were included all other things necessary to their march. And some of the Jewish writers considering that having manna, they needed not to provide other victuals, understand it figuratively, that they must repent of their sins, and make their peace with God, and resolve to live a new life, that they might be ready to receive this great favour; see Exod. xix. 10, 11.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The removal of those, who have been faithful and useful should quicken their survivors to redoubled earnestness and activity; both to make up, as much as they are able, the public loss, and to prepare for their own dissolution. Every one of the Lord's servants, having performed the work assigned him, retires to rest, and others are raised up to succeed until their services also are finished; and generally they, who in the close of life are most honoured, have been previously submissive and diligent in more obscure situations.—No consciousness of inferiority, insufficiency, or even unworthiness, should induce us to decline the services allotted to us: for the same fulness, whence prophets and apostles receive all their sufficiency, is open for us also; and in our more limited spheres, and for the duties incumbent on us, we have a warrant to expect that "the Lord will be with us," even as he was with Moses or Paul;

A. M. 2553.—B. C. 1451.

10 ¶ Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, saying,

11 Pass through the host, and command the people, saying, Prepare you victuals; for within [y]three days[1] [z]ye shall pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land, which the LORD your God giveth you to possess it.

12 ¶ And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manasseh, spake Joshua, saying, 13 Remember [a]the word which Moses, the servant of the LORD, commanded you, saying, The LORD your God hath given you rest, and hath given you this land.

14 Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, shall remain in the land[2] which Moses gave you on this side Jordan; but ye shall pass before your brethren [§]armed, all [b]the mighty men of valour, and help them;

15 Until [c]the LORD hath given your brethren rest, as he hath given you, and they also have possessed the land which the LORD your God giveth them; [d]then ye shall return unto the land of your possession, and enjoy it, which Moses, the LORD's servant, gave you on this side Jordan, toward the sun-rising.

16 ¶ And they answered Joshua, saying, [e]All that thou commandest us we will do, and whithersoever thou sendest us we will go.

17 According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee: [f]only the LORD thy God be with thee, as he was with Moses.

18 Whosoever he be [g]that doth rebel against thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words, in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death: [h]only be strong, and of a good courage.

CHAP. II.

Rahab receiveth and concealeth the two spies sent from Shittim, 1; the covenant between her and them, 8; their return, 23.

AND Joshua the son of Nun [*]sent out of [a]Shittim two men [b]to spy secretly, saying, Go view the land, [c]even Jericho. And they went, and came into an [d]harlot's house, named Rahab, and [†]lodged there.[1]

2 And it was [e]told the king of Jericho, saying, Behold, there came men in hither to-night of the children of Israel to search out the country.

3 And the king of Jericho sent unto Rahab, saying, [f]Bring forth the men that are come to thee, which are entered into thine house: for they be come [g]to search out all the country.

4 And the woman [h]took the two men, and hid them, and said thus, There came men unto me, but I wist not whence they were:

5 And it came to pass, about the time [i]of shutting of the gate, when it was dark, that [k]the men went out; whither the men went, I wot not: pursue after them quickly; for ye shall overtake them.

6 But she had brought them up [l]to the roof of the house, and [m]hid them with the stalks of flax,[2] which she had laid in order upon the roof.

7 And the men pursued after them the way to Jordan unto [n]the fords: and as soon as they which pursued after them were gone out, [o]they shut the gate.

8 ¶ And, before they were laid down, she came up unto them upon the roof;

9 And she said unto the men, [p]I know [q]that the LORD hath given you the land, and that [r]your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land [‡]faint because of you.

10 For [s]we have heard how the LORD dried up the water of the Red sea for you, when ye came out of Egypt; and [t]what ye did unto the two kings of the Amorites, that were on the other side Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly destroyed.

11 And as soon as we had heard these things, [u]our hearts did melt, neither [§]did there remain any more courage in any man, because of you; [x]for the LORD your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath.

12 Now therefore, I pray you, [y]swear unto me by the LORD, since I have shewed you kindness, [z]that ye will also shew kindness unto [a]my father's house, and [b]give me a true token:

13 And that ye will save alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death.

14 And the men answered her, Our life [l]for yours, if ye utter not this our business. And it shall be, [c]when the LORD hath given us the land, that we will deal kindly and truly with thee.

15 Then [d]she let them down by a cord through the window; [e]for her house was upon the town-wall, and she dwelt upon the wall.

16 And she said unto them, [f]Get you to the mountain, lest the pursuers meet you; and hide yourselves there three days, until the pursuers be returned: and afterward may ye go your way.

17 And the men said unto her, [g]We will be blameless of this thine oath which thou hast made us swear:

[1] The Hebrew word may be rendered, and ought to be rendered, after three days; for it is evident from chap. iii. 2, that the Israelites passed not over Jordan till after three days, namely, the next day after.—WELLS.

[2] It appears that Joshua picked out the ablest warriors; for it is evident they did not all go over, but only 40,000 of them (see Josh. iv. 13). The rest, though fit for war, were left to defend their wives, children, and flocks, while those mighty men of valour went to help their brethren.—PATRICK.

[1] Rahab probably kept a public house or inn, for the entertainment of strangers, by going into which the spies thought that they would be less suspected of any design.—PATRICK.

though he will not "speak to us face to face," or give us a vision of the third heavens, and of the unutterable things there displayed.—That man needs strong faith and great fortitude, who in this evil world would order his whole conduct according to the rule of the Holy Scriptures; and "not turn aside to the right hand or to the left," on account of any temptation, or through fear of any consequence whatever: but as God himself commands us to "be strong and courageous," we should consider this precept as an exhortation to cry earnestly to him, that he may give us strength and courage; and in this dependence we may go forth, assured that nothing can stand before us or impede our course: for "He will not fail us nor forsake us."—But let it be especially noted, that well-grounded confidence is always connected with proportionable humility and conscientiousness: and genuine courage chiefly appears in daring to do our duty, though censured by misjudging friends, or threatened by malicious enemies.—That we may be secured from deception, and be assured that we are reproached or persecuted, not for following our own fancies, but for the sake of truth and righteousness; we should endeavour, by daily meditation and prayer, to obtain an intimate acquaintance with the precepts as well as the promises of Scripture: for thus the path of duty will be evident to our own minds, and we shall be able to explain our reasons and motives, satisfactorily to the candid and pious, when occasion requires; as well as to use our influence in bringing others to obey our God.—If we proceed according to his instructions, he will find us all needful assistance, and perhaps "make our very enemies to be at peace with us!" And when persons of different ranks, in due subordination, harmoniously concur in promoting the welfare of the church, and seeking the presence and blessing of the Lord, the prospect of success is very pleasing; and they who oppose such efforts merit the severest punishment.—Scott.

CHAP. II. RAHAB.—V. 1. The beginning of this verse may be read, "Now Joshua had sent," &c.: that is, before the orders recorded in the preceding chapter.—It might be very useful to him to learn many things respecting the avenues of Canaan, the situation of Jericho, which was first to be assaulted, and the disposition of its inhabitants: and [illegible] might be known by ordinary means as well as by immediate revelation. Two persons, probably not of eminent rank, but of approved prudence, intrepidity, and faith, [illegible] selected, and sent by Joshua to search out, not the land at large, but Jericho [illegible], and to bring their report to him, and not to the congregation: for [illegible] to the spreading them, not to their concealing them- [illegible] of the will of God; for [illegible] guided and protected in a peculiar manner, and many important good consequences resulted from their enterprise.—They undertook this perilous service with boldness and promptitude; and passed Jordan doubtless at the fords, the river not having yet overflowed its banks, as it did soon after. Being arrived at Jericho, "they came into an harlot's house,—and lodged there." It is probable that Rahab kept some kind of an house of entertainment for travellers; especially as she stated that "two men had come to her," of whom she knew nothing: yet from the testimony of two apostles, there can be no reasonable doubt but she had been an harlot, "though now, it is probable, she was converted by the faith which was wrought in her; which was so eminent, that she was not only admitted into the society of God's people, but married into a noble family of the tribe of Judah, from whom Christ sprang." (Bishop Patrick.) It may be supposed from these circumstances, that she was not far advanced in life at this time.—It is, however, evident from the whole narrative, that the spies were led thither by a special providence; and that Rahab entertained them, out of regard to Israel and Israel's God, and neither for lucre, nor for any evil purpose.

RAHAB AND THE SPIES.—The twelve spies, sent by Moses, seem to have passed unsuspected through the whole land: yet these two men no sooner entered Jericho than the king heard of it, and sent to apprehend them: while at the same time he, and the other kings of the country, seem entirely to have neglected to guard the passes of Jordan, the natural barrier of the land! The spies were known or supposed to be Israelites, either by their apparel, or appearance: and their business in that case could not be doubted. The words translated, "The woman took the two men and hid them," might be rendered, "she had taken,—and hidden them."—It is evident that Rahab was acquainted with the business of the spies, before she received the message from the king: and being sensible of the danger to which they would be exposed, when every one was upon the watch, as aware of the situation and purposes of Israel; and perhaps hearing the rumours about them, she had previously concealed them under some stalks of flax which were laid on the flat roof of her house: and by her answers to the messengers, she not only led them to suppose that the men were gone, but also that she was very desirous that they should be apprehended, which exceedingly tended to prevent suspicion.—Various opinions have been formed concerning Rahab's conduct on this trying occasion. Some object, that her treachery to her king and country cannot be vindicated: but it may be answered, that as she firmly believed the God of heaven had devoted the Canaanites to be utterly destroyed by the Israelites, (ver. 9—11,) [illegible] her country, as [illegible] Israelites [illegible] Canaanites, [illegible] have acted otherwise, if [illegible]

CHAP. III.

Joshua cometh to Jordan, 1. The Lord encourageth Joshua, 7. Joshua encourageth the people, 9. The waters divided, 14.

AND Joshua [a]rose early in the morning; and they removed from [b]Shittim, and came to Jordan, he and all the children of Israel, and lodged there before they passed over.

2 ¶ And it came to pass after [c]three days, that the officers went through the host;

3 And they commanded the people, saying, [d]When ye see the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, and [e]the priests the Levites bearing it, then [f]ye shall remove from your place, and go after it:

4 Yet there shall be [g]a space between you and it, about two thousand cubits by measure: come not near unto it; that ye may know the way by which ye must go: for ye have not passed this way [*]heretofore.

5 ¶ And Joshua said unto the people, [h]Sanctify yourselves: for to-morrow [i]the LORD will do wonders among you.

6 And Joshua spake unto the priests, saying, [k]Take up the ark of the covenant, and pass over before the people. And they took up the ark of the covenant, and went before the people.

7 ¶ And the LORD said unto Joshua, This day will I begin to [l]magnify thee in the sight of all Israel, that they may know [m]that, as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee.

8 And thou shalt [n]command the priests that bear the ark of the covenant, saying, When ye are come to the brink of the water of Jordan, [o]ye shall stand still in Jordan.

9 ¶ And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, Come hither, and [p]hear the words of the LORD your God.

10 And Joshua said, [q]Hereby ye shall know that [r]the living God is [s]among you, and that he will without fail [t]drive out from before you the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Hivites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Jebusites.

11 Behold, the ark of the covenant of [u]the Lord of all the earth [x]passeth over before you into Jordan.

12 Now therefore [y]take you twelve men out of the tribes of Israel, out of every tribe a man.

13 And it shall come to pass,[1] as soon as [z]the soles of the feet of the priests that bear the ark of the LORD, the Lord of all the earth, shall rest in the waters of Jordan, that the waters of Jordan shall be cut off from the waters that come down from above; and they shall [a]stand upon an heap.

14 ¶ And it came to pass, when the people removed from their tents, to pass over Jordan, and the priests [b]bearing the ark of the covenant before the people;

15 And as they that bare the ark were come unto Jordan, and [c]the feet of the priests that bare the ark were dipped in the brim of the water, (for [d]Jordan overfloweth all his banks [e]all the time of harvest,)

16 That the waters, which came down from above, stood, and [f]rose up upon an heap,[2] very far from the city Adam, that is beside [g]Zaretan:[3] and those that came down toward the sea of the plain, even [h]the salt sea, failed, and were cut off; and the people passed over right against Jericho.

17 And [i]the priests, that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, [k]stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan, and [l]all the Israelites passed over on dry ground, until all the people were passed clean over Jordan.

In fact, every true convert equally renounces the alliance of the Lord's enemies, however nearly connected, and refuses to join with them in rebellion and persecution of his servants. But as no people can possibly produce such an authenticated commission from God to destroy another nation, as Israel had to destroy the Canaanites; Rahab's conduct, in uniting interests with the enemies and invaders of her country, though her absolute duty, cannot now be drawn into precedent.—Scott.

RAHAB'S FAITH.—Rahab makes the profession of her faith in God and his promise; and perhaps "there was not found so great faith," (all things considered,) "no not in Israel," as in this woman of Canaan. 1. She believes God's power and dominion over all the world, ver. 11. "Jehovah your God, whom you worship and call upon, is so far above all gods, that he is the only true God; for 'he is God in heaven above and in earth beneath,' and is served by all the hosts of both." A vast distance there is between heaven and earth, yet both are equally under the inspection and government of the great Jehovah. Heaven is not above his power, nor earth below his cognizance. 2. She believes his promise to his people Israel, ver. 9. "I know that the Lord hath given you the land." The king of Jericho had heard as much as she had of the great things God had done for Israel, yet he cannot infer from thence that the Lord had given them this land, but resolves to hold it out against them to the last extremity; for the most powerful means of conviction will not of themselves attain the end without divine grace, and by that grace, Rahab the harlot, who had only heard of the wonders God had wrought, speaks with more assurance of the truth of the promise made to the fathers, than all the elders of Israel had done, who were eye-witnesses of those wonders, many of whom perished through unbelief of this promise. "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed;" so Rahab did; "O woman, great is thy faith!"—Henry.

CHAP. III. GOD'S PRESENCE—THE ARK.—The people follow the ark. "Remove from your place and go after it;" 1. As those that are resolved never to forsake it; wherever God's ordinances are, there we must be; if they flit, we must remove and go after them. 2. As those that are entirely satisfied in its guidance, that it will lead in the best way to the best end; and therefore, "Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." This must be all their care, to attend the motions of the ark, and follow it with an implicit faith. Thus must we walk after the rule of the word, and the direction of the Spirit in every thing, so shall "peace be upon us," as it now was upon the Israel of God. They must follow the priests as far as they carried the ark, but no further; so we must follow our ministers only as they follow Christ. In following the ark, they must "keep their distance," ver. 4. They must none of them come within a thousand yards of the ark. 3. They must thus express their awful and reverent regard to that token of God's presence, lest its familiarity with them should breed contempt. This charge to them, not to come near, was agreeable to that dispensation of darkness, bondage, and terror: but we now through Christ have access with boldness. 4. Thus it was made to appear, that the ark was able to protect itself, and needed not to be guarded by the men of war, but was itself a guard to them. With what a noble defiance of the enemy did it leave all its friends half-a-mile behind, but the unarmed priests that carried it, as perfectly sufficient for its own safety and theirs that followed it. 5. Thus it was the better seen by those that were to be led by it, "that ye may know the way by which ye must go," seeing it, as it were, chalked out or tracked by the ark. Had they been allowed to come near it, they would have surrounded it, and none would have had the sight of it but those that were close to it; but as it was put at such a distance before them, they would all have the satisfaction of seeing it, and would be animated by the sight. And it was with good reason that this provision was made for their encouragement, "for ye have not passed this way heretofore." This had been the character of all their way through the wilderness, it was an untrodden path, but this especially through Jordan. While we are here, we must expect and prepare for unusual events, to pass ways that we have not passed before: and much more when we go hence; our way through the "valley of the shadow of death" is a way we have not gone before, which makes it the more formidable.—Henry.

PASSAGE OVER JORDAN.—Ver. 16, 17. The waters below the place where Israel then was, ran off towards the Dead or Salt sea, which was once the plain of Sodom, and left the channel dry for the space of several miles; whilst those above accumulated, and stood like mountains very far back towards the sea of Tiberias, without inundating the adjacent country. As an illustrious example of faith and obedience, the priests, who bare the ark, marched into the midst of the dry channel, and there took their stand, with the waters piled up far higher than their heads, and nothing to prevent their being overwhelmed by them but the invisible power of God. Here they abode all day, till the people, encouraged by their example, had in succession marched over the river, with all that appertained to them, and were safely landed on the farther shore!—The passage through the Red sea took place in the night, when the Israelites were fleeing from the Egyptians with great trepidation; but they passed Jordan in the daytime, with previous warning, leisurely, directly opposite to Jericho, and with a triumphant defiance of the Canaanites.—This passage of Israel over Jordan into the promised land, after their weary wanderings in the wilderness, evidently typified the believer's passage through death to heaven, when he has finished his course in this sinful world.—Scott.

AND it came to pass, when all the people [a]were clean passed over Jordan, that the LORD spake unto Joshua, saying,

2 Take you [b]twelve men out of the people, out of every tribe a man;

3 And command ye them, saying, Take you hence out of the midst of Jordan, out of the place where [c]the priests' feet stood firm, [d]twelve stones;[1] and ye shall carry them over with you, and [e]leave them in the lodging-place where ye shall lodge this night.

4 Then Joshua called the twelve men, whom he had [f]prepared of the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man;

5 And Joshua said unto them, Pass over before the ark of the LORD your God into the midst of Jordan, and take you up every man of you a stone upon his shoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Israel:

6 That this may be [g]a sign[2] among you, that [h]when your children ask their fathers *in time to come, saying, What mean ye by these stones?

7 Then ye shall answer them, That [i]the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the LORD; when it passed over Jordan, the waters of Jordan were cut off: [k]and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel for ever.

8 And the children of Israel [l]did so as Joshua commanded, and took up twelve stones out of the midst of Jordan, as the LORD spake unto Joshua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there.

9 ¶ And Joshua [m]set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests which bare the ark of the covenant stood: and [n]they are there unto this day.

10 ¶ For the priests which bare the ark [o]stood in the midst of Jordan, until every thing was finished that the LORD commanded Joshua to speak unto the people, according to all that [p]Moses commanded Joshua: and the people [q]hasted and passed over.

11 And it came to pass, when all the people were clean passed over, [r]that the ark of the LORD passed over, and the priests, in the presence of the people.

12 And [s]the children of Reuben,[3] and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh, passed over armed before the children of Israel, as Moses spake unto them.

13 About forty thousand, [t]prepared for war, passed over before the LORD unto battle, [u]to the plains of Jericho.

CHAP. IV. MEMORIALS OF THE PASSAGE.—1. Twelve stones were taken up out of the midst of Jordan, and carried in the sight of the people to the place where they had their head quarters that night, ver. 8. It is probable that the stones they took were as big as they could well carry, and as near as might be of a size and shape. But whether they went away with them immediately to the place, or whether they staid to attend the ark, and kept pace with the solemn procession of that, to grace its triumphant entry into Canaan, is not certain. By these stones which they were ordered to take up, God did, as it were, give them livery and seisin of this good land, it is all their own, let them enter and take possession; therefore what these twelve did, the children of Israel are said to do, ver. 8, because they were the representatives of their respective tribes. In allusion to this, we may observe, that when the Lord Jesus, our Joshua, having overcome the sharpness of death, and dried up that Jordan, had opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers, he appointed his twelve apostles, according to the number of the tribes of Israel, by the memorial of the gospel to transmit the knowledge of this to remote places and future ages. 2. Other twelve stones (probably much larger than the other, for we read not that they were each of them one man's load) were set up "in the midst of Jordan," ver. 9, piled up so high in a heap or pillar, as that the top of it might be seen above water, when the river was low, or seen in the water when it was clear, or at least the noise or commotion of the water passing over it would be observable, and the bargemen would avoid it, as they do a rock; some way or other, it is likely, it was discernible so as to notify the very place where the ark stood, and to serve for a duplicate to the other monument, which was to be set up on dry land in Gilgal, for the confirming of its testimony, and the preserving of its tradition. The sign being doubled, no doubt, the thing was certain.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Never did triumphal column or arch, with all the magnificence of architecture, form so proper a monument of some celebrated victory, as the twelve rude stones from Jordan's channel recorded the miraculous passage of Israel into Canaan, under the conduct of the ark of the Lord. Such is the instituted memorial of the Redeemer's dying love: simple, impressive, and entirely calculated to show forth his death and passion in the most affecting manner; to be a suitable profession of our repentance, faith, and grateful love; and to express our devotedness to him, our fellowship with him and his people, and our expectation of future harmonious felicity in the realms above. Yet all this is veiled under so plain an exterior, that the carnal eye can see no comeliness or excellency in it, any more than in him whose love is commemorated: and to make it suit the grovelling minds of worldly, and the selfish purposes of ambitious men, it has been dressed up with pomp and parade, of meaning and of ceremony, which have so disguised and perplexed the divine appointment, that many of the true disciples of Christ have been strangely frighted from it, as if some formidable mischief lay concealed within; to the dishonour of the Lord, and the detriment of their own souls. But we should take every proper occasion of attending on that sacred ordinance, learning from the word of God its simple meaning and intention; and should gladly speak of them, when opportunity is afforded, to our children, our neighbours, and to every inquirer. In this, and in every thing else, the curiosity of children should be improved, as an opening to their instruction: and they who take pleasure in searching out the works of the Lord, and in diffusing their knowledge among strangers, or perpetuating it to posterity, shall more and more understand his loving kindness and mercy. Gladly should we all render every service we can to the church of God, and consider ourselves as having one common interest with all the families of the redeemed, however separated by rivers, seas, or mountains; or the more unnatural partition-walls of sects and parties: and in so doing, we may safely commit our families and interests to the protection of Israel's God. When, with careful attention to the commands and providence of God, we have taken the place, and engaged in the service assigned us; we ought patiently to abide in it, and not to attempt to remove, till he evidently commands us thence. Nothing can hurt us in doing this, and nothing should intimidate us from it. In like manner also, we ought patiently to wait our dismission from this sinful world, ready to depart, but willing to bear the cross and maintain the conflict, till the Lord's purposes for his own glory be accomplished in us. But the removal of the righteous is frequently like the opening of the floodgates of divine judgments upon guilty nations, which have been restrained by their presence, example, and prayers; and much more when the ministers and ordinances of God are removed, may national calamities be expected.—Scott.

CHAP. V. CIRCUMCISION OF THE PEOPLE.—Ver. 2—8. It is evident that the Israelites, who had been born in the wilderness, were left uncircumcised; but the reason of this omission is not so manifest: whether it arose from negligence, or whether the Lord dispensed with it during their wanderings, when every removal would have rendered it dangerous to many infants; or whether the nation was laid under a kind of interdict, when the rebellious generation was doomed to die in the wilderness. It is generally agreed, that the passover was celebrated only once, during Israel's continuance in the desert; and the people there did not want any mark of distinction from other nations: so that circumcision, in respect of its principal objects, was not so requisite in that situation, as after they were settled in Canaan, where every instituted ordinance, and every method and circumcised the children of Israel at †the hill of the foreskins.

4 And this is the cause why Joshua did circumcise: [i]All the people that came out of Egypt, that were males, even all the men of war, died in the wilderness by the way, after they came out of Egypt.

5 Now all the people that came out were circumcised; but all the people that were born in the wilderness by the way as they came forth out of Egypt, them [k]they had not circumcised.

6 For the children of Israel [l]walked forty years in the wilderness, till all the people that were men of war, which came out of Egypt, were consumed, because they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: unto whom the LORD [m]sware that he would not shew them the land which the LORD sware unto their fathers that he would give us, [n]a land that floweth with milk and honey.

7 And [o]their children, whom he raised up in their stead, them Joshua circumcised: for they were uncircumcised, because they had not circumcised them by the way.

8 And it came to pass, ‡when they had done circumcising all the people, that they abode in their places in the camp [p]till they were whole.

9 And the LORD said unto Joshua, This day have I [q]rolled away[1] the reproach of Egypt from off you: wherefore the name of the place is called §Gilgal unto this day.

10 ¶ And the children of Israel encamped in Gilgal, and [r]kept the passover[2] on the fourteenth day of the month at even, in the plains of Jericho.

11 And they did eat of the old corn of the land on the morrow after the passover, [s]unleavened cakes, and parched corn in the self-same day.

12 ¶ And [t]the manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land; neither had the children of Israel manna any more; [u]but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, when Joshua was by Jericho, that [x]he lifted up his eyes and looked, and, behold, there stood [y]a man over against him, with [z]his sword drawn in his hand: and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him, [a]Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?

14 And he said, Nay; [b]but as ‖captain of the host[3] of the LORD am I now come. And Joshua [c]fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and said unto him, [d]What saith [e]my Lord unto his servant?

15 And the captain of the LORD's host said unto Joshua, [f]Loose thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Joshua did so.

Jericho is shut up, 1; the walls fall down, 20. Rahab is saved, 22. The rebuilder of Jericho is cursed, 26.

NOW Jericho *was straitly shut up [a]because of the children of Israel: none went out, and none came in.

2 ¶ And [b]the LORD said unto Joshua, [c]See, I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour.

3 And [d]ye shall compass the city, all ye men of war, and go round about the city once. Thus shalt thou do six days.

4 And seven priests shall bear before the ark seven [e]trumpets[1] of rams' horns; and the seventh day ye shall compass the city [f]seven times, and the priests shall blow with the trumpets.

5 And it shall come to pass, that when they [g]make a long blast with the ram's horn, and when ye hear the sound of the trumpet, all [h]the people shall shout with a great shout; and [i]the wall of the city shall fall down [j]flat, and the people shall ascend up, every man straight before him.

6 ¶ And Joshua the son of Nun called the priests, and said unto them, [k]Take up the ark of the covenant, and let seven priests bear seven trumpets of rams' horns before the ark of the LORD.

7 And he said unto the people, Pass on, and compass the city, and let him [l]that is armed pass on before the ark of the LORD.

8 ¶ And it came to pass, when Joshua had spoken unto the people, that the seven priests, bearing the seven trumpets of rams' horns, passed on [m]before the LORD, and blew with the trumpets; and the ark of the covenant of the LORD followed them.

9 And the armed men went before the priests that blew with the trumpets, [n]and the ‡rere-ward[2] came after the ark, the priests going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

10 And Joshua had commanded the people, saying, Ye shall not shout, nor make §any noise with your voice, neither shall any word proceed out of your mouth, [o]until the day I bid you shout; then shall ye shout.

11 So the ark of the LORD compassed the city,[3] going about it once: and they came into the camp, and lodged in the camp.

12 ¶ And [p]Joshua rose early in the morning, and [q]the priests took up the ark of the LORD.

of distinction and separation, must be used. The command, however, given to Joshua, and by him to the people, to perform this painful operation on so great a multitude, immediately upon entering the enemy's country, when it was well known that they would by it be for some time utterly disabled, formed a very great trial of their faith; and their prompt and universal obedience, in such critical circumstances, manifested a confidence in the Lord's protection, and a submission to his will, which confirm the sentiment, that this was the best of all the generations of Israel.—Scott.

FIRST PASSOVER IN CANAAN.—A solemn passover was kept, at the time appointed by the law, "the fourteenth day of the first month," and in the same place where they were circumcised, ver. 10. While they were wandering in the wilderness, they were denied the benefit and comfort of this ordinance, as a further token of God's displeasure; but now, in answer to the prayer of Moses upon the passing of that sentence, (Ps. xc. 15,) God comforted them again, after the time that he had afflicted them, and therefore now that joyful ordinance is revived again. Now that they had entered into Canaan, it was very seasonable to remember those wondrous works of divine power and goodness, by which they were brought out of Egypt. The finishing of mercies should bring to mind the beginning of them; and when it is perfect day we must not forget how welcome the morning light was, when we had long waited for it. The solemn passover followed immediately after the solemn circumcision: thus, when they that received the word were baptized, immediately we find them "breaking of bread," Acts ii. 41, 42. They kept this passover in the plains of Jericho, as it were in defiance of the Canaanites that were round about them, and enraged against them, and yet could not give them any disturbance.

CESSATION OF THE MANNA.—Provision made for their camp of the "corn of the land," and the "ceasing of the manna" thereupon, are noticed in ver. 11, 12. Manna was a wonderful mercy to them when they needed it; but it was the mark of a wilderness state, it was the food of children, and therefore, though it was angels' food, and not to be complained of as light bread, yet it would be more acceptable to them to eat of the "corn of the land," and that they are now furnished with; the country people being retired for safety into Jericho, left their barns and fields, and all that was in them, which served for the subsistence of this great army.—Henry.

CAPTAIN OF THE LORD'S HOST.—Ver. 13—15. Joshua was either taking a view of Jericho, in order to attack it, or employed in serious meditation; or both alternately; when he was surprised with the appearance of one, in form as "a man," "with his sword drawn in his hand." Joshua, not at all intimidated, accosted him, and demanded of him whether he was an ally or an enemy; and he received for answer, that he was come, not only as an ally, but as commander-in-chief over the LORD's host, and over Joshua himself: upon which Joshua recognized, and worshipped him as his Lord; and reverently prostrating himself upon the earth, waited and asked to know his will. Not only was this worship received, but he was further commanded to show the same token of respect to the heavenly vision, which had been required when the LORD appeared to Moses in the bush: and this being done, he received from him the orders contained in the ensuing chapter, which is a continuation of the subject, and is very improperly separated from the close of this. All these circumstances prove beyond a doubt, that this armed man was no other than the Son of God, JEHOVAH, the second Person in the sacred Trinity, the Captain of our salvation, anticipating his incarnation, and assuring Joshua of success in this war. "Jesus our Lord, the Prince of his Father's host, appearing to him who was a type of him, at Jericho, with a drawn sword, promised to be the Defender of his people." (Archbp. Usher.)—Scott.

CHAP. VI. SIEGE OF JERICHO.—Ver. 3—5. By prescribing this extraordinary method of besieging Jericho, the Lord was pleased to put honour upon the ark, as the symbol of his presence, and to manifest that all the victories of Israel were from him: for this was a specimen of them. The faith and patience of the people were thus proved and increased. Their regard to the priesthood likewise would be augmented; and they would be induced the more readily to give the priests their dues, when the Lord had thus employed them in the conquest of the land. The preaching of the gospel also, and its effects, were typified.—The word translated "rams' horns," may be rendered trumpets of jubilees, that is, such as were to be blown in the year of jubilee: for the entrance of Israel into the promised land was indeed a jubilee to them. Instead of the dreadful trumpet of war, they were ordered to sound the trumpet of joy, as already conquerors, in the anticipation of assured faith. There is no sufficient reason for rendering the original words, "rams' horns," which, being generally solid throughout, seem little suited as materials for trumpets. The word signifying horn, indeed, occurs, ver. 5; but, even if interpreted literally, it only proves, that horns of some kind were used, without restricting the meaning to rams' horns; and perhaps it may be understood figuratively for trumpets, 1 Chron. xxv. 5. Probably, the trumpets before made were used on this occasion; and others of the same kind; for, as the number of the priests increased, more trumpets, doubtless, were formed, either of silver, or of some other materials.—The repeated prescription of the number seven must not pass unnoticed: "seven priests," "seven trumpets," "seven days," and "seven times on the seventh day." This attention to the number seven in Scripture, probably, had reference to the creation of the world in six days, and the Lord's resting on the seventh, which com-

13 And seven priests, bearing seven trumpets of rams' horns before the ark of the LORD, [r]went on continually, and blew with the trumpets: and the armed men went before them; but the rere-ward came after the ark of the LORD, the priests going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

14 And [s]the second day they compassed the city once, and returned into the camp: so they did six days.

15 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that they rose early, [t]about the dawning of the day, and compassed the city after the same manner seven times: [u]only on that day they compassed the city seven times.

16 And it came to pass at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua said unto the people, [x]Shout; for the LORD hath given you the city.

17 ¶ And the city shall be [1]accursed, even it, and all that are therein, to the LORD: [y]only Rahab the harlot shall live, she and all that are with her in the house, [z]because she hid the messengers that we sent.

18 And ye [a]in any wise keep yourselves from the accursed thing, [b]lest ye make yourselves accursed, when ye take of the accursed thing, and [c]make the camp of Israel a curse, [d]and trouble it.

19 But [e]all the silver, and gold, and vessels of brass and iron, are [*]consecrated unto the LORD: they shall come into [f]the treasury of the LORD.

20 ¶ So the people shouted when the priests blew with the trumpets: and it came to pass, when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that [g]the wall fell down [†]flat,[4] so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city.

21 And they [h]utterly destroyed all that was in the city, both man and woman, young and old, and ox, and sheep, and ass, with the edge of the sword.

22 ¶ But [i]Joshua had said unto the two men that had spied out the country, Go into the harlot's house, and bring out thence the woman, and all that she hath, [k]as ye sware unto her.

23 And the young men that were spies went in, and brought [l]out Rahab, and her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that she had; and they brought out all her [‡]kindred, and [m]left them without the camp[5] of Israel.

24 And they [n]burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein: [o]only the silver, and the gold, and the vessels of brass and of iron, they put into the treasury of the house of the LORD.

25 And Joshua [p]saved Rahab the harlot alive, and her father's household, and all that she had; and [q]she dwelleth in Israel even [r]unto this day; because she hid the messengers which Joshua sent to spy out Jericho.

26 ¶ And Joshua [s]adjured them at that time, saying, [t]Cursed be the man before the LORD that riseth up and buildeth this city Jericho: he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it.

27 So [u]the LORD was with Joshua; and [x]his fame was noised throughout all the country.

BUT the children of Israel [a]committed a trespass in the accursed thing: [b]for [c]Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, [d]took of the accursed thing: and [e]the anger of the LORD was kindled against the children of Israel.

2 ¶ And Joshua sent men from Jericho to [f]Ai,[1] which is beside [g]Beth-aven, on the east side of Beth-el, and spake unto them, saying, [h]Go up and view the country. And the men went up and viewed Ai.

3 And they returned to Joshua, and said unto him, Let not all the people go up; but let [*]about two or three thousand men go up and smite Ai; and make not all the people to [i]labour thither; for they are but few.

4 So there went up thither of the people about three thousand men; and [k]they fled before the men of Ai.

5 And the men of Ai smote of them about thirty and six men: for they chased them from before the gate even unto Shebarim, and smote them in [†]the going down;[2] [l]wherefore the hearts of the people melted, and became as water.

6 ¶ And Joshua [m]rent his clothes, and [n]fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the LORD [o]until the even-tide, he and the elders of Israel, and [p]put dust upon their heads.

7 And Joshua said, Alas! O Lord GOD, [q]wherefore hast thou at all brought this people over Jordan, [r]to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us? [s]Would to God we had been content, [t]and dwelt on the other side Jordan!

pleted the first week; this was the first reason assigned for the sanctification of the Sabbath, and occasioned the measuring of time, by the periodical return of the seventh day in most ages and nations ever since. One of these seventh days must have been a Sabbath-day; the Jews say, that it was the last, on which the city was taken: and as they were doing the work of God, for his glory, no objection arises against it from the fourth commandment; any more, than against the man's carrying his bed on the Sabbath-day, in honour of Christ who had healed him.—Scott.

PRESERVATION OF RAHAB.—Rahab "perished not with them that believed not," Heb. xi. 31. The public faith was engaged for her safety, by the two spies, who acted therein as public persons; and therefore, though the hurry they were in at the taking of the town, no doubt, was very great, yet Joshua took effectual care for her preservation. The same persons that she had secured, were employed to secure her, ver. 22, 23. They were best able to do it, who knew her and her house, and they were fittest to do it, that it might appear it was for the sake of her kindness to them, that she was thus distinguished, and had her life given her for a prey. All her kindred were saved with her; like Noah she "believed to the saving of her house;" and thus faith in Christ "brings salvation to the house," Acts xvi. 31. Some ask, how her house, which is said to have been "upon the wall," chap. ii. 15, escaped falling with the wall; we are sure it did escape, for she and her relations were safe in it: either though it joined so near to the wall as to be said to be "upon it," yet it was so far off as not to fall either with the wall or under it; or rather that part of the wall on which her house stood fell not. Now being preserved alive, 1. She was left for some time without the camp to be purified from the Gentile superstition, which she was to renounce, and to be prepared for her admission as a proselyte. 2. She was in due time incorporated with the church of Israel, and she and her posterity dwelt in Israel, and her family was remarkable long after. We find her the wife of Salmon, prince of Judah, mother of Boaz, and named among the ancestors of our Saviour, Matt. i. 5. Having received Israelites in the name of Israelites, she had an Israelite's reward. Bishop Pierson observes, that Joshua's [illegible] Rahab the harlot, and admitting her into Israel, was a figure of Christ's receiving [illegible] kingdom, and entertaining there the publicans and the harlots, Matt. xxi. 31. [illegible] exhorted to the conversion of the Gentiles.—Henry.

[illegible] repeatedly warned to flee from the [illegible] security in their infatuated contest with the Almighty.—When the Lord effects his purposes by such means and instruments as we deem adequate; our views are apt to terminate upon them, and to overlook Him "who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will." To obviate this propensity, the Lord sometimes deviates from the common track, and works by methods or instruments, which in themselves appear not at all suited to produce the intended effect; nay, sometimes have no real connexion with it. But it is our duty to use only those means which the Lord appoints or allows; to submit to his will, and depend upon his blessing; and with patient waiting and self-denying diligence to expect the event: and we shall thus succeed as far as is conducive to our real good.—He takes peculiar pleasure in leading men's attention to his own truths and ordinances; in exercising their faith and patience; in inuring them to submit their understandings implicitly to his teaching, and their will to his authority; and in securing to himself their praises and thankful acknowledgments. In promoting true religion especially, he works by means and instruments, which the proud, the learned, the wise, and the wealthy, of this world, generally despise. The doctrine of a crucified Saviour, GOD MANIFESTED IN THE FLESH, as the only foundation of a sinner's hope of acceptance, and the only source of sanctifying grace; preached by ministers, frequently of obscure birth and moderate abilities, and destitute of the advantages of eminent learning or eloquence; sometimes even homely in their appearance and address; and who are themselves conscious of much unworthiness and insufficiency for so arduous and important an employ; this, I say, from generation to generation, in every country of the world, has been the Lord's ordinary method of accomplishing those purposes, which philosophers, moralists, and lawgivers have attempted in vain; namely, of teaching numbers "to do good who have been accustomed to do evil."—Scott.

CHAP. VII. ACHAN'S SIN.—Ver. 1. Here is only a general mention made of the sin, we afterward have a more particular account of it from his own mouth. The sin is here said to be "taking of the accursed thing," in disobedience to the command, and in defiance of the threatening, chap. vi. 18. In the sacking of Jericho, orders were given, that they should neither spare any lives, nor take any treasure to themselves; we read not of the breach of the former prohibition, (there were none to whom they showed any mercy,) but of the latter. Covetousness was put off, and yielded to this law, but covetousness was indulged. [illegible] the world is that root of bitterness, which [illegible]

A. M. 2668.—B. C. 1461.

[y] environ us round, and cut off our name from the earth: and [z] what wilt thou do unto thy great name?

10 ¶ And the LORD said unto Joshua, Get thee up; [a] wherefore [§] liest thou thus upon thy face?

11 [b] Israel hath sinned, and they have also [c] transgressed my covenant which I commanded them: for they have even taken of [d] the accursed thing, [e] and have also stolen, and [f] dissembled also, and they have put it even [g] among their own stuff.

12 Therefore [h] the children of Israel could not stand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, because [i] they were accursed; [k] neither will I be with you any more, except ye destroy the accursed from among you.

13 Up, [l] sanctify the people, and say, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow; for thus saith the LORD God of Israel, There is [m] an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel: thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye [n] take away the accursed thing from among you.

14 In the morning therefore ye shall be brought according to your tribes; and it shall be, that [o] the tribe which the LORD taketh shall come according to the families thereof: and the family which the LORD shall take shall come by households; and the household which the LORD shall take shall come man by man.

15 And it shall be, that [p] he that is taken with the accursed thing shall be burnt with fire, he and all that he hath: because [q] he hath transgressed the covenant of the LORD, and because he hath [r] wrought [‡] folly in Israel.

16 ¶ So Joshua [s] rose up early in the morning, [t] and brought Israel by their tribes; and the tribe of Judah was taken:

17 And he brought the [u] family of Judah; and he took the family of the Zarhites: and he brought the family of the Zarhites man by man; and Zabdi was taken:

18 And he brought his household man by man; and Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, [x] was taken.

19 And Joshua said unto Achan, [y] My son, [z] give, I pray thee, glory to the LORD God of Israel, and [a] make confession unto him; and [b] tell me now what thou hast done; hide it not from me.

20 And Achan answered Joshua, and said, [c] Indeed I have sinned against the LORD God of Israel, and thus and thus have I done:

21 When [d] I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a * wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then [e] I coveted them, and [f] took them; and, behold, [g] they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver under it.

22 ¶ So Joshua sent messengers, and they ran unto the tent; and, behold, it was hid in his tent, and the silver under it.

23 And they took them out of the midst of the tent, and brought them unto Joshua, and unto all the children of Israel, and [†] laid them out before the LORD.

24 And Joshua, and all Israel with him, [h] took Achan the son of Zerah, and the silver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold, and [i] his sons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his asses, and his sheep, and his tent, and all that he had; and they brought them unto [k] the valley of Achor.

25 And Joshua said, [l] Why hast thou troubled[‡] us? the LORD shall trouble thee this day. And [m] all Israel stoned him with stones, and [n] burned them with fire, after they had stoned them with stones.

26 And they [o] raised over him a great heap of stones unto this day. [p] So the LORD turned from the fierceness of his anger: wherefore the name of that place was called The valley of [‡] Achor, unto this day.

CHAP. VIII.

God encourageth Joshua, 1. The stratagem whereby Ai was taken, 3. Joshua buildeth an altar, 30; writeth the law on stones, and pronounceth blessings and cursings, 32.

AND the LORD said unto Joshua, [a] Fear not, neither be thou dismayed: take all the people of war with thee, and arise, go up to Ai: [b] see, I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land.

2 And thou shalt [c] do to Ai and her king as thou didst unto Jericho and her king: [d] only the spoil [‡] thereof, and the cattle thereof, shall ye take for a prey unto yourselves: [e] lay thee an ambush for the city behind it.

3 ¶ So Joshua arose, and all the people of war, to go up against Ai: and Joshua chose out thirty thousand mighty men of valour, and sent them away [f] by night.

4 And he commanded them, saying, Behold, ye shall [g] lie in wait against the city, even behind the city; [h] go not very far from the city, but be ye all ready:

5 And I, and all the people that are with me, will approach unto the city; and it shall come to pass, when they come out against us, as at the first, [i] that we will flee before them,

6 (For they will come out after us,) till we have * drawn them from the city; for they will say, [k] They flee before us, as at the first: therefore we will flee before them.

7 Then ye shall rise up from the ambush, and seize upon the city: [l] for the LORD your God will deliver it into your hand.

more. The temptation was strong, it was easy to suggest what a pity it was that so many things of value should be burnt, to what purpose is this waste? In plundering cities, every man reckons himself entitled to what he can lay his hands on. It was easy to promise themselves secresy and impunity; yet by the grace of God such impressions were made upon the minds of the Israelites by the ordinances of God, circumcision and the passover, which they had lately been partakers of, and by the providences of God which had been concerning them, that they stood in awe of the divine precept and judgment, and generously denied themselves in obedience to their God. And yet, though it was a single person that sinned, the children of Israel are said "to commit the trespass," because one of their body did it, and he was not as yet separated from them, nor disowned by them. They did it, that is, by what Achan did, guilt was derived upon the whole society of which he was a member. This should be a warning to us to take heed of sin ourselves, lest by it many be defiled or disquieted, Heb. xii. 15, and to take heed of having fellowship with sinners, and of being in with them, lest we share in their guilt. Many a careful tradesman has been broken by a careless partner. And it concerns us to watch over one another for the preventing of sin, because other's sins may redound to our damage.—Henry.

HIS TEMPTATION.—Ver. 21. The temptation entered by the eye, and excited the concupiscence of the carnal heart; thus "lust was conceived, and sin brought forth." The goodly Babylonish garment, some magnificent robe brought from Shinar, or Babylon, doubtless at a vast price, was rescued from the flames: and gold and silver, to the amount of a hundred pounds sterling, or rather more, were sacrilegiously kept back from the treasury of the Lord. For such a goodly price did Achan render himself accursed, forfeit the fair prospect of a rich inheritance in Canaan, become "the troubler of Israel," and ruin his whole family: besides the imminent danger to which he exposed his immortal soul! No sooner had he got possession of his plunder than it became his burden: had he not been miraculously detected, he would have been consumed with terrors, and not have dared to use his ill-gotten treasure; and when the other Israelites had been enriched, and enjoyed their abundance with credit and a blessing, he would have lost all the comfort of his portion! So differently do the objects of temptation appear at a distance, to what they do, when apprehended, and when the infatuation ceases!—Scott.

HIS EXECUTION.—No reprieve could be obtained, a gangrened member must be cut off immediately. When he is proved to be an anathema, and the troubler of the camp, we may suppose all the people cry out against him, "Away with him, away with him! Stone him, stone him!" Here is, 1. The place of execution: they brought him out of the camp, in token of their putting "far from them that wicked person," 1 Cor. v. 13. When our Lord Jesus was made a curse for us, that by his trouble we might have peace, he suffered as an accursed thing "without the gate," bearing our reproach, Heb. xiii. 12, 13. The execution was at a distance, that the camp, which was disturbed by Achan's sin, might not be defiled by his death. 2. The persons employed in his execution; it was the act of all Israel, ver. 24, 25. They were all spectators of it, that they might see and fear. Public executions are public examples. Nay, they were all consenting to his death, and as many as could were active in it, in token of the universal detestation in which they held his sacrilegious attempt, and their dread of God's displeasure against them. 3. The partakers with him in the punishment; for "he perished not alone in his iniquity," chap. xxii. 20. (1.) The stolen goods were destroyed with him, the garment burnt, as it should have been with the rest of the combustible things in Jericho, and the silver and gold defaced, melted, lost, and buried in the ashes of the rest of his goods, under "the heap of stones," so as never to be put to any other use. (2.) All his other goods were destroyed likewise, not only his tent, and the furniture of that, but his "oxen, asses, and sheep;" to show, that goods gotten unjustly, especially if they be gotten by sacrilege, will not only turn to no account, but will blast and waste the rest of the possessions to which they are added. The eagle in the fable, that stole flesh from the altar, brought a coal of fire with it, which burnt her nest, Hab. ii. 9, 10; Zech. v. 3, 4. They lose "their own," that grasp at "more than their own." (3.) His sons and daughters were put to death with him. Some indeed think that they were "brought out," ver. 24, only to be the spectators of their father's punishment, but most conclude that they died with him, and that they must be meant, ver. 25, where it is said, they "burned them with fire, after they had stoned them with stones."—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. CAPTURE OF AI—THE AMBUSH.—The stratagem here used, we are sure, was lawful and good; God himself appointed it, and we have no reason to think, but that the like is lawful and good in other wars. Here was no league broken, no oath or promise violated, nor any thing like it: it was not by the pretence of a parley, or treaty of peace, that the advantage was gained, no, these are sacred things, and not to be jested with, nor used to serve a turn; truth, when once it is plighted, becomes a debt even to the enemy. But in this stratagem here was no untruth told; nothing was concealed but their own counsels, which no enemy ever pretended a right to be intrusted with, nothing was dissembled, nothing counterfeited but a retreat, which was no natural or necessary indication at all of their inability to maintain their onset, or of any 8 And it shall be, when ye have taken the city, that ye shall [m]set the city on fire:[2] according to the commandment of the LORD shall ye do. [n]See, I have commanded you.

9 ¶ Joshua therefore sent them forth: and they went to lie in ambush, and abode [o]between Beth-el and Ai, on the west side of Ai: but Joshua [p]lodged that night among the people.

10 And Joshua [q]rose up early in the morning, and numbered the people, and went up, he and the elders of Israel, before the people to Ai.

11 And [r]all the people, even the people of war that were with him, went up, and drew nigh, and came before the city, and pitched on the north side of Ai: now there was a valley between them and Ai.

12 And he took about [s]five thousand men,[3] and set them to lie in ambush between Beth-el and Ai, on the west side [t]of the city.

13 And when they had set the people, even all the host that was on the north of the city, and their [‡]liers in wait [t]on the west of the city, Joshua went that night into the midst of the valley.[4]

14 ¶ And it came to pass, when the king of [u]Ai saw it, that they hasted, and rose up early; and the men of the city went out against Israel to battle, he and all his people, at a time appointed, before the plain: but [x]he wist not that there were liers in ambush against him behind the city.

15 And Joshua and all Israel made as if they were beaten before them, and fled [y]by the way of the wilderness.

16 And all the people that were in Ai were [z]called together to pursue after them: and they pursued after Joshua, and were [a]drawn away from the city.

17 And there was not [b]a man left in Ai or Beth-el, that went not out after Israel: and they left the city open, and pursued after Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto Joshua, [c]Stretch out the spear that is in thy hand toward Ai; for I will give it into thine hand. And Joshua stretched out the spear[5] that he had in his hand toward the city.

19 And [d]the ambush arose quickly out of their place, and they ran as soon as he had stretched out his hand: and they entered into the city, and took it, and hasted and set the city on fire.

20 And when the men of Ai looked behind them, they saw, and, behold, [e]the smoke of the city ascended up to heaven; [f]and they had no [§]power to flee this way or that way:[6] and the people that fled to the wilderness turned back upon the pursuers.

21 And when Joshua and all Israel saw that the ambush had taken the city, and that the smoke of the city ascended, then they turned again, and slew the men of Ai.

22 And the other issued out of the city against them; so they were in the midst of Israel, some on this side, and some on that side: and they smote them, so that they [g]let none of them remain or escape.

23 And [h]the king of Ai they took alive, and brought him to Joshua.

24 And it came to pass, when Israel had made an end of slaying all the inhabitants of Ai in the field, in the wilderness wherein they chased them, and when they were all fallen on the edge of the sword, until they were consumed, that all the Israelites [i]returned unto Ai, and smote it with the edge of the sword.[7]

25 And so it was, that all that fell that day, both of men and women, were twelve thousand, even all the men of Ai.

26 For Joshua [k]drew not his hand back, wherewith he stretched out the spear, until he had utterly destroyed all the inhabitants of Ai.

27 Only [l]the cattle, and the spoil of that city, Israel took for a prey unto themselves, according unto the word of the LORD which he commanded Joshua.

28 And Joshua burnt Ai, and made it [m]an heap for ever, even a desolation [n]unto this day.

29 And [o]the king of Ai he hanged on a tree[8] until even-tide: and [p]as soon as the sun was down, Joshua commanded that they should take his carcase down from the tree, and cast it at the entering of the gate of the city, and raise thereon [q]a great heap of stones, that remaineth unto this day.

30 ¶ Then Joshua [r]built an altar unto the LORD[9] God of Israel [s]in mount Ebal;

31 As Moses, the servant of the LORD, commanded the children of Israel, [t]as it is written in the book of the law of Moses, an [u]altar of whole stones, over which no man hath lift up any iron; [x]and they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the LORD, and sacrificed peace-offerings.

32 And he [y]wrote there, upon the stones, a copy of the law of Moses,[10] which he wrote in the presence of the children of Israel.

33 And [z]all Israel, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark, and on that side, before [a]the priests the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, as well [b]the stranger, as he that was born among them;[11] half of them over against mount Gerizim, and half of them over against mount Ebal; [c]as Moses, the servant of the LORD, had commanded design not to renew it; the enemy ought to have been upon their guard, and to have kept within the defence of their own walls; common prudence, had they been governed by it, would have directed them not to venture on the pursuit of an army which they saw was so far superior to them in numbers, and leave their city unguarded; but (Si populus vult decipi, decipiatur—If the people will be deceived, let them,) if the Canaanites will be so easily imposed upon, and, in pursuit of God's Israel, will break through all the laws of policy and good management, the Israelites are not at all to be blamed for taking advantage of their fury and thoughtlessness; nor is it any way inconsistent with the character God is pleased to give of them, that they are children that will not lie.

THE VICTORY.—What an infatuated enemy the king of Ai was, 1. That he did not by his scouts discover those that lay in ambush behind the city, ver. 14. Some observe it as a remarkable instance of the power of God in making men blind to their own interest, and the things that belong to their peace, that "he wist not that there were liers in wait against him." They are most in danger, who are least aware that they are so. 2. That when Israel seemed to fly, he drew out all his forces to pursue them, and left none to guard his city and to secure his retreat, ver. 17. Thus the church's enemies often run themselves into destruction by their own fury and the violence of their rage against the Israel of God. Pharaoh plunged himself into the Red Sea by the eagerness with which he pursued Israel. 3. That from the killing of thirty-six men out of three thousand, when Israel made the former attack upon his city, he should infer the total routing of so great an army as now he had to deal with, ver. 6, "They flee before us as at the first." See how the prosperity of fools destroys them, and hardens them to their ruin. God had made use of the men of Ai as a scourge to chastise his people for meddling with the accursed thing, and this had puffed them up with a conceit that they must have the honour of delivering their country from these formidable invaders; but they were soon made to see their mistake, and that when the Israelites had reconciled themselves to their God, they could have no power against them. God had made use of them only for the rebuking of Israel, with a purpose, when the correction was over, to throw the rod itself into the fire; "howbeit, they meant not so," but "it was in their heart to destroy and cut off," Isa. x. 5—7. What a complete victory Israel obtained over them by the favour and blessing of God. Each did his part, the divided forces of Israel, by signals agreed on, understood one another, and every thing succeeded according to the project; so that the men of Ai, then when they were most confident of victory, found themselves surrounded, so that they had neither spirit to resist nor room to fly, but were under a fatal necessity of yielding their lives to the destroyers. And now it is hard to say, whether the shouts of the men of Israel, or the shrieks of the men of Ai, were the louder, but easy to imagine what terror and confusion they were filled with, when their highest assurances sunk so suddenly into the heaviest despair. Note, The triumphing of the wicked is short, Job xx. 5. They are exalted for a little while, that their fall and ruin may be the sorer, Job xxiv. 24. See how easily, how quickly the scale turns against them that have not God on their side.

MONUMENT OF TRIUMPH.—The people built an altar, and offered sacrifice to God, ver. 30, 31, in token of their dedication of themselves to God, as living sacrifices to his honour, in and by a mediator, who is the altar that sanctifies this gift. This altar was erected on mount Ebal, the mount on which the curse was put, Deut. xi. 29, to signify that there, where by the law we had reason to expect a curse, by Christ's sacrifice of himself for us, and his mediation, we have peace with God; he has redeemed us from the curse of the law by being made a curse for us, Gal. iii. 13. Even there where it was said, by the curse, "Ye are not my people;" there it is said, through Christ the Altar, "Ye are the children of the living God," Hos. i. 10. The curses pronounced on mount Ebal would immediately have been executed, if atonement had not been made by sacrifice. By the sacrifices offered on this altar they did likewise give God the glory of the victories they had already obtained, as Exod. xvii. 15. Now that they had had the comfort of them in the spoils of Ai, it was fit that God should have the praise of them; and they also implored his favour for their future success; for supplications as well as thanksgivings were intended in their peace-offerings. The way to prosper in all that we put our hand to, is to take God along with us, and in all our ways to acknowledge him by prayer, praise, and dependence. The altar they built, was of rough unhewn stone, according to the law, Exod. xx. 25, for that which is most plain and natural, and least artful and affected in the worship of God, he is best pleased with. Man's device can add no beauty to God's institutions.

EBAL AND GERIZIM.—The tribes were posted, as Moses had directed, six toward Gerizim, and six toward Ebal. And the ark in the midst of the valley was between them, for it was the ark of the covenant; and in it were shut up the close rolls of that law, which were copied out, and shown openly upon the stones. The covenant was commanded, and the command covenanted. The priests that attended the ark, or some of the Levites that attended them, after the people had all taken their places, and silence was proclaimed, pronounced distinctly the blessings and the curses, as Moses had drawn them up, to which the tribes said, Amen; and yet it is here only said, that they should bless the people, for the blessing was that which was first and chiefly intended, and which God designed in giving the law. If they fell under the curse, that was their own fault. And it was really a blessing to the people that they had this matter laid so before, that they should bless the people of Israel.

34 And afterward [d]he read all the words of the law, [e]the blessings and cursings, according to all that is written in the book of the law.

35 There [f]was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, [g]with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that [h]were conversant among them.

your servants: therefore now make ye a league with us.

12 This [s]our bread we took hot for our provision out of our houses on the day we came forth to go unto you; but now, behold, it is dry, and it is mouldy:

13 And these bottles of wine which we filled were new; and, behold, they be rent: and these our garments and our shoes are become old by reason of the very long journey.

14 And [‡]the men took of their victuals, and [a]asked not counsel at the mouth of the LORD.[2]

15 And Joshua [b]made peace with them, and made a league with them, to let them live: and the princes of the congregation sware unto them.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, at the end of three days after they had made a league with them, [c]that they heard that they were their neighbours, and that they dwelt among them.

17 And the children of Israel journeyed, and came unto their cities on the third day. Now their cities were [d]Gibeon, and Chephirah, and Beeroth, [e]and Kirjath-jearim.

18 And the children of Israel smote them not, because the princes of the congregation [f]had sworn unto them by the LORD God of Israel. And all the congregation murmured against the princes.

19 But all the princes said unto all the congregation, [g]We have sworn unto them by the LORD God of Israel: now therefore we may not touch them.

20 This we will do to them; we will even let them live, [h]lest wrath be upon us, because of the oath which we sware unto them.

21 And the princes said unto them, Let them live; but [i]let them be hewers of wood, and drawers of water, unto all the congregation; [k]as the princes had promised them.

22 ¶ And Joshua called for them, and he spake unto them, saying, [l]Wherefore have ye beguiled us, saying, [m]We are very far from you; when ye dwell among us?

23 Now therefore ye are [n]cursed;[3] and there shall [$]none of you be freed from being bond-men, and [o]hewers of wood, and drawers of water, for the house of my God.

24 And they answered Joshua, and said, Because it was certainly told thy servants, how that [p]the LORD thy God commanded his servant Moses to give you all the land, and to destroy all the inhabitants of the land from before you, therefore [q]we were sore afraid of our lives because of you, and have done this thing.

plainly before them, "Life and death, good and evil;" he "had not dealt so with other nations." The law itself also containing the precepts and prohibitions was read, ver. 35, it should seem by Joshua himself, who did not think it below him to be reader in the congregation of the Lord. In conformity to this example, the solemn reading of the law, which was appointed once in seven years, Deut. xxi. 10, 11, was performed by their king or chief magistrate.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. STRATAGEM OF THE GIBEONITES.—They pretended to have undergone the fatigues of a very long journey, and produced what passed for an ocular demonstration of it. It should seem it was then usual for those that undertook long journeys, to take with them, as we do now for long voyages, all manner of provision in kind, the country not being furnished as ours is now with houses of entertainment, for the convenience of which, when we have occasion to make use of them, we have reason to be very thankful. Now, they here pretended that their provision, when they brought it from home, was fresh and new, but now it appeared to be old and dry, whereas it might well be presumed they had not loitered, but made the best of their way; so that from hence it must be inferred that they came, as they said they did, from a very far country, their sacks or portmanteaus were old, the wine all drank, and the bottles in which it had been broken, their shoes and clothes were worse than those of the Israelites in forty years, their bread mouldy, ver. 4, 5, and again, ver. 12, 13. Thus God's Israel have often been deceived and imposed upon with a show of antiquity. But, (as Bishop Hall expresses it) "errors are never the older for being patched," and so seeming old; but they that will be caught with this Gibeonitish stratagem, prove they have not consulted with God. And thus there are those who make themselves poor with the badges of want and distress, and yet have great riches, Prov. xiii. 7, or at least have no need of relief, by which fraud charity is misplaced, and denied to those that are real objects of it.—Henry.

ITS SUCCESS.—Ver. 14, 15. Joshua and the chief persons in Israel, having examined the provisions of the pretended ambassadors, hastily concluded, that the state of them corroborated the account which they had given; and without further hesitation entered into league with them, and by oath engaged not to destroy, but protect, the people whom they represented. This precipitate treaty, entered into with strangers, to which they had little inducement except flattering words and fair speeches, showed great credulity and impolicy: but the chief fault of Joshua and the princes was, that they did not ask counsel of the Lord in a matter of such importance, when the means of doing this were always present with them. It does not however appear, that it would have been wrong, to have received the submission of any of the Canaanites, who should voluntarily have craved mercy, professed repentance, and renounced idolatry; and, therefore, the league with Gibeon was valid, though fraudulently sought for, and impolitically entered into.—Scott.

ITS DETECTION AND PUNISHMENT.—Joshua condemns them to servitude, as a punishment of their fraud, ver. 23, and they submit to the sentence, ver. 25, and, for aught that appears, both sides are pleased. Joshua pronounces them perpetual bondmen. They had purchased their lives with a lie, but that being no good consideration, he obliges them to hold their lives under the rent and reservation of their continual labours, in hewing wood and drawing water, the meanest and most toilsome employments. Thus their lie was punished; had they dealt fairly with Israel, perhaps they had had more honourable conditions granted them, but now, since they gained their lives with ragged clothes and clouted shoes, the badges of servitude, they are condemned for ever to wear such, so must their doom be. And thus the ransom of their lives is paid; dominion is acquired by the preservation of a life that lies at mercy, (Servus dicitur a servando—A servant is so called from the act of saving,) they owe their service to them to whom they owe their lives. Observe how the judgment is given against them. 1. Their servitude is made a curse to them. "Now ye are cursed with the ancient curse of Canaan," from whom these Hivites descended, "a servant of servants shalt thou be," Gen. ix. 25. What shall be done to the false tongue but this? Cursed shall it be. 2. Yet this curse is turned into a blessing; they must be servants, but it shall be for the house of my God. (1.) They were hereby excluded from the liberties and privileges of true-born Israelites, and a remaining mark of distinction put upon their posterity throughout all their generations. (2.) They were hereby employed in such services as required their personal attendance upon "the altar of God in the place which he should choose," ver. 27, which would bring them to the knowledge of the law of God, keep them tight to that holy religion to which they were proselyted, and prevent their revolt to the idolatries of their fathers. (3.) This would be a great advantage to the priests and Levites to have so many, and those mighty men, constant attendants upon them, and engaged by office to do all the drudgery of the tabernacle. A great deal of wood must be hewed for fuel for God's house, not only to keep the fire burning continually upon the altar, but to boil the flesh of the peace-offerings, &c. And a great deal of water must be drawn for the divers washings which the law prescribed; these and other such servile works, such as washing the vessels, carrying out ashes, sweeping the courts, &c., which otherwise the Levites must have done themselves, these Gibeonites were appointed to do. (4.) They were therein servants to livered them out of the hand of the children of Israel, that they slew them not.

27 And Joshua [1]made them that day [t]hewers of wood, and drawers of water, for the congregation, and for the altar of the LORD, even unto this day, [u]in the place which he should choose.

Five kings war against Gibeon, 1; Joshua rescueth it, 6. The sun and moon stand still at the word of Joshua, 12.

NOW it came to pass, when [a]Adoni-zedek king of Jerusalem[1] had heard how Joshua had taken Ai, and had utterly destroyed it; [b]as he had done to Jericho and her king, so he had done to Ai and her king; and [c]how the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Israel, and were among them;

2 That [d]they feared greatly, because Gibeon was a great city, as one of [e]the royal cities,* and because it was greater than Ai, and all the men thereof were mighty.

3 Wherefore Adoni-zedek [f]king of Jerusalem sent unto Hoham king of [g]Hebron, and unto Piram king of Jarmuth, and unto Japhia king of [h]Lachish, and unto Debir king of Eglon, saying,

4 Come up unto me, [i]and help me, that [k]we may smite Gibeon: for it hath made peace with Joshua, and with the children of Israel.

5 Therefore the five [l]kings of the Amorites,[2] the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, the king of Eglon, gathered themselves together, and went up, they and all their hosts, and encamped before Gibeon, and made war against it.

6 ¶ And the men of Gibeon sent unto Joshua [m]to the camp to Gilgal, saying, [n]Slack not thy hand [o]from thy servants; come up to us quickly, and save us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites, that dwell in the [p]mountains, are gathered together against us.

7 So [q]Joshua ascended from Gilgal, he, and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valour.

8 ¶ And the LORD said unto Joshua, [r]Fear them not: for I have delivered them into thine hand; there shall not a man of them stand before thee.

9 Joshua therefore came unto them suddenly, and went up from Gilgal [s]all night.

10 And [t]the LORD discomfited them before Israel, and slew them with a great slaughter [u]at Gibeon, and chased them along the way that goeth up to [x]Beth-horon, and smote them to [y]Azekah, and unto [z]Makkedah.

11 And it came to pass, as they fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that [a]the LORD cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with hail-stones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

12 ¶ Then spake Joshua to the LORD, in the day when the LORD delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, [b]Sun, *stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, Moon, in the valley of [c]Ajalon.

13 And the sun stood still,[3] and the moon stayed, [d]until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of [†]Jasher? So [e]the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day.

14 And [f]there was no day like that before it, or after it, that [g]the LORD hearkened unto the voice of a man: [h]for the LORD fought for Israel.

15 ¶ And [i]Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

16 But these five kings fled, [k]and hid themselves [l]in a cave at Makkedah.

17 And it was told Joshua, saying, The five kings are found hid in a cave at Makkedah.

18 And Joshua said, [m]Roll great stones upon the mouth of the cave, and set men by it for to keep them;

19 And stay ye not, [n]but pursue after your enemies, and smite the *hindmost of them; [o]suffer them not to enter into their cities: for the LORD your God hath delivered them into your hand.

20 And it came to pass, when Joshua and the children of Israel [p]had made an end of slaying them with a very great slaughter, till they were consumed, that the rest which remained of them entered into fenced cities.

21 And all the people returned [q]to the camp to Joshua at Makkedah in peace: [r]none moved his tongue[4] against any of the children of Israel.

22 ¶ Then said Joshua, [s]Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out those five kings unto me out of the cave.

23 And they did so, and brought forth those five kings unto him out of the cave, [t]the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon.

24 And it came to pass, when they brought out those kings unto Joshua, that Joshua called for all the men of Israel, and said unto the captains of the men of war which went with him, Come near, [u]put your feet upon the necks of these kings. And they came the congregation too: for whatever promotes and helps forward the worship of God, is real service to the commonwealth. It is the interest of every Israelite, that the altar of God be well attended. Hereby also the congregation was excused from much of this servile work, which perhaps would otherwise have been expected from some of them; God had made a law that the Israelites should never make any of their brethren bondmen; if they had slaves, they must be of the heathen that were round about them. Lev. xxv. 44. Now, in honour of this law, and of Israel that was honoured by it, God would not have the drudgery, no, not of the tabernacle itself, to be done by Israelites, but by Gibeonites, who were afterwards called Nethinim, men given to the Levites, as they were to the priests, Num. iii. 9, to minister to them in the service of God.—Henry.

CHAP. X. CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE GIBEONITES.—Five kings combine against the Gibeonites. Adonizedek, king of Jerusalem, was the first mover and ringleader of this confederacy. He had a good name, it signifies lord of righteousness, a descendant perhaps from Melchizedek, king of righteousness; but notwithstanding the goodness of his name and family, it seems he was a bad man, and an implacable enemy to the posterity of that Abraham, whom his predecessor, Melchizedek, was such a faithful friend to. He called upon his neighbours to join against Israel, either because he was the most honourable prince, and had the precedency among these kings, (perhaps they had some dependence upon him, at least they paid a deference to him, as the most public, powerful, and active man they had among them,) or because he was first or most apprehensive of the danger his country was in, not only by the conquest of Jericho and Ai, but the surrender of Gibeon, which, it seems, was the chief thing that alarmed him, it being one of the most considerable frontier-towns they had. Against Gibeon, therefore, all the forces he could raise must be levelled, "Come," says he, "and help me, that we may smite Gibeon." This he resolves to do, either 1. In policy, that he might retake the city, because it was a strong city, and of great consequence to his country, in whose hands it was; or, 2. In passion, that he might chastise the citizens for making peace with Joshua, pretending that they had perfidiously betrayed their country and strengthened the common enemy; whereas they had really done the greatest kindness imaginable to their country, by setting them a good example, if they would have followed it. Thus Satan and his instruments make war upon those that make peace with God: "marvel not if the world hate you," and treat those as deserters, who are converts to Christ.

THE LORD MIGHTY IN BATTLE.—God showed his great power in defeating the enemies which Joshua so vigorously attacked, ver. 10, 11. Joshua had a very numerous and powerful army with him, hands enough to despatch a dispirited enemy, so that the enemy might have been scattered by the ordinary fate of war; but God himself would appear in this great and decisive battle, and draw up the artillery of heaven against the Canaanites, to demonstrate to his people, that they "got not this land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them, but God's right hand and his arm," Ps. xliv. 3. "The Lord discomfited them before Israel;" Israel did what they could, and yet God did all. 1. It must needs be a very great terror and confusion to the enemy, to perceive that heaven itself fought against them; for who can contest with, flee from, or fence against the powers of heaven? They had affronted the true God, and robbed him of his honour, by worshipping the host of heaven, giving that worship to the creature which is due to the Creator only; and now the host of heaven fights against them, and even that part of the creation which they had idolized, is at war with them, and even triumphs in their ruin, Jer. viii. 2. There is no way of making any creature propitious to us, no not by sacrifice or offering, but only by making our peace with God, and keeping ourselves in his love. This had been enough to make them an easy prey to the victorious Israelites, yet this was not all. 2. Beside the terror struck upon them, there was a great slaughter made of them by hailstones, which were so large, and came down with such a force, that more were killed by the hailstones than by the sword of the Israelites, though, no doubt, they were busy. God himself speaks to Job of treasures, or magazines, of snow and hail, which he has "reserved for the day of battle and war," Job xxxviii. 22, 23, and here they are made use of to destroy the Canaanites. Here was hail shot from God's great ordnance, that, against whomsoever it was directed, was sure to hit, (and never glanced upon the Israelites mixed with them,) and whenever it hit, was sure to kill. See here how miserable they are, that have God for their enemy, and how sure to perish; "it is a fearful thing to fall into his hands," for there is no fleeing out of them. Some observe, that Beth-horon lay north of Gibeon, Azekah and Makkedah lay south, so that they fled each way; but which way soever they fled, the hailstones pursued them, and met them at every turn.—Henry.

SUN AND MOON OBEDIENT TO "THE VOICE OF A MAN."—Ver. 12—14. Joshua doubtless acted, on this occasion, by an immediate impulse upon his mind from the Spirit of God. He first "spake to the LORD" in earnest prayer; and then to the sun and moon, as by authority from him, commanding those luminaries to stay their course. This he did publicly before all Israel, that they might hear the charge which he gave, and observe the obedience of these heavenly bodies. It would have been improper in him to have spoken, or the miracle to have been recorded, according to the terms of modern astronomy. The sun appeared to the Israelites over Gibeon, and the moon over the valley of Ajalon, which is supposed to have been situated in a different direction: and there they near, and put their feet upon the necks of them.

25 And Joshua said unto them, [z]Fear not, nor be dismayed; be strong, and of good courage: for [y]thus shall the LORD do to all your enemies against whom ye fight.

26 And afterward [z]Joshua smote them, and slew them, and [a]hanged them on five trees: and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening.[5]

27 And it came to pass at the time of the going down of the sun, that Joshua commanded, and [b]they took them down off the trees, and cast them into the cave wherein they had been hid, and laid great stones in the cave's mouth, which remain [c]until this very day.

28 ¶ And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof he utterly destroyed, [d]them, and all the souls that were therein; he let none remain: [e]and he did to the king of Makkedah as he did unto the king of Jericho.[6]

29 ¶ Then Joshua passed from Makkedah, and all Israel with him, unto [f]Libnah,[7] and fought against Libnah:

30 And the LORD delivered it also, and the king thereof, into the hand of Israel; and he smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein; he let none remain in it; but did unto the king thereof [g]as he did unto the king of Jericho.

31 ¶ And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him, unto [h]Lachish,[8] and encamped against it, and fought against it:

32 And the LORD delivered Lachish[9] into the hand of Israel, which took it on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah.

33 ¶ Then Horam king of [i]Gezer came up to help Lachish; and Joshua smote him and his people, until he had left him none remaining.

34 ¶ And from Lachish Joshua passed unto [k]Eglon, and all Israel with him; and they encamped against it, and fought against it:

35 And they took it [l]on that day, and smote it with the edge of the sword; and all the souls that were therein he [m]utterly destroyed that day, according to all that he had done to Lachish.

36 ¶ And Joshua went up from Eglon, and all Israel with him, unto [n]Hebron; and they fought against it:

37 And they took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and all the souls that were therein; he left none remaining, appeared to be stayed in their course "for a whole day;" either for the space of about twelve or fourteen hours, or for the time of one diurnal revolution. Many inquiries have been made concerning the way in which this miracle was wrought, and many difficulties and objections have been urged against understanding it literally. But the fact, as far as we are concerned about it, is authenticated by the Divine testimony; and the manner in which it was accomplished, lies entirely out of our province, because beyond our discovery and comprehension. "Is any thing too hard for the LORD?" This question forms a sufficient answer to ten thousand difficulties, which puny objectors, under the assumed title of philosophers, have in every age been starting against the truth of God in his written word. If the earth's diurnal motion was gradually stopped, it does not appear that it would, in respect of the dry land, make a more sensible difference to the inhabitants, than casting anchor, when a ship is under full sail does to the mariners: and the power which caused the deluge, was sufficient to prevent the effects of this change on the seas and oceans, and keep them from overflowing any part of the globe. As there are no records of profane history so ancient as this event, it cannot be any cause for wonder, that pagan authors have not mentioned it. Though some intimation of it seems given, in the fable of Phæton driving the chariot of the sun, and throwing all things into disorder, so that there was one day, wholly unlike all, before or after it. This extraordinary miracle not only gave Israel an opportunity of completing their victory, but rendered Joshua honourable in the eyes of all the people; and both him and them terrible to the surrounding nations. It was also a public attestation, that the God of Israel was the Lord of the whole earth, and of the heavens; and a protest against idolatry; whilst the sun and moon, the worship of which formed the most ancient and plausible kind of idolatry, were obedient to the commands of the servants of JEHOVAH, the God of Israel. The book of Jasher seems to have been a collection of records or poems, concerning the chief events of the wars of Israel. In this collection, it is probable, there were further particulars concerning this miracle; or a poem on the occasion, well known among the Israelites.—Scott.

JOSHUA'S VICTORIOUS PROGRESS.—Observe in this narrative, 1. The great speed Joshua made in taking these cities, which, some think, is intimated in the manner of relating it, which is quick and concise. He flew like lightning from place to place; and though they all stood it out to the last extremity, and none of these cities opened their gates to him, yet in a little time he got them all into his hands, summoned them, and seized them, the same day, ver. 28, or in two days, ver. 32. Now that they were struck with fear by the defeat of their armies, and the death of their kings, Joshua prudently followed his blow. See what a great deal of work may be done in a little time, if we will be but busy, and improve our opportunities. 2. The great severity Joshua used toward those he conquered. He gave no quarter to man, woman, or child, put to the sword "all the souls," ver. 28, 30, 32, 35, &c., "utterly destroyed all that breathed," ver. 40, and "left none remaining." Nothing could justify this military execution, but that herein they did as "the Lord God of Israel commanded," ver. 40, which was sufficient not only to bear them out, and save them from the imputation of cruelty, but to sanctify what they did, and make it an acceptable piece of service to his justice. God would hereby, (1.) Manifest his hatred of the idolatries, and other abominations, which the Canaanites had been guilty of, and leave us to judge how great the provocation was, which they had given him, by the greatness of the destruction which was brought upon them when the measure of their iniquity was full. (2.) He would hereby magnify his love to his people Israel, in giving so many men "for them," and "people for their life," Isa. xliii. 4, when the "heathen are to be cast out to make room for this vine," Ps. lxxx. 8. Divine justice appears more prodigal than ever of human blood, that the Israelites might find themselves for ever obliged to spend their lives to the glory of that God, who had sacrified so many of the lives of his creatures to their interest.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. THE ALLIED FORCES.—Several nations joined in this confederacy, some "in the mountains," and some "in the plains," ver. 2. Canaanites from east and west, Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, &c. ver. 3, of different constitutions, and divided interests among themselves, and yet they here unite against Israel, as against a common enemy. Thus are "the children of this world" more "unanimous," and therein "wiser, than the children of light." The oneness of the church's enemies should shame the church's friends out of their discords and divisions, and engage them to be one. The head of this confederacy was "Jabin king of Hazor," ver. 1, as Adonizedek was of the former; it is said, ver. 10, Hazor had been the "head of all those kingdoms," which could not have revolted without occasioning ill-will; but that was forgotten and laid aside upon this occasion by consent of parties, Luke xxiii. 12. When they had all drawn up their forces together, every kingdom bringing in its quota, they were a very great army, much greater than the former, "as the sand on the sea-shore in multitude," and, upon this account, much stronger and more formidable, that they had horses and chariots very many, which we do not find the southern kings had; thereby they had a great advantage against Israel, for their army consisted only of foot, and they never brought horses or chariots into the field. Josephus tells us, that the army of the Canaanites consisted of three hundred thousand foot, ten thousand horse, and twenty thousand chariots. "Many there be that rise up" against God's Israel; doubtless their numbers made them very Merom [r]suddenly, and they fell upon them.

8 And the LORD delivered them into the hand of Israel, who smote them, and chased them unto †great Zidon, and unto ‡Mizrephoth-maim, and unto the valley of Mizpeh[2] eastward; and they smote them, until they left them none remaining.

9 And Joshua did unto them as the LORD bade him: [s]he houghed their horses, and burnt their chariots with fire.

10 ¶ And Joshua at that time turned back, and took [t]Hazor, and smote the king thereof with the sword: for Hazor beforetime was the head of all those kingdoms.

11 And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there was not [§]any left to breathe: and he burnt Hazor with fire.

12 And [u]all the cities of those kings, and all the kings of them, did Joshua take, and smote them with the edge of the sword; and he utterly destroyed them, [x]as Moses, the servant of the LORD, commanded.

13 But as for the cities that stood still [ǁ]in their strength,[3] Israel burned none of them, save Hazor only; that did Joshua burn.

14 And all [y]the spoil of these cities, and the cattle, the children of Israel took for a prey unto themselves; but every man they smote with the edge of the sword, until they had destroyed them, [z]neither left they any to breathe.

15 As [a]the LORD commanded Moses his servant, [b]so did Moses command Joshua, [c]and so did Joshua: [d]he *left nothing undone of all that the LORD commanded Moses.

16 ¶ So Joshua took [e]all that land, the [f]hills, and all the south country, and all [g]the land of Goshen, and the valley, and the plain, and the [h]mountain of Israel, and the valley of the same;

17 Even from †the mount Halak, [i]that goeth up to [k]Seir, even unto Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon: and [l]all their kings he took, and smote them, and slew them.

18 Joshua made war [m]a long time[4] with all those kings.

19 There was not a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save [n]the Hivites, the inhabitants of Gibeon: all other they took in battle.

20 For [o]it was of the LORD to harden[5] their hearts, that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might destroy them, [p]as the LORD commanded Moses.

21 ¶ And at that time came Joshua, and cut off [q]the Anakims from the mountains, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Israel: [r]Joshua destroyed them utterly with their cities.

22 There was none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Israel: [s]only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Ashdod, there remained.

23 ¶ So Joshua took the whole land,[6] [t]according to all that the LORD said unto Moses, and Joshua gave it for an inheritance unto Israel, [u]according to their divisions by their tribes. [x]And the land rested from war.

confident of success, but it proved that so much the greater slaughter was made of them.

THEIR DEFEAT.—Joshua marched against these confederate forces, ver. 7. He "came upon them suddenly," and surprised them in their quarters. He made this haste, 1. That he might put them into the greater confusion, by giving them an alarm, when they little thought he had been near them. 2. That he might be sure not to come short of the honour God had fixed, to give him the meeting at the enemy's camp, "to-morrow about this time." It is fit we should keep time with God. He obtained the honour and advantage of a complete victory; he smote them and chased them, in the several ways they took in their flight; some fled toward Zidon, which lay to the north-west, others toward Mizpeh, eastward, both the parties Joshua sent out pursued them each way. "So the Lord delivered them into the hand of Israel;" they would not deliver themselves into the hands of Israel to be made proselytes and tributaries, and so offered up to God's grace, Rom. xv. 16, and therefore God delivered them into their hands to be made sacrifices to his justice; for God will be honoured by us or upon us. His obedience to the orders given him, in destroying the horses and chariots, ver. 9, which was an instance, 1. Of his subjection to the divine will, as one under authority, that must do as he is bidden. 2. Of his self-denial, and crossing his own genius and inclination in compliance with God's command. 3. Of his confidence in the power of God engaged for Israel, which enabled them to despise the chariots and horses which others trusted in, Ps. xx. 7, xxxiii. 17. 4. Of his care to keep up in the people like confidence in God, by taking that from them, which they would be tempted to trust too much to. This was "cutting off a right hand."—Henry.

DEFEAT OF THE ANAKIMS.—Ver. 21—23. The Anakims, whose name had formerly so terrified the unbelieving Israelites, no ways distinguished themselves in this war, but were subdued and destroyed with the other inhabitants. It seems evident that Joshua conquered the Anakims, and desolated their cities, before the division of the land: yet several of the principal persons escaped into the country of the Philistines, and settled there: from whom Goliath, and the other giants afterwards mentioned, descended. But after a time some of them returned, with followers, and rebuilt the cities: and Caleb and Othniel, to whom that part of the country was assigned, vanquished and destroyed them after the division of the land, perhaps after the death of Joshua. The conquered cities had doubtless before this been garrisoned, and some of the people dispersed through the country to cultivate the lands: and preparation was now making for the regular partition of it among their tribes and families. New occupations, with which the nation had hitherto been entirely unacquainted, now called for their attention: but the Lord, who gave them the land, was able to teach them to cultivate it; and they would soon make proficiency under such an Instructor. Great numbers of the ancient inhabitants still continued in the land, or waited in the adjacent countries for an opportunity of regaining their possessions; but for the present, they lay concealed, or remained quiet; so that the Israelites were not molested by their assaults or incursions.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. LIST OF VANQUISHED KINGS.—These were conquered and subdued by the sword of Israel, some in the field, others in their own cities. Thirty-one in all, and very particularly named and counted, it should seem, in the order in which they were conquered; for the catalogue begins with the kings of Jericho and Ai, then takes in the king of Jerusalem, and the princes of the south that were in confederacy with him, and then proceeds to those of the northern association. Now, 1. This shows what a very fruitful country Canaan then was, which could support so many kingdoms, and in which so many kings chose to throng together, rather than disperse themselves into other countries, which we may suppose not yet inhabited, but where, though they might find more room, they could not expect such plenty and pleasure: this was the land God spied out for Israel; and yet at this day it is one of the most barren, despicable, and unprofitable countries in the world; such is the effect of the curse it lies under, since its possessors rejected Christ and his Gospel, as was foretold by Moses, Deut. xxix. 23. 2. It shows what narrow limits men's ambition was then confined to. These kings contented themselves with the government, each of them, of one city, and the towns and villages that pertained to it; and no one of them, for aught that appears, aimed to make himself master of the rest, but, when there was occasion, united for the common safety. Yet it should seem that what was wanting in the extent of their territories, was made up in the absoluteness of their power, their subjects being all their tenants and vassals, and entirely at their command. 3. It shows how good God was to Israel, in giving them victory over all these kings, and possession of all these kingdoms, and what obligations he hereby laid upon them to "observe his statutes, and to keep his laws," Ps. cv. 44, 45.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The enjoyment of present blessings should revive the grateful remembrance of former mercies: and the benefit derived from the labours of the living servants of the Lord, should remind us to respect the memories of those who have heretofore served Him and their generation. The national covenant, mediated by Moses, engaged many temporal advantages to Israel; but Jesus alone brings the whole multitude of believers to the promised rest and inheritance: and though his true people enjoy many blessings from him in this world, yet they do not enter upon the possession of their complete felicity, till they pass over the Jordan of death to the mansions above.—The vengeance of a righteous God, inflicted upon all these kings and their numerous subjects for their wickedness, should impress our minds with reverential awe of his majesty and purity, and with dread and hatred of sin; whilst the fruitful land which he bestowed upon his chosen people, and thus prepared for their reception, should inspire our hearts with humble gratitude, and with hope and confidence in his mercy. In both instances the final event of all things is represented; when the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal." Let us then "flee from the wrath to come," and seek and pray to be numbered with the saints here, that we may be numbered with them in glory everlasting!—Scott.

7 Now therefore divide [u]this land for an inheritance unto the nine tribes, and the half-tribe of Manasseh;

CHAP. XIII. JOSHUA REMINDED OF HIS OLD AGE.—Here, God puts Joshua in mind of his old age, ver. 1. 1. It is said that Joshua was "old and stricken in years," and he and Caleb were at this time the only old men among the thousands of Israel; none (except them) of all those who were numbered at mount Sinai being now alive. He had been a man of war from his youth, Exod. xvii. 10, but now he yielded to the infirmities of age, with which it is in vain for the stoutest man to think of contesting. It should seem Joshua had not the same strength and vigour in his old age, that Moses had; all that come to old age do not find it alike good: generally, the days of old age are evil days, and such as there is no pleasure in them, nor expectation of service from them. 2. God takes notice of it to him, "God said to him, Thou art old." Note, It is good for those who are "old and stricken in years," to be put in remembrance of their being so. Some have "gray hairs here and there upon them, and perceive it not," Hos. vii. 9; they do not care to think of it, and therefore need to be told of it, that they may be quickened to do the work of life, and make preparation for death which is coming toward them apace. But God mentions Joshua's age and growing infirmities, (1.) As a reason why he should now lay by the thoughts of pursuing the war; he cannot expect to see an end of it quickly, for there remained much land, more perhaps than he thought, to be possessed, in several parts remote from each other: and it was not fit that at this age he should be put upon the fatigue of renewing the war, and carrying it to such distant places; no, it was enough for him that he had reduced the body of the country, let him be gathered to rest, with honour and the thanks of his people, for the good services he had done them, and let the conquering of the skirts of the country be left for those that shall come after. As he had entered into the labours of Moses, so let others enter into his, and bring forth the top-stone: the doing of which was reserved for David long after. Observe, God considers the frame of his people, and would not have them burdened with work above their strength. It cannot be expected that old people should do as they have done for God and their country. (2.) As a reason why he should speedily apply himself to the dividing of that which he had conquered. That work must be done, and done quickly; it was necessary that he should preside in the doing of it, and therefore, he being "old and stricken in years," and not likely to continue long, let him make that his concluding piece of service to God and Israel. All people, but especially old people, should set themselves to do that quickly which must be done before they die, lest death prevent them, Eccl. ix. 10.

DIVISION OF THE TERRITORY.—Joshua divides the soil, not by his own will; though he was a very wise, just, and good man, it must not be left to him to give what he pleased to each tribe; but he must do it by lot, which referred the matter wholly to God, and to his determination, for he it is that appoints the bounds of our habitation, and every man's judgment must proceed from him. But Joshua must preside in this affair, must manage this solemn appeal to Providence, and see that the lot was drawn fairly and without fraud, and that every tribe did acquiesce in it. The lot indeed "causeth contention to cease," Prov. xviii. 18. But if upon this lot any controversy should arise, Joshua by his wisdom and authority must determine it, and prevent any ill consequences of it. Joshua must have the honour of dividing the land, 1. Because he had undergone the fatigue of conquering it; and when, through his hand, each tribe received its allotment, they would thereby be made the more sensible of their obligations to him. And what a pleasure must it needs be to a man of such a public spirit as Joshua was, to see the people that were so dear to him eating the labour of his hands! 2. That he might be herein a type of Christ, who has not only conquered for us the gates of hell, but has opened to us the gates of heaven, and having purchased the eternal inheritance for all believers, will in due time put them all in possession of it.

INHERITANCE OF THE TRIBES EAST OF JORDAN.—We have here a very particular account of the inheritance of these two tribes and a-half; how they were separated from each other, and what cities, with the towns, villages, and fields, commonly known and reputed to be appurtenances to them, belonged to each tribe. This is very fully and exactly set down, 1. That posterity might, in reading this history, be the more affected with the goodness of God to their ancestors, when they found what a large and fruitful country, and what abundance of great and famous cities, he put them in possession of. God's grants look best when we descend to the particulars. 2. That the limits of each tribe being punctually set down in this authentic record, disputes might be prevented, and such contests between the tribes, as commonly happen where boundaries have not been adjusted, which reigned in Heshbon, [m]whom Moses smote [n]with the princes of Midian, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, which were dukes of Sihon dwelling in the country.

22 ¶ [o]Balaam also the son of Beor, the [‡]soothsayer, did the children of Israel slay with the sword among them that were slain by them.

23 And the border of the children of Reuben was Jordan, and the border thereof. This was the inheritance of the children of Reuben after their families, the cities and the villages thereof.

24 ¶ And Moses gave inheritance [p]unto the tribe of Gad, even unto the children of Gad, according to their families:

25 And their coast was Jazer, and all the cities of Gilead, and [q]half the land of the children of Ammon, [s] unto Aroer that is before [r]Rabbah;

26 And from Heshbon unto [t]Ramath-mizpeh, and Betonim; and from [t]Mahanaim unto the border of [u]Debir;

27 And in the valley, Beth-aram, and [x]Beth-nimrah, and [y]Succoth, and Zaphon, the rest of the kingdom of Sihon king of Heshbon, Jordan and his border, even unto the edge of the sea of [z]Chinnereth, on the other side Jordan eastward.

28 This is the inheritance of the children of Gad after their families, the cities, and their villages.

29 ¶ And Moses gave inheritance unto the half-tribe of Manasseh: and this was the possession of the half-tribe of the children of Manasseh by their families.

30 And [a]their coast was from Mahanaim, all Bashan, all the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, and all the towns of Jair, which are in Bashan, threescore cities;

31 And half Gilead, and [b]Ashtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan, were pertaining unto the children of Machir, the son of Manasseh, even to the one half of the children of Machir by their families.

32 These are the countries which Moses did distribute for inheritance in the plains of Moab, on the other side Jordan, by Jericho, eastward.

33 But unto [c]the tribe of Levi Moses gave not any inheritance: the LORD God of Israel was their inheritance, as he said unto them.

Thus there were still twelve tribes to share the land, without reckoning Levi as one. The Levites, as it follows in this verse, had no part in the land except cities to dwell in—they had them for a habitation, not for a possession, and could not sell them, as the other tribes could their possessions.—PATRICK.

of Canaan, [a]which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance to them.

2 By [b]lot was their inheritance, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses, for the nine tribes, and for the half-tribe.

3 For Moses [c]had given the inheritance of two tribes and an half-tribe on the other side Jordan; [d]but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them.

4 For [e]the children of Joseph were two tribes,[1] Manasseh and Ephraim; therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, [f]save cities to dwell in, with their suburbs for their cattle and for their substance.

5 As the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land.

6 ¶ Then the children of Judah came unto Joshua in [g]Gilgal: and [h]Caleb the son of Jephunneh [i]the Kenezite said unto him, [k]Thou knowest the thing that the LORD said unto Moses, [l]the man of God, concerning me and thee, in [m]Kadesh-barnea.

7 Forty years old was I when Moses, the servant of the LORD, [n]sent me from Kadesh-barnea to espy out the land; and [o]I brought him word again, as it was in mine heart.

8 Nevertheless my brethren that went up with me made the heart of the people melt: but I [p]wholly followed the LORD my God.

9 And Moses sware on that day, saying, [q]Surely the land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance, and thy children's for ever, because thou hast wholly followed the LORD my God.

10 And now, behold, the LORD hath kept me alive, as he said, these [r]forty and five years, even since the LORD spake this word unto Moses, while the children of Israel [*]wandered in the wilderness: and now, lo, I am this day fourscore and five years old.

11 As [s]yet I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me: as my strength was then, even so is my strength now, for war, both to go out, and to come in.

12 Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the LORD spake in that day: (for thou heardest in that day how [t]the Anakims were there, and that the cities were great and fenced;) [u]if so be the LORD will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the LORD said.

13 And Joshua [x]blessed him,[2] and [y]gave unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh Hebron for an inheritance.

14 Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite unto this day, [z]because that he wholly followed the LORD God of Israel.

nor this matter brought to a certainty. And we have reason to think that the register here prescribed and published of the lot of each tribe, was of great use to Israel in after ages, was often appealed to, and always acquiesced in, for the determining of meum and tuum—mine and thine.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—In the present state of human nature, it is the Lord's will that there should be distinctions of property, that every one may know and be contented with his own.—Wherever our habitation is placed, and in whatever honest way our portion is assigned us, we should consider them as allotted us by God, and acquiesce and be thankful: and every prudent method should be devised to prevent litigations about property.—The mercies of the Lord to his people, and his judgments upon his enemies, especially those who have tempted others to wickedness, ought never to be forgotten, and should frequently be mentioned; because they are honourable to him, and profitable subjects for our meditation.—The ministers of the Lord should study to show that they are peculiarly indifferent about worldly interests: and the people should take care, that they want nothing suitable to their station; that they may neither be discouraged, nor taken off from serving at the altar. But happy are they who have the Lord God of Israel for their inheritance, how little soever of this world falls to their share: his providence will supply their temporal necessities; and his ordinances and spiritual consolations will feast their souls, until they arrive at that "fulness of joy, and those pleasures which are at his right hand for evermore."—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. GOD—THE CHOOSER OF THE INHERITANCE.—The rule by which they went was the lot, ver. 2, "The disposal" of that is "of the Lord," Prov. xvi. 33. It was here used in an affair of weight, and which could not otherwise be accommodated to universal satisfaction, and it was used in a solemn religious manner as an appeal to God, by consent of parties. In dividing by lot, 1. They referred themselves to God, and to his wisdom and sovereignty, believing him fitter to determine for them, than they for themselves, Ps. xlvii. 4, "He shall choose our inheritance for us." 2. They professed a willingness to abide by the determination of it; for every man must take what is his lot, and make the best of it. In allusion to this, we are said to "obtain an inheritance in Christ," Eph. i. 11, ἐκληρώθημεν, "we have obtained it by lot." So the word signifies; for it is obtained by a divine designation. Christ, our Joshua, gives eternal life to "as many as were given him," John xvii. 2.—Henry.

CALEB'S PORTION.—Ver. 6—15. Before the persons appointed for that service had begun to divide the land by lot, Caleb came unto Joshua at Gilgal, (where probably the tabernacle was still set up, and still remained,) to require that Hebron and the lands adjacent might be assigned to him; and his brethren of the tribe of Judah attended him as supporting his claim. It is probable, that when the other spies terrified the people about the Anakims who dwelt in Hebron, Caleb proposed to take that place for his inheritance, and to wait for it till the Anakims were dispossessed: and that by divine direction Moses had engaged by oath that it should be so; at the time when the LORD declared that Joshua and Caleb alone should live to enter the promised land. Caleb therefore solicited the performance of this engagement, and spake of it as well known to Joshua and all concerned. He likewise took occasion to rejoice in the testimony of the Lord, that he had "followed him wholly," and in that of his conscience, that "he had given his report, as it was in his heart:" and having intimated how the other spies discouraged the people to their own destruction; he thankfully mentioned the goodness of God, in keeping him alive for forty-five years, whilst all that generation were wasted in the wilderness, and amidst all the perils of the wars in Canaan; and that he, at eighty-five years of age, was as strong, and as capable of war, as he had been at forty. All this became one who was so eminent a character, and venerable for age, being more than twenty years older than any man in Israel, except Joshua and some of the Levites.—It seems from the narration, that the Anakims had again possessed themselves of Hebron, after it was taken by Joshua, and that Caleb undertook to drive them out. This he was ready to attempt, confiding not in his own strength or valour, or in the assistance of his brethren, but in the almighty God: and, in order to mark this more strongly, though it does not appear that he doubted the event, he thus expressed his confidence: "If the LORD will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out."—Joshua and the princes, without hesitation, consented to his proposal: and "Joshua blessed him;" he prayed that he might have success in his intended expedition, and comfort in his inheritance.—In the next chapter we read of his driving out the Anakims; and when the lots were cast, Hebron fell within the portion of Judah, so that he was not separated from his brethren.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. CALEB'S VALOUR AND ITS REWARD.—Caleb having obtained his grant, we are told, 1. How he signalized his own valour in the conquest of Hebron, ver. 14; "He drove thence the three sons of Anak;" he and those that he engaged to assist him in this service. This is mentioned here, to show that the confidence he had expressed of success in this affair through the presence of God with him, chap. xiv. 12, did not deceive him, but the event answered his expectation. It is not said that he "slew these giants," but he "drove them thence," which intimates that they retired upon his approach, and fled before him; the strength and stature of their bodies could not keep up the courage

THIS then was [a]the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah[1] by their families; [b]even to the border of Edom the wilderness of Zin southward was the uttermost part of the south coast.

2 And their south border was from the shore of the [c]salt sea, from the *bay that looketh southward:

3 And it went out to the south side to [†]Maaleh-acrabbim, and passed along to [d]Zin, and ascended up on the south side unto Kadesh-barnea, and passed along to Hezron, and went up to Adar, and fetched a compass to Karkaa:

4 From thence it passed toward [e]Azmon, and went out unto [f]the river of Egypt; and the goings out of that coast were at the sea: this shall be your south coast.

5 And [g]the east border was the salt sea, even unto the end of Jordan. And their border in the north quarter was from the bay of the sea at the uttermost part of Jordan:

6 And the border went up to [h]Beth-hogla, and passed along by the north of Beth-arabah; and the border went up to [i]the stone of Bohan the son of Reuben:

7 And the border went up toward [k]Debir from [l]the valley of Achor, and so northward, looking toward [m]Gilgal, that is before the going up to Adummim, which is on the south side of the river: and the border passed toward the waters of En-shemish, and the goings out thereof were at [n]En-rogel:

8 And the border went up by the [o]valley of the son of Hinnom, unto the south side of [p]the Jebusite; the same is Jerusalem: and the border went up to the top of the mountain that lieth before the valley of Hinnom westward, which is at the end of [q]the valley of the giants northward.

9 And the border was drawn from the top of the hill unto the fountain of the water of [r]Nephtoah, and went out to the cities of mount Ephron; and the border was drawn to [s]Baalah, which is [t]Kirjath-jearim:

10 And the border compassed from Baalah westward unto mount Seir, and passed along unto the side of mount Jearim, which is Chesalon, on the north side, and went down to [u]Beth-shemish, and passed on to [x]Timna:

11 And the border went out unto the side of [y]Ekron northward: and the border was drawn to Shicron, and passed along to [z]mount Baalah, and went out unto Jabneel; and the goings out of the border were at the sea.

12 And the west border was to [a]the great sea, and the coast thereof. This is the coast of the children of Judah round about, according to their families.[2]

13 ¶ And unto [b]Caleb the son of Jephunneh he gave a part among the children of Judah, according to the commandment of the LORD to Joshua, even [‡]the city of Arba, the father of Anak, which city is Hebron.

14 And Caleb drove thence [c]the three sons of Anak, Sheshai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak.

15 And he went [d]up thence to the inhabitants of Debir: and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-sepher.

16 ¶ And Caleb said, He that smiteth Kirjath-sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter to wife.

17 And [e]Othniel the son of [f]Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, took it: and he gave him [g]Achsah his daughter to wife.

18 And it came to pass, as she came unto him, that she moved him to ask of her father a field: and [h]she lighted off her ass; and Caleb said unto her, What wouldest thou?

19 Who answered, [i]Give me a [k]blessing; for thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs, and the nether springs.

20 This is [l]the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Judah according to their families.

[1] To the tribe of Judah, there fell a country abounding with vines and pasture grounds (Gen. xlix. 11); to that of Asher, one plenteous in oil, iron, and brass (Deut. xxxiii. 24); to that of Naphtali, one extending from the west to the south of Judea (Deut. xxxiii. 23); to that of Benjamin, one in which the temple was afterwards built (Deut. xxxiii. 12); to that of Zebulun, a country abounding in sea ports (Gen. xlix. 13); to those of Ephraim and Manasseh, countries renowned for their precious fruits (Deut. xxxiii. 14); and to those of Simeon and Levi, no particular countries at all, forasmuch as the former had a portion with Judah, and the latter was dispersed through the several tribes. Since, therefore, each particular lot answered so exactly to each prediction, we are supplied with the most indisputable proofs that there was Divine inspiration in these predictions, and Divine direction in the distribution of the lots.—STACKHOUSE.

of their minds, but, with the countenances of lions, they had the hearts of trembling hares. Thus does God often "cut off the spirit of princes," Ps. lxxvi. 12, "take away the heart of the chief of the people," Job xii. 24, and so shame the confidence of the proud; and thus, if we resist the devil, that roaring lion, though he fall not, yet he will flee. 2. How he encouraged the valour of those about him in the conquest of Debir, ver. 15, &c. It seems, though Joshua had once made himself master of Debir, ch. x. 39, yet the Canaanites had regained the possession in the absence of the army, so that the work was to be done a second time; and when Caleb had completed the reduction of Hebron, which was for himself, and his own family, to show his zeal for the public good, as much as for his own private interest, he pushes on his conquest to Debir, and will not lay down his arms till he sees that city also effectually reduced, which lay but ten miles southward from Hebron, though he had not any particular concern in it; but the reducing of it would be to the general advantage of his tribe. Let us learn hence, not to seek and mind our own things only, but to concern and engage ourselves for the welfare of the community we are members of; we are not "born for ourselves," nor must we "live to ourselves."

CANAANITISH SEAT OF LEARNING.—Notice is taken of the name of this city. It had been called Kirjath-sepher, the city of a book, and Kirjath-sanha, ver. 49, which some translate the city of learning; so the LXX. Πολις γραμματων, whence some conjecture that it had been an university among the Canaanites, like Athens in Greece, in which their youth were educated; or perhaps the books of their chronicles or records on the antiquities of the nation were laid up there; and, it may be, this was it that made Caleb so desirous to see Israel master of this city, that they might get acquainted with the ancient learning of the Canaanites. We have recorded here the proffer that Caleb made of his daughter, and a good portion with her, to any one that would undertake to reduce that city, and to command the forces that should be employed in that service, ver. 15. Thus Saul promised a daughter to him that would kill Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 25, neither of them intending to force their daughter to marry such as they could not love, but both of them presuming upon their daughter's obedience and submission to their father's will, though it might perhaps be contrary to their own humour or inclination. Caleb's family was not only honourable and wealthy, but religious; he that himself "followed the Lord fully," no doubt taught his children to do so, and therefore it could not but be a desirable match to any young gentleman. Caleb, in making the proposal, aims, (1.) To do service to his country by the reducing of that important place: And, (2.) To marry a daughter well, to a man of learning, that would have a particular affection for the city of books, and a man of war, that would be likely to serve his country, and do worthily in his generation. Could he but marry his child to a man of such a character, he would think her well bestowed, whether the share in the lot of his tribe were more or less. The place was bravely taken by Othniel, a nephew of Caleb's, whom, probably, Caleb had thoughts of when he made the proffer, ver. 17. This Othniel who thus signalised himself when he was young, long after, in his advanced years, was led by the Spirit to be both a deliverer and a judge in Israel; the first single person that presided in their affairs after Joshua's death.

CALEB'S DAUGHTER.—1. She took the opportunity of asking a marriage gift, when her father brought her home to the house of her husband, when the satisfaction of having disposed of his daughter so well, would make him think nothing too much to do for her. 2. She lighted off her ass, in token of respect and reverence to her father, whom she would honour still, as much as before her marriage. She cried or sighed from off her ass, so the LXX. and the vulgar Latin read it, she expressed some grief and concern, that she might give her father occasion to ask her what she wanted. 3. She calls it a blessing, because it would add much to the comfort of her settlement; and she was sure, that since she married, not only with her father's consent, but in obedience to his command, he would not deny her his blessing. 4. She asks only for the water, without which the ground she had would be of little use, either for tillage or pasture, but she means the field in which the springs of water were; the modesty and reasonableness of her request gave it a great advantage. Earth without water would be like a tree without sap, or the body of an animal without blood; therefore when God "gathered the waters into one place," he wisely and graciously left some in every place, that the earth might be enriched for the service of man. See Ps. civ. 10, &c. Well, Achsah gained her point, her father gave her what she asked, and perhaps more, for "he gave her the upper springs and the nether springs." Two fields, so called from the springs that were in them; as we commonly distinguish between the higher field and the lower field. Those who understand it but of one field, watered both with the rain of heaven and the springs that issued out of the bowels of the earth, give countenance to the allusion we commonly make to this, when we pray for spiritual and heavenly blessings which relate to our souls, as blessings of the upper springs, and those which relate to the body and the life that now is, as blessings of the nether springs.

JUDAH'S LOT.—Now here, 1. We do not find Bethlehem, which was afterward the city of David, and was ennobled by the birth of our Lord Jesus in it. But that city, which at the best was but "little among the thousands of Judah, Mic. v. 2, except that it was thus dignified, was now so little as not to be accounted one of the cities, but perhaps was one of the villages not named. Christ came to give honour to the places he was related to, not to receive honour from them. 2. Jerusalem is said to continue in the hands of the Jebusites, ver. 63, "for the children of Judah could not drive them out," through their sluggishness, stupidity, and unbelief; had they attempted it with vigour and resolution, we have reason to think God would not have been wanting to them to give them success; but they could not do it, because they would not. Jerusalem was afterward to be the holy city, the royal city, the city of the great King, the brightest ornament of all the land of Israel, God had designed it should be so. It may therefore be justly looked upon as a punishment of their neglect to conquer other cities which God had given them, that they were so long kept out of this.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—As God delights to honour and bless those who honour and obey him, and to answer the expectations of such as confide in him; so, wise and good parents will humbly endeavour to copy his example, in their conduct towards dutiful and obedient children. It is a very valuable privilege to be closely united with families distinguished for faith and piety; and to contract marriage with those, who have been "trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—When the character of parents, the education of their children, and the children's consequent prudent and pious conduct, combine; there is the fairest prospect that they will be settled in life, to the mutual comfort and advantage of all the parties concerned. Nature teaches us to desire temporal benefits for our children; but grace will teach us to be still more desirous and earnest, in using means that they may be partakers of spiritual blessings. When persons in the married state consult each other's comfort and advantage, and study to order all their concerns with mutual confidence and agreement, domestic felicity will be their recompense.—But, if affection to a creature animates men to such strenuous efforts and perilous adventures, what will the love of God our Saviour do, if it bear rule in our hearts? The desire of enjoying his favour, of expressing our gratitude to him, and of promoting his glory, will prove a principle of self-denying obedience and patient suffering for his sake, even "stronger than death" itself. (Cant. viii. 6, 7; Phil. i. 20—23.) And if earthly parents, "being evil, know how to give good gifts to their children; how much more will our heavenly father give good things to those who ask him?"—Husbands and wives commonly concur in seeking accessions to their temporal riches, and under certain limitations it may in some cases be allowable; but, it is much better when they concur heartily in seeking "those things which are above," and praying for them, in behalf of each other, of their children, and all around them. Indeed, all the blessings of both "the upper and the nether springs" belong to the children of God: and, as related to Christ, they have the first or the largest portion for his sake, freely given them by the Father, as the lot of their inheritance. But, they must exert themselves vigorously to subdue those enemies within and without, which keep them out of the possession of the promised blessings: and he is ever ready to assist all who call upon him to succour them in this warfare. May the Lord then excite our diligence and increase our faith, that we may "be strong in him, and in the power of his might," and then, instead of saying, "We cannot drive them out," we shall exclaim, "I can do all things, through Christ who strengtheneth me."—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. Joseph's Lot.—Though Joseph was one of the younger sons of Jacob, yet he was his eldest by his most just and best beloved wife, Rachel; was himself "his best beloved son," and had been the greatest ornament and support of his family, kept it from perishing in a time of famine, and had been the "shepherd and stone of Israel," and therefore his posterity were very much favoured by the lot. Their portion lay in the very heart of the land of Canaan. It extended from Jordan in the east, ver. 1, to the sea, the Mediterranean sea, in the west, so that it took up the whole breadth of Canaan from side to side; and, no question, the fruitfulness of the soil answered the blessings both of Jacob and Moses, Gen. xlix. 25, 26, and Deut. xxxiii. 13, &c. The portions allotted to Ephraim and Manasseh are not so particularly described as those of the other tribes; we have only the limits and boundaries of them, not the particular cities in them, as before we had the cities of Judah, and afterward those of the other tribes. For which no reason can be assigned, unless we may suppose that Joshua, being himself of the children of Joseph, they referred it to him alone to distribute among them the several cities that lay within their lot, and therefore did not bring in the names of their cities to the great council of their princes which sat upon this affair.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—Our situation and provision in this present life, as well as our future inheritance, are appointed by the only wise and righteous God; and we should learn to acknowledge his goodness with thankfulness, and be contented with our portion, whether more or less abundant; because he knoweth what is best for us, and we have far more than we deserve.—The distinctions of property accord to the appointment of God, and must, therefore, be conscientiously maintained; nay, so far from fraudulently or violently attempting to entrench on them, we must not covet any thing that is another's, nor envy his prosperity, but rejoice in it.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII.—Daughters of Zelophehad.—The claim which the daughters of Zelophehad made, grounded upon the command God gave to Moses concerning them, is recorded, ver. 4. They had themselves, when they were young, pleaded their own cause before Moses, and obtained the grant of an inheritance with their brethren, and now they would not lose the benefit of that grant for want of speaking to Joshua, but seasonably put in their demand themselves, as it should seem, and not their husbands for them.

the children of Manasseh by their families; for [a]the children of *Abiezer, and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Asriel, and for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida: these were the male children of Manasseh the son of Joseph by their families.

3 ¶ But [f]Zelophehad, the son of Hepher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, had no sons, but daughters: and these are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

4 And they came near before [g]Eleazar the priest, and before Joshua the son of Nun, and before the princes, saying, [h]The LORD commanded Moses to give us an inheritance among our brethren. Therefore according to the [†]commandment of the LORD he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father.

5 And there fell [i]ten portions to Manasseh,[1] [k]beside the land of Gilead and Bashan, which were on the other side Jordan;

6 Because the daughters[2] of Manasseh had an inheritance among his sons: and the rest of Manasseh's sons had the land of Gilead.

7 ¶ And the coast of Manasseh was from Asher to [l]Michmethah, that lieth before [m]Shechem; and the border went along on the right hand unto the inhabitants of Entappuah.

8 Now Manasseh had the land of [n]Tappuah: but Tappuah on the border of Manasseh belonged to the children of Ephraim;

9 And the coast descended unto the [‡]river Kanah, southward of the river: [o]these cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manasseh: the coast of Manasseh also was on the north side of the river, and [p]the outgoings of it were at the sea:

10 Southward it was Ephraim's, and northward it was Manasseh's, and the sea is his border; and they met together in Asher on the north, and in Issachar on the east.

11 And [q]Manasseh had in Issachar and in Asher [r]Beth-shean and her towns, and [s]Ibleam and her towns, and the inhabitants of [t]Dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of [u]En-dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of [x]Taanach and her towns, and the inhabitants of [y]Megiddo and her towns, even three countries.

12 ¶ Yet the children of Manasseh [z]could not drive out the inhabitants of those cities;[3] but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

13 Yet it came to pass, when the children of Israel were [a]waxen strong, that they [b]put the Canaanites to tribute; but did not utterly drive them out.[4]

14 ¶ And the children of Joseph spake unto Joshua, saying, Why hast thou given me but [c]one lot[5] and one portion to inherit, seeing I am [d]a great people, [e]forasmuch as the LORD hath blessed me hitherto?

15 And Joshua answered them, If thou be a great people, then get thee up to the wood country, and cut down for thyself there in the land of [f]the Perizzites and of [§]the giants, if mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee.

16 And the children of Joseph said, The hill is not enough for us: and all the Canaanites that dwell in the land of the valley have [g]chariots of iron, both they who are of [h]Beth-shean and her towns, and they who are of the valley of [i]Jezreel.

17 And Joshua spake unto the house of Joseph, even to Ephraim and to Manasseh, saying, [k]Thou art a great people, and hast great power: thou shalt not have one lot only:

18 But [l]the mountain shall be thine; for it is a wood, and thou shalt cut it down: and the outgoings of it shall be thine: [m]for thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be strong.

3 And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, [c]How long are ye slack to go to possess the land, which the LORD God of your fathers hath given you?

4 Give out from among you [d]three men for each tribe; and I will send them, and they shall rise and go through the land, and [e]describe it according to the inheritance of them; and they shall come again to me.

We have here, the assignment of their portions according to their claim; Joshua knew very well what God had ordered in their case, and did not object, that they having not served in the wars of Canaan, there was no reason why they should share in the possessions of Canaan, but readily "gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father." And now they reaped the benefit of their own pious zeal and prudent forecast in this matter. Thus they who take care in the wilderness of this world, to make sure to themselves a place in the inheritance of the saints in light, will certainly have the comfort of it in the other world, while those that neglect it now, will lose it for ever.

DISSATISFACTION OF JOSEPH'S POSTERITY.—Two things they suggest, to enforce their petition for an augmentation of their lot. 1. That they were very numerous, through the blessing of God upon them, ver. 14; "I am a great people, for the Lord has blessed me;" and we have reason to hope that he that hath sent mouths, will send meat. "'I am a great people,' and in so small a lot shall not have 'room to thrive.'" Yet, observe, when they speak thankfully of their present increase, they do not speak confidently of the continuance of it; "the Lord has blessed me hitherto, however he may see fit to deal with me for the future." The uncertainty of what may be, must not make us unthankful for what has been, and is done in kindness to us. 2. That a good part of that country which was now fallen to their lot, was in the hands of the Canaanites, and that they were formidable enemies, who brought into the field of battle "chariots of iron," ver. 16, that is, chariots with long scythes fastened to the sides of them, or the axletree, which made great destruction of all that came in their way, mowing them down like corn. They urge, that though they had a good portion assigned them, yet it was in bad hands, and they could not come to the possession of it, wishing to have their lot in those countries that were more thoroughly reduced than this was. 3. Joshua endeavours to reconcile them to their lot, he owns they were a "great people," and being two tribes, ought to have more than "one lot only," ver. 17, but tells them, that what was fallen to their share, would be a sufficient lot for them both, if they would but work and fight. They desired a lot in which they might indulge themselves in ease and luxury; "No," says Joshua, "you must not count upon that; 'in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,' is a sentence in force, even in Canaan itself." He retorts their own argument, that they were a "great people." "If so, you are the better able to help yourselves, and have the less reason to expect help from others. If thou hast many months to be filled, thou hast twice as many hands to be employed; earn, and then eat." (1.) He bids them "work for more," ver. 15. "'Get thee up to the wood country,' which is within thy own border, and let all hands be set on work to cut down the trees, rid the rough lands, and make them, with art and industry, good arable ground." Note, Many wish for larger possessions, who do not cultivate and make the best of what they have, think they should have more talents given them, who do not trade with those with which they are intrusted. Most people's poverty is the effect of their idleness; would they dig, they need not beg. (2.) He bids them "fight for more," ver. 17, 18, when they pleaded that they could not come at the wood-lands he spoke of, because in the valley between them and it, there were Canaanites whom they durst not enter the lists with. "Never fear them," said Joshua, "thou hast God on thy side, and 'thou shalt drive out the Canaanites,' if thou wilt set about it in good earnest, 'though they have iron chariots.'" We straiten ourselves by apprehending the difficulties in the way of our enlargement to be greater than really they are. What can be insuperable to faith and holy resolution.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. SHILOH.—Ver. 1. The tribes of Judah, Ephraim, and Manasseh were settled in their possessions; and perhaps many others were dispersed in some parts of the land, to cultivate it, where they could do it safely: it was therefore proper, that the tabernacle and the ark should be removed to a more central situation than at Gilgal, where it had hitherto remained; and Shiloh was selected for that purpose, doubtless by direction from the Lord, who might be consulted on the occasion by Urim and Thummim.—This city was in the centre of Canaan, and as convenient as possible for all the tribes: and it was proper that the ark and tabernacle, the visible symbols of JEHOVAH'S presence, and the glory of the land, which stamped a relative holiness upon it, should be in the midst of it. Shiloh was in the lot of Ephraim, the tribe to which Joshua belonged; and it was expedient, that the sanctuary should be near the residence of the chief governor.—The name of the city is the same with that by which Jacob predicted the Messiah; and some expositors suppose, that it was called Shiloh on this occasion, when selected for the resting place of the ark, and the observance of those institutions which typified our great peace-maker, and our access to God through his atonement and intercession.—That part of the country being subdued, the Israelites could assemble without interruption; and all personal cares and employments seem to have been laid aside; whilst, with one consent, they attended to this solemn and joyful religious duty. No doubt, those who still continued encamped, removed and pitched around the tabernacle as they had before done, both in the wilderness and in Canaan. In this place the sanctuary of God remained, till the ark was taken by the Philistines in the time of Eli, 1 Sam. iv.; but soon after it seems to have been removed to Nob; though the ark was placed at Kirjath-jearim, probably till David removed it to mount Zion. So that the tabernacle was stationed at Shiloh, between three and four hundred years.

inheritance: [k]and Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan on the east, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave them.

8 ¶ And the men arose, and went away: and Joshua charged them that went to describe the land, saying, Go and walk through the land, and describe it, and come again to me, [l]that I may here cast lots for you before the LORD in Shiloh.

9 And the men went, and passed through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book,[2] and came again to Joshua to the host at Shiloh.

10 ¶ And Joshua [m]cast lots for them in Shiloh [n]before the LORD: and there Joshua divided the land unto the children of Israel according to their divisions.

11 ¶ And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up according to their families: and the coast of their lot came forth [o]between the children of Judah and the children of Joseph.

12 And their border on the north side was from Jordan: and the border went up to the side of [p]Jericho on the north side, and went up through the mountains westward; and the goings out thereof were at [q]the wilderness[3] of Beth-aven.

13 And the border went over from thence toward Luz, to the side of [r]Luz, which is Beth-el, southward: and the border descended to Ataroth-adar, near the hill that lieth on the south side of the nether [s]Beth-horon.

15 And the south quarter was from the end of Kirjath-jearim, and the border went out on the west, and went out to the well of waters of [u]Nephtoah:

16 And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before [x]the valley of the son of Hinnom, and which is in [y]the valley of the giants on the north, and descended to the valley of Hinnom, to the side of [z]Jebusi on the south, and descended to [a]En-rogel,

17 And was drawn from the north, and went forth to En-shemesh, and went forth toward Geliloth, which is over against the going up of Adummim, and descended to [b]the stone of Bohan the son of Reuben,

18 And passed along toward the side over against *Arabah northward, and went down unto Arabah:

20 And Jordan was the border of it on the east side. [d]This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coasts thereof round about, according to their families.

21 ¶ Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin according to their families were [e]Jericho,[6] and [f]Beth-hoglah, and the valley of Keziz,

Thus the plain meaning of the expression, "compassed the corner of the west," seems to be, that the western border there made an angle or corner, as was really the case.—WELLS.

SEVEN TRIBES WITHOUT TERRITORY.—Here, 1. Joshua reproves those tribes which were yet unsettled, that they did not bestir themselves to gain a settlement in the land which God had given them. Seven tribes were yet unprovided for; though sure of an inheritance, yet uncertain where it should be, and, it seems, in no great care about it, ver. 2, and with them Joshua reasons, ver. 3, "How long are ye slack?" (1.) They were too well pleased with their present condition, liked well enough to live in a body together, the more the merrier, and, like the Babel-builders, had no mind to be scattered abroad, and break good company. The spoil of the cities they had taken, served them to live plentifully upon for the present, and they banished the thoughts of time to come. Perhaps the tribes of Judah and Joseph, who had already received their inheritance in the countries next adjoining, were generous in entertaining their brethren, who were yet unprovided for, so that they went from one good house to another among their friends, with which, instead of grudging that they were postponed, they were so well pleased, that they cared not of going to houses of their own. (2.) They were slothful and dilatory; it may be, they wished the thing done, but had not spirit to stir in it, or move toward the doing of it, though it was so much for their own advantage; like the sluggard that "hides his hand in his bosom, and it grieves him to bring it to his mouth again." The countries that remained to be divided lay at a distance, and some parts of them in the hands of the Canaanites. If they go to take possession of them, the cities must be rebuilt or repaired, they must drive their flocks and herds a great way, and carry their wives and children to strange places, and this will not be done without care and pains, and breaking through some hardships; thus, "He that observes the wind, shall not sow; and he that regards the clouds shall not reap," Eccl. xi. 4. Note, Many are diverted from real duties, and debarred from real comforts, by seeming difficulties. God by his grace has given us a title to a good land, the heavenly Canaan, but we are "slack to take possession," we enter not into that rest, as we might, by faith, and hope, and holy joy; we live not in heaven, as we might, by setting our affections on things above, and having our conversation there. How long shall it be thus with us?—Henry.

COMMISSIONERS TO SURVEY THE UNALLOTTED TERRITORY.—Ver. 3—10. The people, enriched with plunder and living in plenty, were more intent on present ease and indulgence, than on gaining possession of their special inheritances; which could not be done without new dangers and fatigues. In the meantime the Canaanites were recovering strength and courage, a great part of the land remained uncultivated, and the Israelites were impoverishing themselves and contracting bad habits.—After a year or more had been spent in this manner, whilst they were but little acquainted with that part of the land which was not yet divided, Joshua reproved their slackness, and directed them how to proceed. Some general survey indeed must have been made, previous to the allotment of portions to the aforementioned tribes; but it had not been sufficiently exact and complete. Three persons therefore were chosen out of every tribe concerned, that an impartial and amicable settlement might be made; and perhaps they went in three companies for expedition. These surveyors, according to the instructions given by Joshua, made as exact admeasurement and description of the country as they could, both as to its extent and fertility; and divided the remains of the land into seven parts, that the seven remaining tribes might have their inheritances assigned them by lot: the situation being thus determined, and the quantity proportioned to their numbers. Whilst employed in this perilous work, they were, doubtless, peculiarly emboldened and protected by the Lord; and the Canaanites were intimidated and restrained from assaulting them: so that they all returned in safety to Shiloh; and Joshua with religious solemnity cast lots for them before the Lord.—On this survey it appeared, that Judah's portion had been made disproportionately large: and therefore Simeon had his taken out from it; and Dan, also, at least in part. "In a book," ver. 9. The surveyors seem to have formed some kind of map of the country, as well as a description of it in writing. The Egyptians, from the situation of their fields, as annually overflowed by the Nile, acquired great skill in surveying and measuring land: and some of the Israelites had, no doubt, learned this from them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The ordinances of religion form our most important business, and must be attended to in the first place, even in preference to our worldly affairs, if we would be happy in our own souls, and prosper in our undertakings: and when properly administered and attended on, by all ranks and orders of men, they form the glory and bulwark of any nation; for "them that honour God he will honour, and they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed." We indeed have the true Tabernacle, the true ark of the covenant, and the mercy-seat, not only in the midst of us, but everywhere present; and when we meet in the courts of the Lord, he is as really, though not sensibly, present, as between the cherubim in the tabernacle of Israel. But what return do we render for such benefits? What improvement do we make of them? Alas! the ordinances of God are generally neglected; his sabbaths are violated; his truths are opposed, despised, or abused; and his commandments and authority are trampled upon!—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. PECULIARITY OF SIMEON'S LOT.—Simeon's lot was drawn after Judah's, Joseph's, and Benjamin's, because Jacob had put that tribe under disgrace, yet it is put Judah was [o]too much for them: therefore the children of Simeon had their inheritance within the inheritance of them.

10 ¶ And the [p]third lot came up for the children of [q]Zebulun, according to their families: and the border of their inheritance was unto Sarid.

11 And their border went up toward the sea, and Maralah, and reached to Dabbasheth, and reached to the river that is before [r]Jokneam;

12 And turned from Sarid eastward toward the sunrising unto the border of [s]Chisloth-tabor, and then goeth out to [t]Daberath, and goeth up to Japhia,

13 And from thence passeth on along on the east to [u]Gittah-hepher to Ittah-kazin, and goeth out to *Remmon-methoar to Neah;

14 And the border compasseth it on the north side to Hannathon: and the outgoings thereof are in the valley of Jiphthah-el:

15 And [z]Kattath, and Nahallal, and [y]Shimron, and Idalah, and Beth-lehem:[2] twelve cities with their villages.

16 This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun according to their families, these cities with their villages.

17 ¶ And the fourth lot came out to Issachar, for the children of Issachar according to their families.

18 And their border was toward [a]Jezreel, and Chesulloth, and [b]Shunem,

19 And Haphraim, and Shihon, and Anaharath,

20 And Rabbith, and Kishion, and Abez,

21 And Rameth, and [c]En-gannim, and En-haddah, and Beth-pazzez;

22 And the coast reacheth to [d]Tabor, and Shahazimah, and [e]Beth-shemesh, and the outgoings of their border were at Jordan: sixteen cities with their villages.

23 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Issachar according to their families, the cities and their villages.

24 ¶ And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families.

25 And their border was [f]Helkath, and Hali, and Beten, and [g]Achshaph,

26 And Alammelech, and Amad, and [h]Misheal; and reacheth to [i]Carmel[3] westward, and to Shihor-libnath;

27 And turneth toward the sunrising to Beth-dagon, and reacheth to Zebulun, and to the [l]valley of Jiphthah-el toward the north side of Beth-emek, and Neiel, and goeth out to [k]Cabul[4] on the left hand,

28 And Hebron, and [l]Rehob, and Hammon, and [m]Kanah, even unto [n]great Zidon;

29 And then the coast turneth to Ramah, and to the strong city *Tyre;[5] and the coast turneth to Hosah; and the outgoings thereof are at the sea from the coast to [o]Achzib:

30 Ummah also, and [p]Aphek, and [q]Rehob: twenty and two cities with their villages.

31 This is [r]the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Asher according to their families, these cities with their villages.

32 ¶ The sixth lot came out to the children of Naphtali, even for the children of Naphtali according to their families.

33 And their coast was from Heleph, from Allon to [s]Zaanannim, and Adami, Nekeb, and Jabneel, unto Lakum; and the outgoings thereof were at Jordan:

34 And then the coast [t]turneth westward to Aznoth-tabor, and goeth out from thence to Hukkok, and reacheth to Zebulun on the south side, and reacheth to Asher on the west side, and to Judah[6] upon Jordan [u]toward the sunrising.

35 And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer, and [z]Hammath, Rakkath, and [y]Chinnereth,

36 And Adamah, and Ramah, and [a]Hazor,

37 And [b]Kedesh, and Edrei, and Enhazor,

38 And Iron, and Migdal-el, Horem, and Beth-anath, and [c]Beth-shemesh; nineteen cities with their villages.

39 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali according to their families, the cities and their villages.

40 ¶ And the seventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families.

41 And the coast of their inheritance was [d]Zorah, and Eshtaol, and Ir-shemesh,

42 And Shaalabbin, and Ajalon, and Jethlah,

43 And Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron,

44 And Eltekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath,

45 And Jehud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon,

46 And Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, with the border before Japho.[7]

47 And [k]the coast of the children of Dan went out too little for them: therefore the children of Dan went up to fight against Leshem, and took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and possessed it, and dwelt therein, and called [l]Leshem, Dan, after the name of Dan their father.

48 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families, these cities with their villages.

By comparing the cities just mentioned with those at Josh. xv. 33, it appears that many of those which were at first assigned to Judah, were afterwards allotted to Dan; hence it is reasonably supposed, that the inheritance of the tribe of Dan was within the inheritance of the tribe of Judah; this tribe is therefore, with universal agreement, placed by geographers in the western part of the portion at first allotted to the children of Judah.—WELLS.

before the two younger sons of Leah, and the three sons of the handmaids. Not one person of note, either judge or prophet, was of the tribe, that we know of. 1. The situation of their lot was within that of Judah, ver. 1, and was taken from it, ver. 9. It seems, they that first surveyed the land, thought it larger than it was, and that it would have held out, to give every tribe in proportion as large a share as they had carved out of Judah; but, upon a more strict inquiry, it was found that it would not reach, ver. 9, "the part of the children of Judah was too much for them," more than they needed, and more, as it proved, than fell to their share. Yet God did not by the lot lessen it, but left it to their prudence and care afterward to discover and rectify the mistake, which when they did, (1.) The men of Judah did not oppose the taking away of the cities again, which by the first distribution fell within their border, when they were convinced that they had more than their proportion. In all such cases, errors must be excepted, and a review admitted if there be occasion. Though, in strictness, what fell to their lot, was their right against all the world, yet they would not insist upon it, when it appeared that another tribe would want what they had to spare. Note, We must look on the things of others, and not on our own only. The abundance of some must supply the wants of others, that there may be something of an equality, for which there may be equity where there is not law. (2.) That which was thus taken off from Judah to be put into a new lot, Providence directed to the tribe of Simeon, that Jacob's prophecy concerning this tribe might be fulfilled, "I will divide them in Jacob." The cities of Simeon were scattered in Judah, with which tribe they were surrounded, except on that side toward the sea. This brought them into a confederacy with the tribe of Judah, Judg. i. 3, and afterwards was a happy occasion of the adherence of many of this tribe to the house of David, at the time of the revolt of the ten tribes of Jeroboam, 2 Chron. xv. 9, out of Simeon they fell to Asa in abundance. It is good being in a good neighbourhood. 2. The cities within their lot are here named. Beer-sheba, or Sheba, for they seem to be the same place, is put first; Ziklag is one of them, which we read of in David's story. What course they took to enlarge their borders and make room for themselves, we find, 1 Chron. iv. 39, &c.

JOSHUA'S OWN INHERITANCE.—Before this account of the dividing of the land is solemnly closed up, in the last verse, which intimates that the thing was done to the satisfaction of all, here is an account of the particular inheritance assigned to Joshua. 1. He was last served, though the eldest and greatest man of all Israel, and who, having commanded in the conquest of Canaan, might have demanded the first settlement in it for himself and his family. But he would make it to appear that in all he did, he sought the good of his country, and not any private interest of his own. He was content to be unfixed till he saw them all placed; and herein is a great example to all in public places, to prefer the common welfare before their particular satisfaction. Let the public first be served. 2. He had his lot "according unto the word of the Lord;" it is probable, when God by Moses told Caleb what inheritance he should have, Josh. xiv. 9, he gave the like promise to Joshua, which he had an eye to in making his election, which made his portion doubly pleasant, that he had it, not as the rest, by common providence, but by special promise. 3. He chose it in mount Ephraim, which belonged to his own tribe, with which he thereby put himself in common, when he might by prerogative have chosen his inheritance in some other tribe, as suppose that of Judah, and thereby have distinguished himself from them. Let no man's preferment or honour make him ashamed of his family or country, or estrange him from it. The tabernacle was set up in the lot of Ephraim, and Joshua would forecast not to be far from that. 4. The children of Israel are said to give it him, ver. 49, which bespeaks his humility, that he would not take it to himself without the people's consent and approbation, as if he would thereby own himself, though major singulas—greater than any one, yet minor universis—less than the whole assemblage, and would hold even the estate of his family, under God, by the grant of the people. 5. It was a city that must be built before it was fit to be dwelt in: while others dwelt in houses which they builded not, Joshua must build for himself, that he might be a pattern of industry and contentment with mean things, such buildings as he could hastily run up, without curiosity or magnificence. Our Lord Jesus thus came and dwelt among us, not in pomp but poverty, providing rest for us, yet himself not having where to lay his head. Even Christ pleased not himself.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—If the true believer have entered into engagements, which are likely to prove injurious to him, he will not retract or disappoint those who confide in him: but if he have obtained an undue advantage in any contract, he will recede from it without murmuring, in compliance with the requisitions of equity and kindness. For "love seeketh not her own," and "doth not behave unseemly."—They are most favoured in providence, who are placed nearest to the sanctuary, and have most advantages, and the fewest hinderances, to the salvation of their souls; though they do not possess worldly influence or distinctions: and, as far as we have the choice referred to us, we should always decide by this rule. But a sovereign God dispenses his favours as he pleases; and one man has his habitation assigned him in "the valley of vision," and another his "in the very region of the shadow of death:" "according to the good pleasure of his will." Disinterestedness and an unassuming deportment shed a peculiar lustre upon eminent characters: and they who labour most to do good to

49 ¶ When they had made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coasts, the children of Israel [m]gave an inheritance to Joshua[8] the son of Nun among them:

50 According to the word of the LORD they gave him the city which he asked,[9] even [n]Timnath-serah in mount Ephraim: and he built the city, and dwelt therein.

51 [o]These are the inheritances, which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, divided for an inheritance by lot, [p]in Shiloh before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. So they made an end of dividing the country.

God commandeth, 1, and the Israelites appoint six cities of refuge, 7.

THE [a]LORD also spake unto Joshua, saying,

2 Speak to the children of Israel, saying, [b]Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses:

3 That the slayer that killeth any person unawares and unwittingly may flee thither: and they shall be [c]your refuge from the avenger of blood.

4 And when he that doth flee unto one of those cities shall stand [d]at the entering of the gate of the city, and shall declare his cause[1] in the ears of the elders of that city, they shall [e]take him into the city unto them, and give him a place, that he may dwell among them.

5 And if the avenger of blood pursue after him, then they shall not deliver the slayer up into his hand; because he smote his neighbour unwittingly, and hated him not beforetime.

6 And he shall dwell in that city, [f]until he stand before the congregation for judgment, and until the death of the high priest that shall be in those days: then shall the slayer return, and come unto his own city, and unto his own house, unto the city from whence he fled.

7 ¶ And they *appointed [g]Kedesh in Galilee in mount Naphtali, and [h]Shechem in mount Ephraim, and [i]Kirjath-arba, which is Hebron, in the [k]mountain of Judah.

8 And on the other side Jordan, by Jericho eastward, they assigned[2] Bezer [l]in the wilderness upon the plain out of the tribe of Reuben, and [m]Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and [n]Golan in Bashan out of the tribe of Manasseh.

9 These were [o]the cities[3] appointed for all the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them, that whosoever killeth any person at unawares might flee thither, and not die by the hand of the avenger of blood, [p]until he stood before the congregation.

Eight and forty cities given by lot out of the other tribes unto the Levites, 1. God gave the land, and rest, to the Israelites, 43.

THEN came near [a]the heads of the fathers[1] of the Levites unto [b]Eleazar the priest, and unto Joshua the son of Nun, and unto the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel;

2 And they spake unto them at [c]Shiloh in the land of Canaan, saying, [d]The LORD commanded by the hand of Moses, to give us cities to dwell in, with the suburbs thereof for our cattle.

3 And the children of Israel gave [e]unto the Levites out of their inheritance, at the commandment of the LORD, these cities and their suburbs.

4 And the lot came out for the families of the Kohathites: and [f]the children of Aaron the priest, which were of the Levites, had by lot out of the tribe of Judah,[2] and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, thirteen cities.

5 And [g]the rest of the children of Kohath had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half tribe of Manasseh, ten cities.

6 And the children of [h]Gershon had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the half tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

7 The children of [i]Merari by their families had out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

8 And the children of Israel gave [j]by lot unto the Levites these cities with their suburbs, [k]as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

9 ¶ And they gave out of the tribe of the children of Judah,[3] and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, [l]these cities which are here *mentioned by name, others, will be indifferent about their own worldly interests, and willing to forego all things, rather than preclude themselves from the sweet pleasure of communicating felicity. An inheritance in the Canaan above, they must and do covet; but it will be soon enough to enter upon that, when they have done all the service to their brethren of which they are capable; nor can any thing more effectually assure them of their title to it, than laying themselves out properly to bring others to desire, to seek, and to obtain possession of it.—But Jesus hath far outdone all others, in this and in every other respect: "Though he were rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich." He would not enter upon his inheritance, till, by his obedience unto death, he had secured the eternal inheritance for all his people! nor will he account his own glory completed, until every ransomed sinner is put in possession of his heavenly rest.—Scott.

CHAP. XX. APPOINTMENT OF THE CITIES OF REFUGE.—We have here the nomination of the cities of refuge in the land of Canaan, which was made by the advice and authority of Joshua and the princes, ver. 7, and upon occasion of the mention of this, is repeated the nomination of the other three in the lot of the other two tribes and a-half, which was made by Moses, Deut. iv. 43, but (as Bishop Patrick thinks) they had not the privilege till now. 1. They are said to sanctify these cities, that is the original word for appointed, ver. 7. Not that any ceremony was used to signify the consecration of them, only they did by a public act of court solemnly declare them cities of refuge: and, as such, sacred to the honour of God, as the Protector of exposed innocency. If they were sanctuaries, it was proper to say, they were sanctified. Christ, our Refuge, was sanctified by his Father; nay, for our sakes he sanctified himself, John xvii. 19. 2. These cities, (as those also on the other side Jordan,) stood in the three several parts of the country, so conveniently that a man might, they say, in half-a-day reach some one of them from any corner of the country. Kedesh was in Naphtali, the most northern tribe; Hebron in Judah, the most southern; and Shechem in Ephraim, which lay in the middle, about equally distant from the other two. God is a refuge at hand. 3. They were all Levites' cities, which put an honour upon God's tribe, making them judges in those cases wherein divine providence was so nearly concerned, and protectors to oppressed innocency; it was also a kindness to the poor refugee, that when he might [illegible] the house of the Lord, nor [illegible] his courts, yet he had the servants of [illegible] him, to instruct him, and help to make up the want [illegible] he must [illegible] to a Levite-city, [illegible] a city on a hill cannot be hid; and this would both direct and encourage the poor distressed man that was making that way; and though therefore his way at last was up hill, yet this would comfort him, that he would be in his place of safety quickly; and if he could but get into the suburbs of the city, he was well enough off. 5. Some observe a significancy in the names of these cities with application to Christ our Refuge. I delight not in quibbling upon names, yet am willing to take notice of these. Kedesh signifies holy, and our refuge is the holy Jesus. Shechem, a shoulder, and the government is upon his shoulder. Hebron, fellowship, and believers are called into the fellowship of Christ Jesus our Lord. Bezer, a fortification, for he is a strong Hold to all them that trust in him. Ramoth, high, or exalted, for him hath God exalted with his own right hand. Golan, joy, or exultation, for in him all the saints are justified, and shall glory. Lastly, Beside all these the horns of the altar, wherever it was, were a refuge to those who took hold on them, if the crime were such as that sanctuary allowed. This is implied in that law, Exod. xxi. 14, that a wilful murderer shall be taken from God's altar to be put to death. And we find the altar used for this purpose, 1 Kings i. 50, ii. 28. Christ is our Altar, who not only sanctifies the gifts, but protects the giver. —Henry.

CHAP. XXI. LEVITICAL CITIES.—1. Every tribe of Israel was adorned and enriched with its share of Levites' cities, in proportion to its compass, even those that lay most remote. They were all God's people, and therefore they all had Levites among them, (1.) To show kindness to, as God appointed them, Deut. xii. 19; xiv. 29. They were God's receivers, to whom the people might give their grateful acknowledgments of God's goodness, as the occasion and disposition were. (2.) To receive advice and instruction from; when they could not go up to the tabernacle to consult those who attended there, they might go to a Levites' city, and be taught the good knowledge of the Lord. Thus God set up a candle in every room of his house, to give light to all his family; as those that attended the altar, "kept the charge of the Lord," to see that no divine appointment was neglected there; so they that were scattered in the country, had their charge too, which was to see that no idolatrous superstitious usages were introduced at a distance, and to watch for the souls of God's Israel. Thus did God graciously provide for the keeping up of religion among them, and that they might have the word nigh them; yet, blessed be God, we, under the Gospel, have it yet nigher, not only Levites in every country, but Levites in every parish, whose office it is still to teach the people knowledge, and to go before them in the things of God. 2. That here were [illegible] cities, [illegible] the best, appointed for the priests, the sons of Aaron, 12 But [c]the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, gave they to Caleb the son of Jephunneh for his possession.

13 Thus they gave to the children of Aaron the priest Hebron with her suburbs,[4] to be [p]a city of refuge for the slayer; and [q]Libnah with her suburbs,

14 And [r]Jattir with her suburbs, and [s]Eshtemoa with her suburbs,

15 And [t]Holon with her suburbs, and [u]Debir with her suburbs,

16 And [x]Ain with her suburbs, and [y]Juttah with her suburbs, and [z]Beth-shemesh with her suburbs; nine cities out of those two tribes.[5]

17 And out of the tribe of Benjamin, [a]Gibeon with her suburbs, [b]Geba with her suburbs, 18 [c]Anathoth with her suburbs, and [d]Almon with her suburbs, four cities.

19 All the cities of the children of Aaron, the priests, were thirteen cities with their suburbs.

20 ¶ And [e]the families of the children of Kohath, the Levites which remained of the children of Kohath, even they had the cities of their lot out of the tribe of Ephraim.

21 For they gave them [f]Shechem with her suburbs in mount Ephraim, to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and [g]Gezer with her suburbs, 22 And Kibzaim with her suburbs, and [h]Beth-horon with her suburbs; four cities.

23 And out of the tribe of Dan, [i]Eltekeh with her suburbs, Gibbethon with her suburbs,

25 And out of the half tribe of Manasseh, [l]Taanach with her suburbs, and Gath-rimmon with her suburbs; two cities.

26 All the cities were ten with their suburbs for the families of the children of Kohath that remained.

27 ¶ And unto the children of Gershon, of the families of the Levites, out of the other half tribe[6] of Manasseh they gave [m]Golan in Bashan with her suburbs, to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and Beeshterah with her suburbs; two cities.

28 And out of the tribe of Issachar, Kishon with her suburbs, [n]Dabareh with her suburbs, 29 [o]Jarmuth with her suburbs, En-gannim with her suburbs; four cities.

30 And out of the tribe of Asher, [p]Mishal with her suburbs, Abdon with her suburbs,

32 And out of the tribe of Naphtali, [q]Kedesh in Galilee with her suburbs, to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and [r]Hammoth-dor with her suburbs, and Kartan with her suburbs; three cities.

33 All the cities of the Gershonites according to their families were thirteen cities with their suburbs.

34 ¶ And unto the families of the children of Merari, the rest of the Levites,[7] out of the tribe of Zebulun, [s]Jokneam with her suburbs, and Kartah with her suburbs,

35 Dimnah with her suburbs, Nahalal with her suburbs; four cities.

36 And out of the tribe of Reuben, [t]Bezer with her suburbs, and [u]Jahazah with her suburbs,

38 And out of the tribe of Gad, [x]Ramoth in Gilead with her suburbs, to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and [y]Mahanaim with her suburbs, 39 [z]Heshbon with her suburbs, [a]Jazer with her suburbs; four cities in all.

40 So all the cities for the children of Merari by their families, which were remaining of the families of the Levites, were by their lot twelve cities.

41 All the cities of the Levites[8] [b]within the possession of the children of Israel were forty and eight cities with their suburbs.

42 These cities were every one with their suburbs round about them: thus were all these cities.

43 ¶ And the LORD [c]gave unto Israel all the land[9] which he sware to give unto their fathers; and they possessed it, and dwelt therein.

44 And [d]the LORD gave them rest round about, according to all that he sware unto their fathers: and there stood not a man of all their enemies before them; the LORD delivered all their enemies into their hand.

45 There [e]failed not ought of any good thing which the LORD had spoken unto the house of Israel; all came to pass.

ver. 19. Aaron left but two sons, Eleazar and Ithamar, yet his family was now so much increased, and it was foreseen that it would in process of time grow so numerous, as to replenish all these cities; though a considerable number must of necessity be resident wherever the ark and the altar were. We read in both Testaments of such numbers of priests, that we may suppose none of all the families of Israel that came out of Egypt, increased afterward so much as that of Aaron did; and the promise afterward to the house of Aaron is, "God shall increase you more and more, you and your children," Psal. cxv. 12, 14. He will raise up a seed to serve him. 3. That some of the Levites' cities were afterward famous upon other accounts. Hebron was the city in which David began his reign, and in Mahanaim, another Levites' city, ver. 38, he lay, and had his head-quarters when he fled from Absalom. The first Israelite that ever wore the title of king, namely, Abimelech, the son of Gideon, reigned in Shechem, another Levites' city, ver. 21. 4. That the number of them in all was more than of most of the tribes, except Judah, though the tribe of Levi was one of the least of the tribes, to show how liberal God is, and his people should be, to his ministers; yet the disproportion will not appear so great as at first it seems, if we consider that the Levites had cities only with the suburbs to dwell in, but the rest of the tribes, beside their cities, (and those perhaps were many more than are named in the account of their lot,) had many unwalled towns and villages which they inhabited, beside country houses. Upon the whole, it appears that effectual care was taken that the Levites should live both comfortably and usefully; and those, whether ministers or others, for whom Providence has done well, must look upon themselves as obliged thereby to do good, and, according as their capacity and opportunity are, to serve their generation.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The maintenance of the ministers of religion should be considered as required by the command of God, and not as a matter of mere choice or discretion. They "who labour in the word and doctrine," have as good a title to a comfortable support, as other men have to their estates; and on some occasions must be allowed, without censure, to assert their claim against such as would defraud them; but this should always be done with evident reluctancy, as a matter of necessity; and with a willingness to refer themselves to the arbitration of impartial persons. And, in ordinary cases, it more accords to the examples of the New Testament, when they choose to "suffer all things," rather than to take any steps which may impede the success of their labours. Yet this excellent spirit in faithful ministers, is so far from excusing those who defraud them, that it greatly aggravates their sin.—It is very desirable that all these temporal concerns, relating to this sacred function, should be amicably settled, and arranged in such a manner, as to subserve its grand object; to occasion to the clergy as few avocations, temptations, or discouragements as may be; and to afford them every advantage of access to the people; that they may exhort, instruct, and reprove them, without falling under their contempt, or dreading their displeasure.—As on this extraordinary occasion, the cities of the priests and Levites were assigned them immediately by God himself, through the casting of lots: so, in ordinary cases, every one should consider his station as determined by Divine Providence, and should cheerfully continue to perform the duties of it, though he seem to have more discouragements and inconveniences than the rest of his brethren; and not venture to remove, till satisfied, after serious consideration, prayer, and consultation of his pious friends and seniors, that the Lord calls him to another place.—Happy is the land where faithful ministers of Christ are to be met with in every district! The people will not be impoverished by maintaining them: nor will they in general much complain in this respect; so long as ministers diligently apply themselves to dispel ignorance and error, and to diffuse the light of divine truth; to stop the progress of immortality, and promote the practice of universal holiness; and, by their doctrine, influence, example, and prayers, to render all within their sphere more wise, holy, and happy.—Persons of eminence should take the lead in every good work, that their examples may excite others; always remembering that pre-eminence in real usefulness is the most valuable distinction.—In due season all the promises of God will be accomplished to his true people; and their believing hope, and patient waiting, and self-denying obedience, will terminate in joyful songs of triumph, and thankful celebrations of his faithfulness, love, and power: then will it be universally acknowledged that "there hath not failed aught of any good thing, which the LORD had spoken of;" nay, that he has exceeded their largest expectations, and made them more than conquerors, and brought them to their delightful rest and inheritance. May none of us at that season be found among his enemies, "who shall be destroyed for ever!"—Let no true believer despond because of delays, tribulations, and temptations; for God hath confirmed his promise and covenant "with an oath, that we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before us." Let us then beg of him to enable us to confide in him entirely, to obey him unreservedly, and to wait for him patiently; for we have need of patience, that "after we have done the will of God, we might receive the promise.—Scott.

charge of the commandment of the LORD your God.

4 And now the LORD your God hath [o]given rest unto your brethren, as he promised them: therefore now return ye, and [p]get you unto your tents, and unto the land of your possession, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave you on the other side Jordan.

5 But [q]take diligent heed to do the commandment and the law, which Moses the servant of the LORD charged you, [r]to love the LORD your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to [s]cleave unto him, and to [t]serve him with all your heart and with all your soul.

6 So Joshua [u]blessed them, and sent them away: and they went unto their tents.

7 ¶ Now [v]to the one half of the tribe of Manasseh Moses had given possession in Bashan: but unto the other half thereof gave Joshua among their brethren on this side Jordan westward. And when Joshua sent them away also unto their tents, then he blessed them;

8 And he spake unto them, saying, [w]Return with much riches unto your tents, and with very much cattle, with silver, and with gold, and with brass, and with iron, and with very much raiment: [x]divide the spoil of your enemies with your brethren.

9 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh returned, and departed from the children of Israel out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan, to go unto [y]the country of Gilead,[1] to the land of their possession, whereof they were possessed, according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

10 ¶ And when they came unto the borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh [z]built there an altar by Jordan, a great altar to see to.[2]

11 ¶ And the children of Israel [a]heard say, Behold, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, have built an altar over against the land of Canaan, in the borders of Jordan, [b]at the passage of the children of Israel.

12 And when the children of Israel heard of it, [c]the whole congregation of the children of Israel gathered themselves together at Shiloh, to go up to war against them.[3]

*chief house a prince throughout all the tribes of Israel; and each one was [f]an head of the house of their fathers among the thousands of Israel.

15 And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, unto the land of Gilead, and they spake with them, saying,

16 Thus saith [g]the whole congregation of the LORD, What [h]trespass is this that ye have committed against the God of Israel, [i]to turn away this day from following the LORD, in that ye have builded you an altar, that ye might [k]rebel this day against the LORD?

17 [l]Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us,[4] [m]from which we are not cleansed until this day, although there was a plague in the congregation of the LORD,

18 But that ye must turn away this day from [n]following the LORD? And it will be, seeing ye rebel to-day against the LORD, that to-morrow [o]he will be wroth with the whole congregation of Israel.

19 Notwithstanding, if the land of your possession be [p]unclean,[5] then pass ye over unto the land of the possession of the LORD, [q]wherein the LORD'S tabernacle dwelleth, and take possession among us: but rebel not against the LORD, nor rebel against us, in building you an altar beside the altar of the LORD our God.

20 Did not [r]Achan the son of Zerah commit a trespass in the accursed thing, and wrath fell on all the congregation of Israel? and that man perished not alone in his iniquity.

21 ¶ Then the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh [s]answered, and said unto the [t]heads of the thousands of Israel,

22 The [u]LORD God of gods, the LORD God of gods, [v]he knoweth, and [w]Israel he shall know; [x]if it be in rebellion, or if in transgression against the LORD (save us not this day,)

23 That we have built us an altar to turn from following the LORD, or if to offer thereon burnt-offering or meat-offering, or if to offer peace-offerings thereon, [y]let the LORD himself require it;

24 And if we have not rather done it [z]for fear of this thing, saying, [a]In time to come your children might speak unto our children, saying, What have ye to do with the LORD God of Israel?

25 For the LORD hath made Jordan a border between us and you, ye children of Reuben and children of Gad; [b]ye have no part in the LORD:[6] so shall your children [c]make our children cease from fearing the LORD.

swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; and, particularly, the forces of these separate tribes, who had received their inheritance on the other side Jordan from Moses, upon this condition, that their men of war should assist the other tribes in the conquest of Canaan, which they promised to do, Num. xxxii. 32, and renewed the promise to Joshua at the opening of the campaign, Josh. i. 16. And now that they had performed their bargain, Joshua publicly and solemnly in Shiloh gives them their discharge. Whether this was done, as it was placed, not till after the land was divided, as some think, or whether after the war was ended, and before the division was made, as others think, (because there was no need of their assistance in dividing the land, but only in conquering it, nor were there any of their tribes employed as commissioners in that affair, but only of the other ten, Num. xxxiv. 18, &c.) this is certain, it was not done till after Shiloh was made the head quarters, ver. 2, and the land was begun to be divided before they removed from Gilgal, chap. xiv. 6. It is probable that this army of Reubenites and Gadites, which had led the van in all the wars of Canaan, had sometimes, in the intervals of action, and when the rest of the army retired into winter quarters, some of them, at least, made a step over Jordan, for it was not far, to visit their families, and to look after their private affairs, and perhaps tarried at home, and sent others in their room more serviceable; but still these two tribes and a-half had their quota of troops ready, forty thousand in all, which, whenever there was occasion, rendered themselves at their respective posts, and now attended in a body to receive their discharge. Though their affection to their families, and concern for their affairs, could not but make them, after so long absence, very desirous to return, yet, like good soldiers, they would not move till they had orders from their general. So though our heavenly Father's house above be never so desirable, (it is Bishop Hall's allusion,) yet must we stay on earth till our warfare be accomplished, wait for a due discharge, and not anticipate the time of our removal. Joshua dismisses them to the "land of their possession," ver. 4. They that were first in the assignment of their lot, were last in the enjoyment of it; they got the start of their brethren in title, but their brethren were before them in full possession: so the last shall be first and the first last, that there may be something of equality.—Henry.

THE SUSPECTED ALTAR.—Ver. 10. This altar must have been situated to the east of Jordan, in the inheritance of the two tribes and a-half: as it could not otherwise have answered the end for which it was erected; or indeed have excited the suspicion of their brethren, that they meant to establish a schismatical worship in their own country, instead of attending at the tabernacle with the other tribes. Yet this verse, as we read it, conveys the idea, that it was erected to the west of Jordan: but the clause rendered "in the land of Canaan," may be translated "by the land of Canaan;" and the words, "over against the land of Canaan," in the next verse, show this to be the proper rendering.—On returning home, these victorious soldiers and faithful assistants of their brethren, did not attempt to erect any trophy, on which to record their own exploits: but they desired to form a monument, that should prove to future ages their relation to the other tribes, their interest in the sacrifices and worship of God at his sanctuary, and their right, with that of their posterity, to join in all the ordinances there administered. For these purposes they built a very large altar, which might be seen at a great distance, exactly in the shape of the altar of Shiloh.—They would have acted more prudently, if they had previously consulted the Lord, or explained their intention to Joshua, Eleazar, and the elders: but, as they approved themselves upright, we do not find their indiscretion censured.—Ver. 12—16. The command of God was express, that no sacrifices should be offered except at the door of the tabernacle; and building another altar seemed to imply an intention of offering sacrifices, which might prove a step towards apostacy and idolatry, crimes to be punished by death, without respect to affinity or to numbers.—Though the supposed criminals were brethren, and had been very faithful and serviceable to the other tribes: yet zeal for the honour of God and religion swallowed up all inferior regards, and they prepared to unite their arms against the offenders. But, they were too precipitate, and they seem to have convened at Shiloh in an angry spirit, as if eager to be engaged in so horrid a warfare. Even if sacrifices had been offered, it would have been over rigorous to have punished the action as idolatry: and in this extreme case, they were commanded to make diligent search, and to proceed on nothing short of absolute certainty. Deut. xiii. 14.—When, however, the elders were assembled at Shiloh, the wisdom and authority of Joshua, Eleazar, and others, seem to have tempered their zeal; and they resolved previously to attempt the recovery of the offenders by more lenient measures. They therefore determined to send an embassy; and Phinehas, whose zeal had before been so signalized, was placed at the head of it: and having obtained an audience, he and his associates delivered their embassy in very plain terms, which indeed appear rather severe; but, on that very account, they the more aptly denote how much the people were engaged in the cause of God and religion.

SUSPICION REMOVED.—Ver. 21—29. This answer of the Reubenites, and the other tribes concerned, is well worthy of admiration. They took in good part the suspicions, reproofs, and even harshness, of their brethren; and did not object to the authority of the elders at Shiloh, or even to the terms in which the ambassadors had delivered their

26 Therefore we said, Let us now prepare to build us an altar, not for burnt-offering, nor for sacrifice:

27 But that it may be [s]a witness between us and you, and our generations after us, [t]that we might do the service of the LORD before him with our burnt-offerings, and with our sacrifices, and with our peace-offerings; that your children may not say to our children in time to come, Ye have no part in the LORD.

28 Therefore said we, that it shall be, when they should so say to us or to our generations in time to come, that we may say again, [u]Behold the pattern[7] of the altar of the LORD, which our fathers made, not for burnt-offerings, nor for sacrifices; but it is a witness between us and you.

29 [v]God forbid that we should rebel against the LORD, and turn this day from following the LORD, [w]to build an altar for burnt-offerings, for meat-offerings, or for sacrifices, beside the altar of the LORD our God that is before his tabernacle.

31 And Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest said unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the children of Manasseh, This day [y]we perceive that [z]the LORD is among us, because ye have not committed this trespass against the LORD: [a]now ye have delivered the children of Israel out of the hand of the LORD.

32 ¶ And Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, and the princes, returned from the children of Reuben, and from the children of Gad, out of the land of Gilead, unto the land of Canaan, to the children of Israel, [b]and brought them word again.

33 And [c]the thing pleased the children of Israel; and the children of Israel [d]blessed God, and did not intend to go up against them in battle, to destroy the land wherein the children of Reuben and Gad dwelt.

34 And the children of Reuben and the children of Gad called the altar [e]Ed: for it shall be a witness between us that the LORD is God.

message; but, with the utmost solemnity and meekness, they explained their intention, and gave all the satisfaction in their power. They appealed to the Lord, against whom they were supposed to have rebelled, with great propriety and reverence. The titles, by which they addressed him, "The LORD God of gods, the LORD God of gods," formed a very proper confession of their faith, as well as an act of worship to him, the eternal, almighty God, who was exalted far above all creatures, however great, and even those which other nations worshipped as their gods, being sole "Lord of all." This glorious God knew, and Israel would know by their subsequent conduct, that they were not guilty of the things with which they were charged: and indeed if they could be proved guilty, they acknowledged that they did not deserve, and therefore did not ask, to be spared. They further declared, that their motives in erecting this altar, were directly contrary to those which had been imputed to them. For they were anxiously afraid, lest in process of time, the other tribes should not own them as brethren, or admit them to the ordinances of the Lord, and to his sanctuary: and lest their posterity, by reason of the distance, or their slackness in attending the solemn feasts, should at length be excluded as Gentiles, and thus be tempted, and gradually decline to idolatry. And they solemnly protested, that no other motive had induced them to build this altar after the fashion of that at Shiloh, but that it might remain to succeeding generations a memorial that they were Israelites, that they were interested in all the sacrifices offered upon the altar of JEHOVAH, and had a right to join with Israel in all their public religious solemnities.—The words rendered "The LORD God of gods," may indeed be read as three names of God—EL, ELOHIM, JEHOVAH: and some expositors, both Jewish and Christian, have thought that they refer to a distinction of persons in the Divine Unity. —Scott.

UNIVERSAL CONFIDENCE RESTORED.—The separate tribes were gratified, and since they had a mind to preserve among them this pattern of the altar of God, though there was not likely to be that occasion for it which they fancied, yet Joshua and the princes let them have their humour, and did not give orders for the demolishing of it, though there was as much reason to fear that it might in process of time be an occasion of idolatry, as there was to hope that ever it might be a preservation from idolatry. Thus did "the strong bear the infirmities of the weak." Only, care was taken that they, having explained the meaning of their altar, that it was intended for no more than a testimony of their communion with the altar at Shiloh, this explanation should be recorded, which was done according to the usage of those times, by giving a name to it signifying so much, ver. 34, they called it "Ed, a witness," to that and no more. A witness of the relation they stood in to God and Israel, and of their concurrence with the rest of the tribes in the same common faith, "that Jehovah he is God," he and no other. It was a witness to posterity of their care to transmit their religion pure and entire to them, and would be a witness against them if ever they should forsake God, and turn from following after him.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. OLD AGE OF JOSHUA.—We may notice Joshua's circumstances when he gave them this charge, he "was old and stricken in age," ver. 1, probably, it was in the last year of his life, and he lived to be one hundred and ten years old, chap. xxiv. 29. And he himself takes notice of it, in the first words of his discourse, ver. 2, when he began to be old, some years ago, God reminded him of it, chap. xiii. 1. "Thou art old." But now that he did himself feel so much of the decays of age that he needed not to be told of it, he readily speaks of it himself, "I am old and stricken in age." He uses it, 1. As an argument with himself to give them this charge, because being old he could expect to be but a little while with them, to advise and instruct them, and therefore, (as St. Peter speaks, 2 Pet. i. 13,) "as long as he is in his tabernacle," he will take all opportunities to "put them in remembrance" of their duty, knowing by the increasing infirmities of age, that he must shortly put off this tabernacle, and desiring that after his decease they might continue as good as they were now. When we see death hastening towards us, that should quicken us to do the work of life with all our might. 2. As an argument with them to give heed to what he said. He was old and experienced, and therefore to be the more regarded, for days should speak; he was grown old in their service, and had spent himself for their good, and therefore was to be the more regarded by them. He was old and dying, they would not have him long to preach to them, therefore let them observe what he said now, and lay it up in store for the time to come. —Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Through the deceitfulness of the human heart, we are never more in danger of forgetting the Lord, than when most favoured with temporal prosperity.—They who possess influence, from age, authority, reputation for wisdom and piety, or eminent services, should employ it all, with unwearied perseverance, to their latest breath, in promoting the practice of true godliness. Gratitude, duty, and regard to our own best happiness, with united energy, require us to adhere to our profession, and walk consistently with it: yet, we all need to be frequently reminded, exhorted, and warned concerning these things. As long as men cleave to the Lord, though they have abated somewhat of their fervour and diligence, there is good ground of hope that admonitions will have a proper effect: but, the diseases of the soul, like those of the body, should be resisted before they have gathered strength. We cannot too often be called

CHAP. XXIV.

Joshua, assembling the tribes, 1, relateth God's benefits, 2; he reneweth a covenant between them and God 14; his death, 29.

AND Joshua gathered all the tribes of Israel to [a]Shechem,[1] and [b]called for the elders of Israel, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers; and they [c]presented themselves before God.

2 ¶ And Joshua said unto all the people, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [d]Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor: and [e]they served other gods.

3 And [f]I took your father Abraham from the other side of the flood, and led him throughout all the land of Canaan, and multiplied[2] his seed, and [g]gave him Isaac.

4 And [h]I gave unto Isaac Jacob and Esau: and [i]I gave unto Esau mount Seir, to possess it; but [k]Jacob and his children went down into Egypt.

5 I [l]sent Moses also and Aaron, and [m]I plagued Egypt, according to that which I did among them: and afterward I brought you out.

6 And [n]I brought your fathers out of Egypt: and ye came unto the sea; and [o]the Egyptians pursued after your fathers with chariots and horsemen unto the Red sea.

7 And when they cried unto the LORD, he put darkness between you and the Egyptians, and brought the sea upon them, and covered them; and [p]your eyes have seen what I have done in Egypt: and [q]ye dwelt in the wilderness a long season.

8 And [r]I brought you into the land of the Amorites, which dwelt on the other side Jordan; and they fought with you: and I gave them into your hand, that ye might possess their land; and I destroyed them from before you.

9 Then [s]Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, arose and warred against Israel, and sent and called Balaam the son of Beor to curse you:

10 But [t]I would not hearken unto Balaam; therefore he blessed you still: so I delivered you out of his hand.

11 And [u]ye went over Jordan,[3] and came unto Jericho: and [x]the men of Jericho fought against you, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Girgashites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I delivered them into your hand.

12 And [y]I sent the hornet[4] before you, which drave them out before you, even the two kings of the Amorites; but [z]not with thy sword, nor with thy bow.

13 And I have given you a land for which ye did not labour, and [a]cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them; of the vineyards and oliveyards which ye planted not, do ye eat.

14 ¶ Now therefore [b]fear the LORD, and [c]serve him in sincerity and in truth: and [d]put away the gods[5] which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and [e]in Egypt; and serve ye the LORD.

15 And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, [f]choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or [g]the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but [h]as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD.

16 And the people answered and said, [i]God forbid that we should forsake the LORD, to serve other gods;

17 For the LORD our God, [k]he it is that brought us up and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage, and which did those great signs in our sight, and preserved us in all the way wherein we went, and among all the people through whom we passed:

18 And the LORD drave out from before us all the people, even the Amorites which dwelt in the land: therefore [l]will we also serve the LORD; for he is our God.

19 And Joshua said unto the people, [m]Ye cannot[6] serve the LORD: for he is an [n]holy God; he is [o]a jealous God; [p]he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins.

20 If ye forsake the LORD, and serve strange gods, then [q]he will turn and do you hurt, and consume you, after that he hath done you good.

21 And the people said unto Joshua, [r]Nay; but we will serve the LORD.

22 And Joshua said unto the people, [s]Ye are witnesses against yourselves that [t]ye have chosen you the LORD, to serve him. And they said, We are witnesses.

23 Now therefore [u]put away, said he, the upon, to meditate on the past and present kindness of God to us; and to reflect upon his gracious promises, and awful threatenings: and we should treasure up our experience of the exact performance of his word to strengthen our expectation of its entire accomplishment in due season; for hope and fear, and every passion, ought to be engaged to restrain men from sin, and to keep them close to their duty. It is true wisdom to discern, and to shun, the temptations and inlets to sin, of which none are more dangerous than ungodly companions. Acquaintance, friendship, and marriage, with persons of no religion, or of false religion, have generally been progressive steps towards the mere professor's apostacy, and the believer's loss of all his life, comfort, and usefulness. They, who at first are tempters, will eventually prove the scourges of those, who have listened to their seductions: and either bitter distress in this world, or utter destruction in the world to come, are the unavoidable effects of yielding to temptation. This all ought "to know for a certainty," that they "may take good heed unto themselves," and not allow the love of any creature to seduce them from the love of God, and obedience to his laws.—Our minds should be filled with an abhorrence of every kind of ungodliness, equal to that which the most conscientious persons feel of murder or adultery; for whatever fallen man may think to the contrary, the guilt of neglecting and despising the glorious God our Creator, is far greater, than that of injuring our fellow-creatures. —Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. PRACTICAL RESULT OF PRIVILEGE.—The application of this history of God's mercies to them, is by way of exhortation, to fear and serve God, in gratitude for his favour, and that it might be continued to them, ver. 14. Now therefore, in consideration of all this, 1. "'Fear the Lord,' the Lord and his goodness, Hos. iii. 5. Reverence a God of such infinite power, fear to offend him, and to forfeit his goodness. Keep up an awe of his majesty, a deference to his authority, a dread of his displeasure, and a continual regard to his all-seeing eye upon you." 2. "Let your practice be consonant to this principle, and serve him, both by the outward acts of religious worship, and every instance of obedience in your whole conversation, and this, in 'sincerity and truth,' with a single eye and an upright heart, and inward impressions, answerable to outward expressions." That is the "truth in the inward part," which God requires, Ps. li. 6. For what good will it do us to dissemble with a God that searches the heart? 3. "Put away the strange gods," both Chaldean and Egyptian idols, for those they were most in danger of revolting to. It should seem by this charge, which is repeated, ver. 23, that there were some among them, that privately kept in their closets the images or pictures of these dunghill-deities, which came to their hands from their ancestors, as heir-looms of their families, though, it may be, they did not worship them; these Joshua earnestly urges them to throw away. "Deface them, destroy them, lest you be tempted to serve them." Jacob pressed his household to do this, and at this very place; for when they gave him up the little images they had, he buried them "under the oak which was by Shechem," Gen. xxxv. 2, 4. Perhaps the oak mentioned here, ver. 26, was the same oak, or another in the same place, which might be well called "the oak of reformation," as there were idolatrous oaks.—Henry.

DECISION IN RELIGION.—Ver. 15. The Lord has an unalienable right to the service of all his rational creatures, which cannot be withheld, without contracting the deepest guilt, and incurring the severest vengeance. But, it is essential to this service, that it be performed with a willing mind; for LOVE is the very substance of it, and its only genuine principle: "The Father seeketh such to worship him, as worship him in spirit and in truth." But "the carnal mind is enmity against God," and therefore incapable of this spiritual worship: and hence the necessity of being born again. When, however, we discover this necessity, and the nature of the gracious change intended by that emphatical expression, we are induced to seek it in the use of appointed means: and thus at length we become consciously and experimentally partakers of it, and are numbered amongst those who worship God in truth and love. But, in the visible church, numbers have always rested in the mere form, as an "unpleasant task" to which they submit, to avoid, as they hope, worse consequences: and a great part of the usefulness of preaching consists in discovering the difference betwixt the form and the power of godliness; and in stirring up the minds of men, from resting in the former, to seek after the latter. The method which Joshua adopted in treating with the Israelites was admirably calculated, and evidently intended, to produce this effect. Many of them were already spiritual worshippers: a much greater number might be favourably disposed toward the worship and service of God, but, through procrastination, and worldly avocations, not yet fully engaged in it: and doubtless many had a secret dislike to religion, who would have been ashamed to confess it, and who would be shocked at the proposal of renouncing the worship of God, and openly professing themselves idolaters. Of this state of mind this aged believer aimed to take the advantage, and to lead them, by his proposal, to reflect upon their own inconsistency, formality, or procrastination; and to engage deliberately, seriously, and "with full purpose of heart," in the Lord's service.—Scott.

JOSHUA'S DOMESTIC PIETY.—1. "Not my house, without me." He would not engage them to that work, which he would not set his own hand to. As some who would have their children and servants good, but will not be so themselves; that is, they would have them go to heaven, but intend to go to hell themselves. 2. "Not I, without my house."

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

THE title of this book is taken from the original Hebrew, and shews the principal subject of it, as containing the history of those judges whom God raised up among his people before he placed any king over them. These were not a regular succession of governors, but occasional deliverers, of different tribes and families, employed to rescue the nation from oppressors, to reform religion, or to administer justice. They do not seem to have assumed any degree of regal magnificence, or to have exercised any expensive or burdensome authority; yet they were for the time the immediate vicegerents of JEHOVAH, the King of Israel. It is probable, that when there was no judge, the Levites, elders, and ordinary magistrates, together with the high priest and the other priests, conducted the affairs of the several tribes, and administered justice, as circumstances would admit, according to the law of Moses; and that, when there was a judge, he presided over them.—It is generally supposed that the prophet Samuel, the last of the judges, wrote this book; and, indeed, it seems to have been written during the reign of Saul; for the words repeatedly used, "In those days there was no king in Israel" (xvii. 6; xix. 1; xxi. 25), imply, that there was a king when the history was published; yet, it appears also, that the Jebusites still kept possession of Jerusalem, from which David at length expelled them (i. 21). It consists of two parts: in the first sixteen chapters, a compendious narrative is given of the affairs of Israel, from the death of Joshua to that of Samson, during the term of about three hundred years; though the chronology is peculiarly intricate, and the remaining five chapters record some detached events which took place in the earlier part of that period, but which would have too much interrupted the narrative had they been inserted according to the order of time. Thus the history is brought down to the years during which Eli judged Israel, and nearly to the birth of Samuel. There are several references to this book in both the Old and New Testaments (1 Sam. xii. 10, 11; 2 Sam. xi. 21; Neh. ix. 28; Ps. lxxxiii. 9-11; Is. ix. 4; x. 26; Acts xiii. 20; Heb. xi. 23); and it is very certain that it formed a part of that Sacred Volume, to which Christ and his apostles constantly appealed, as to the Oracles of God; but I do not recollect any express prophecies contained in it.

The condition of Israel does not appear so prosperous, nor the national character so religious, in this history, as from the foregoing records it might have been hoped; but it is probable that the worship at the sanctuary was regularly maintained and attended on, and that there was a pious remnant in the land, amidst the repeated apostacies and multiplied idolatries of the nation in general. The whole account illustrates the character given of human nature in the Scriptures, and shews, in a most affecting manner, the consequences of attending on the worship and service of God, or of neglecting them, in respect of national prosperity or adversity.

He supposes he might be forsaken by his people, but in his house, where his authority was greater, and more immediate, there he would overrule. Note, When we cannot bring as many as we would to the service of God, we must bring as many as we can, and extend our endeavours to the utmost sphere of our activity; if we cannot reform the land, let us put away iniquity far from our own tabernacle. 3. "First, I, and then my house." Note, Those that lead and rule in other things, should be first in the service of God, and go before in the best things. Lastly, he resolves to do this, whatever others did. Though all the families of Israel should revolt from God, and serve idols, yet Joshua and his family will steadfastly adhere to the God of Israel. Note, Those that resolve to serve God must not mind being singular in it, nor be drawn by the crowd to forsake his service. Those that are bound for heaven must be willing to "swim against the stream," and must not do as the most do, but as the best do.—Henry.

REVERSAL OF THE COVENANT.—Ver. 25. Thus Joshua led his auditory solemnly to renew their covenant to be the Lord's people, and to adhere to his worship, and that in the most intelligent and deliberate manner: and he formed the whole into a statute and ordinance, which was promulgated for all Israel to receive and obey. Ver. 26. This ratification of the covenant seems to have been inscribed in that copy of the law, which was laid up by the sides of the ark, as a perpetual memorial of the transaction: and it was also, probably, inserted in all the other copies of the law which were then extant. Ver. 27. This great stone would testify to succeeding generations that event which it was set up to commemorate; and it would be a witness against the people, if they afterwards revolted to idolatry. This idea contains a forcible charge of insensibility against mankind, as if they were more regardless of their Maker, than the inanimate creatures, which, by answering the end of their creation, seem to exclaim against the ingratitude and rebellion of the human species. In this affecting manner Joshua took his leave of Israel; went home from this last, and perhaps best service to God and them; and was speedily taken to his rest in heaven.—Scott.

INTERMENT OF JOSEPH'S BONES.—This book, which began with triumphs, here ends with funerals, by which all the glory of man is stained. Here is Joseph buried, ver. 32. He died about two hundred years before in Egypt, but "gave commandment concerning his bones," that they should not rest in their grave until Israel had rest in the land of promise; now, therefore, the children of Israel, who had brought this coffin full of bones with them out of Egypt, carried it along with them in all their marches through the wilderness, (the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, it is probable, taking particular care of it,) and kept it in their camp till Canaan was perfectly reduced, now at last they deposited it in that piece of ground which his father gave him near Shechem, Gen. xlviii. 22. Probably, it was upon this occasion that Joshua called out for all Israel to meet him at Shechem, ver. 1, to attend Joseph's coffin to the grave there; so that the sermon in this chapter served both for Joseph's funeral sermon, and his own farewell sermon; and if it was, as is supposed, in the last year of his life, the occasion might very well remind him of his own death being at hand, for he was now just at the same age that his illustrious ancestor Joseph was arrived at when he died, "one hundred and ten years old;" compare ver. 29 with Gen. l. 26.

DEATH AND BURIAL OF JOSHUA.—Here is the death and burial of Joshua, ver. 29, 30. We are not told how long he lived after the coming of Israel into Canaan. Dr. Lightfoot thinks it was about seventeen years; but the Jewish chronologers generally say it was about twenty-seven, or twenty-eight years. He is here called the "servant of the Lord," the same title that was given to Moses, chap. i. 1, when mention was made of his death; for though Joshua was in many respects inferior to Moses, yet in this he was equal to him, that, according as his work was, he approved himself a diligent and faithful servant of God. And he that traded with his two talents, had the same approbation that he had, that traded with five; "Well done, good and faithful servant." Joshua's burying-place is here said to be "on the north side of the hill of Gaash," or "the quaking-hill;" the Jews say it was so called, because it trembled at the burial of Joshua, to upbraid the people of Israel with their stupidity, in that they did not lament the death of that great and good man so as they ought to have done. Thus, at the death of Christ, our Joshua, the earth quaked. The learned Bishop Patrick observes, that there is no mention of any days of mourning for Joshua, as there were for Moses and Aaron, in which, he says, St. Hierom and other of the fathers think there is a mystery, namely, That under the law, when life and immortality were not brought to so clear a light as they are now, they had reason to mourn and weep for the death of their friends; but now that Jesus, our Joshua, has opened the kingdom of heaven, we may rather rejoice.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—13. It is beautiful and honourable, when zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, gather strength, at a time when the body is ready to drop into the grave; and whilst life is spared, and any measure of health afforded, if our hearts glow with love and zeal, we shall devise some method to serve the cause of godliness, and to fix salutary impressions upon the minds of those around us: nay, sometimes when the body is least capable of executing, the soul possesses most vigour for devising, proper methods of doing good.—In repeating our exhortations, heavenly wisdom will teach us to vary the manner of reaching the conscience, and engaging the affections.—Scott.

CHAP. I.

The acts of Judah and Simeon, 1. Adoni-bezek justly requited, 7. Jerusalem, 8, and Hebron taken, 10.

NOW [a]after the death of Joshua,[1] it came to pass, that the children of Israel [b]asked the LORD, saying, Who shall go up for us against the Canaanites first, to fight against them?

2 And the LORD said, [c]Judah shall go up: behold, I have delivered the land into his hand.

3 And Judah said unto [d]Simeon[2] his brother, Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight against the Canaanites; and [e]I likewise will go with thee into thy lot. So Simeon went with him.

4 And Judah went up; and the [f]LORD delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hand: and they slew of them in [g]Bezek ten thousand men.

5 And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek: and they fought against him, and they slew the Canaanites and the Perizzites.

6 But Adoni-bezek fled; and they pursued after him, and caught him, and cut off his thumbs[3] and his great toes.

7 And Adoni-bezek said, Threescore and ten kings, having *their thumbs and their great toes cut off, †gathered their meat[4] under my table: [h]as I have done, [i]so God hath requited me. And they brought him to Jerusalem, and there he died.

8 ¶ Now [k]the children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and had taken it, and smitten it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire.

9 And [l]afterward the children of Judah went down to fight against the Canaanites, that dwelt in the mountain, and in the south, and in the ‡valley.

10 ¶ And Judah went against the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron: (now the name of Hebron before was [m]Kirjath-arba:) and they slew [n]Sheshai, and Ahiman, and Talmai.

11 ¶ And from thence he went against the inhabitants of Debir: and the name of [o]Debir before was Kirjath-sepher:

12 And [p]Caleb said, He that smiteth Kirjath-sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter to wife.

13 And [q]Othniel the son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother, took it: and he gave him Achsah his daughter to wife.

14 And it came to pass, when she came to him, that she moved him to ask of her father a field: and she lighted from off her ass; and Caleb said unto her, What wilt thou?

15 And she said unto him, Give me [r]a blessing: for thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And Caleb gave her the upper springs and the nether springs.

16 ¶ And the children of [s]the Kenite,[5] [t]Moses' father-in-law, went up out of the [u]city of palm trees with the children of Judah into the wilderness of Judah, [x]which lieth in the south of Arad: and [y]they went and dwelt among the people.

17 ¶ And [z]Judah went with Simeon his brother, and they slew the Canaanites that inhabited [a]Zephath, and utterly destroyed it. And the name of the city was call [b]Hormah.

18 Also Judah took [c]Gaza with the coast thereof, and Askelon with the coast thereof, and Ekron with the coast thereof.

19 And [d]the LORD was with Judah;[6] and [e]he drove out the inhabitants of the mountain; but [f]could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had [g]chariots of iron.

20 And [h]they gave Hebron unto Caleb, as Moses said: and he expelled thence [i]the three sons of Anak.

21 ¶ And the children of [k]Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites that inhabited Jerusalem; but the Jebusites dwell with the children of Benjamin in Jerusalem unto this day.

22 ¶ And [l]the house of Joseph, they also went up against Beth-el: and [m]the LORD was with them.

23 And the house of Joseph [n]sent to descry Beth-el. (Now the name of the city before was [o]Luz.)

24 And the spies saw a man come forth out of the city, and they said unto him, Shew us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city, and [p]we will shew thee mercy.

25 And when he shewed them the entrance into the city, [q]they smote the city with the edge of the sword; but they let go the man and all his family.

26 And the man went into [r]the land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz: which is the name thereof unto this day.

27 ¶ Neither did [s]Manasseh drive out the inhabitants of [t]Beth-shean and her towns, nor [u]Taanach and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns: but the Canaanites would dwell[7] in that land.

28 And it came to pass, [x]when Israel was strong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.

29 ¶ Neither did [y]Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer; but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them.

CHAP. I. FIRST CAMPAIGN AFTER JOSHUA'S DEATH—ADONI-BEZEK.—Whether the Hebrew soldiers invaded the enemy, or the enemy first gave them the alarm, "The Lord delivered them into their hand," ver. 4. Though the army of Judah was strong and bold, yet the victory is attributed to God! he "delivered the Canaanites into their hand;" having given them authority, he here gives them ability to destroy them—put it in their power, and so tried their obedience to his command, which was "utterly to cut them off." Bishop Patrick observes upon this, that we meet not with such religious expressions in the heathen writers, concerning the success of their arms, as we have here and elsewhere in this sacred history, I wish such pious acknowledgments of the Divine Providence were not grown into disuse at this time, with many that are called Christians. Now, 1. We are told how the army of the Canaanites were routed in the field, in or near Bezek, the place where they drew up, which afterward Saul made the place of a general rendezvous, 1 Sam. xi. 8; they slew ten thousand men; which blow, if followed, could not but be a very great weakening to those that were brought already so very low. 2. How their king was taken and mortified. His name was Adoni-bezek, which signifies lord of Bezek. There have been those that "called their lands by their own names," Psal. xlix. 11, but here was one, and there has been many another, that called himself by his land's name. He was taken prisoner after the battle, and we are here told how they used him: they cut off his thumbs, to disfit him for fighting, and his great toes, that he might not be able to run away, ver. 6. It had been barbarous thus to triumph over a man in misery, and that lay at their mercy, but that he was a devoted Canaanite, and one that had in like manner abused others, which, probably, they had heard of. Josephus says, "They cut off his hands and his feet," probably supposing those more likely to be mortal wounds, than only the cutting off his thumbs and his great toes. But this indignity which they did him, extorted from him an acknowledgment of the righteousness of God, ver. 7. Where observe, (1.) What a great man this Adoni-bezek had been, how great in the field, where armies fled before him; how great at home, where kings were "set with the dogs of his flock:" and yet now himself a prisoner, and reduced to the extremity of meanness and disgrace. See how changeable this world is, and how slippery its high places are. Let not the highest be proud, nor the strongest secure, for they know not how low they may be brought before they die. (2.) What desolations he had made among his neighbours; he had wholly subdued seventy kings, to that degree as to have them his prisoners; he that was the chief person in a city, was then called a king, and the greatness of their title did but aggravate their disgrace, and fired the pride of him that insulted over them. We cannot suppose that Adoni-bezek had seventy of these petty princes at once his slaves, but first and last, in the course of his reign, he had thus deposed and abused so many, who perhaps were many of them kings of the same cities that successively opposed him, and whom he thus treated to please his own imperious barbarous fancy, and for a terror to others. It seems, the Canaanites had been wasted by civil wars, and those bloody ones, among themselves, which would very much facilitate the conquest of them by Israel. "Judah," says Dr. Lightfoot, "in conquering Adoni-bezek, did in effect, conquer seventy kings." (3.) How justly he was treated as he had treated others. Thus the righteous God sometimes, in his providence, makes the punishment to answer the sin, and observes an equality in his judgments; the spoiler should be spoiled, and the "treacherous dealer dealt treacherously" with, Isa. xxxiii. 1. And they that "showed no mercy," shall have "no mercy showed" them, James ii. 13; see Rev. xiii. 10, xviii. 6. (4.) How honestly he owned the righteousness of God herein. "As I have done, so God has requited me." See the power of conscience, when God by his judgments awakens it, how it brings sin to remembrance, and subscribes to the justice of God. He that in his pride had set God at defiance, now yields to him, and reflects with as much regret upon the kings under his table, as ever he had looked upon them with pleasure when he had them there. He seems to own that he was better dealt with than he had dealt with his prisoners; for though the Israelites maimed him, (according to the law of retaliation, an eye for an eye, so a thumb for a thumb,) yet they did not put him under the table to be fed with the crumbs there; because, though the other might well be looked upon as an act of justice, that would have savoured more of pride and haughtiness than did become an Israelite.

THE POSSESSION OF THE KENITES.—The Kenites gained a settlement in the tribe of Judah, choosing it there rather than in any other tribe, because it was the strongest, and there they hoped to be safe and quiet, ver. 16. These were the posterity of Jethro, who either went with Israel when Moses invited them, Num. x. 29, or met them about the same place, when they came up from their wanderings in the wilderness thirty-eight years after, and went with them then to Canaan, Moses having promised them they should fare as Israel fared, Num. x. 32. They had at first seated themselves in the city of palm trees, that is, Jericho, a city which never was to be rebuilt, and therefore the fitter for them who dwell in tents, and did not mind building. But afterward they removed into the wilderness of Judah, either out of their affection to that place, because solitary, and retired, or out of their affection to that tribe, which perhaps had been in a particular manner kind to them. Yet we find the tent of Jael, who was of that family, far north, in the lot of Naphtali, when Sisera took shelter there, chap. iv. 17. This respect Israel showed them, to let them fix where they pleased, being a quiet people, who, wherever

CHAP. II.

An angel rebuketh the people at Bochim, 1. The wickedness of the new generation after Joshua, 6; their punishment, 14, 20.

AND [a]an *angel of the LORD[1] came up from Gilgal to [b]Bochim, and said, [c]I made you to go up out of Egypt, and [d]have brought you unto the land which I sware unto your fathers; and I said, [e]I will never break my covenant with you.

2 And [f]ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land; ye shall throw down their altars: [g]but ye have not obeyed my voice: [h]why have ye done this?

3 Wherefore [i]I also said, I will not drive them out from before you; but they shall be as thorns in your sides, and [j]their gods shall be a snare unto you.

4 And it came to pass, when the angel of the LORD spake these words unto all the children of Israel, that [k]the people lifted up their voice, and wept.

5 And they called the name of that place [l]Bochim:[2] and [l]they sacrificed there unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And when [m]Joshua had let the people go, the children of Israel went every man unto his inheritance to possess the land.

7 And [n]the people served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that [‡]outlived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the LORD, that he did for Israel.

8 And [o]Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died, being an hundred and ten years old.

9 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in [p]Timnath-heres, in the mount of Ephraim, on the north side of the hill Gaash.

10 ¶ And also all that generation were [q]gathered unto their fathers: and there arose another generation after them, which [r]knew not the LORD, nor yet the works which he had done for Israel.

11 And the children of Israel [s]did evil in the sight[3] of the LORD, [t]and served Baalim:

12 And they [u]forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed [v]other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them, and [x]bowed themselves unto them, and provoked the LORD to anger.

13 And they forsook the LORD, and [y]served Baal[4] and Ashtaroth.[5]

14 ¶ And [z]the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel, and [a]he delivered them into the hands of the spoilers that spoiled them, and he [b]sold them into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they [c]could not any longer stand before their enemies.

15 Whithersoever they went out, the hand[6] of the LORD was [d]against them for evil, [e]as the LORD had said, and as the LORD had [f]sworn unto them: and they were [g]greatly distressed.

16 ¶ Nevertheless [h]the LORD raised up judges, which [i]delivered them out of the hand of those that spoiled them.

17 And yet [l]they would not hearken unto their judges, but they went a [k]whoring after other gods, and bowed themselves unto them: they turned [l]quickly out of the way [m]which their fathers walked in, obeying the commandments of the LORD; but they did not so.

18 And when the LORD raised them up judges, then [n]the LORD was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge: for it [o]repented the LORD because of [p]their groanings by reason of them that oppressed them and vexed them.

19 And it came to pass, [q]when the judge was dead, that they returned, and [l]corrupted themselves [r]more than their fathers, in following other gods to serve them, and to bow down unto them; they [*]ceased not from their own doings, nor from their [s]stubborn way.

they were, were content with a little. They that molested none, were molested by none. "Blessed are the meek, for thus they shall inherit the earth."

SLOTHFULNESS IN TAKING POSSESSION OF CANAAN.—Upon the whole matter, it appears that the people of Israel were generally very careless both of their duty and interest in this thing; they did not what they might have done to expel the Canaanites and make room for themselves. And, 1. It was owing to their slothfulness and cowardice, they would not be at the pains to complete their conquests like the sluggard, that dreamed of a lion in the way, a lion in the streets, they fancied insuperable difficulties, and frightened themselves with winds and clouds from sowing and reaping. 2. It was owing to their covetousness; the Canaanites' labour and money would do them more good, they thought, than their blood, and therefore they were willing to let them live among them, that they might make a hand of them. 3. They had not that dread and detestation of idolatry, which they ought to have had; they thought it pity to put these Canaanites to the sword, though the measure of their iniquity was full; thought it would be no harm to let them live among them, and that they should be in no danger from them. 4. The same thing that kept their fathers forty years out of Canaan, kept them now out of the full possession of it, and that was, unbelief. Distrust of the power and promise of God lost them their advantages, and run them into a thousand mischiefs.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—No detached efforts, however judicious and spirited, without steady and constant perseverance, can effect important changes, rectify abuses in church or state, or give permanent and enlarged success to true religion. For all such attempts may be compared to raising a large weight to a great height, in which the whole labour is lost, if the exertion ceases before the object be fully accomplished. They, who have the precedency in rank or reputation, should go before others in every good work, undismayed by dangers and difficulties, that they may animate them by their example: the strongest ought not to despise, but to value the assistance of the weakest; and it becomes the people of God to unite together, and help each other against their common enemies; and especially to assist the whole "church militant here on earth," with their constant and fervent prayers. We are sure to have all profitable success, when we engage in any enterprise according to the Lord's direction, and in dependence on his help; and whatever labour, conduct, or courage we display, or whatever human aid we employ, to him the whole glory belongs.—Scott.

CHAP. II. THE ANGEL OF THE COVENANT.—Ver. 1—5. The language of the reproof here given demonstrates who this angel was: for "no prophet, nor any created angel, durst have been so bold as to say, 'I have made you to go up out of Egypt;' but would have prefaced this speech in some such words as these, 'Thus saith the LORD.' It was not a created angel, but an uncreated, even that very person who appeared to Joshua hard by Jericho, which, I have shown there, was God himself. It was fit for him to appear now as coming from Gilgal, to put them in mind of that illustrious appearance, and of the solemn covenant they made with him, by the renewing of circumcision in that place; which upbraided them with their base ingratitude and sloth." (Bishop Patrick.) —It was then the great Angel of the covenant, the Word and Son of God, who spake as JEHOVAH, as HE who brought Israel out of Egypt, put them in possession of Canaan, entered into covenant with them, gave them commandments; and now called them to account for their disobedience: showing that they, not he, had violated the national covenant. He first appeared at Gilgal, and afterwards was seen coming to Shiloh, where the people were assembled at one of their solemn feasts: for it is probable, from the sacrifice which they offered, that they were at Shiloh.—Scott.

BOCHIM.—Ver. 4. 1. The angel had told them of their sins, which they thus expressed their sorrow for; they lifted up their voice in confession of sin, crying out against their own folly and ingratitude, and wept, as those that were both ashamed of themselves, and angry at themselves, as having acted so directly contrary both to their reason and to their interest. 2. The angel had threatened them with the judgment of God, which they thus expressed their dread of; they lifted up their voice in prayer to God to turn away his wrath from them, and wept for fear of that wrath. They relented upon this alarm, and their hearts melted within them, and trembled at the word, and not without cause. This was good, and a sign that the word they heard, made an impression upon them; it is a wonder sinners can ever read their Bibles with dry eyes: but this was not enough; they wept, but we do not find that they reformed, that they went home and destroyed all the remains of idolatry and idolaters among them. Many are melted under the word, that harden again, before they are cast into a new mould. However, this general weeping, (1.) Gave a new name to the place, ver. 5, they called it Bochim, Weepers, a good name for our religious assemblies to answer. Had they kept close to God and their duty, no voice but that of singing had been heard in their congregation; but by their sin and folly, they had made other work for themselves, and now nothing is to be heard but the voice of weeping. (2.) It gave occasion for a solemn sacrifice; they "sacrificed there unto the Lord," being (as is supposed) met at Shiloh, where God's altar was. They offered sacrifice to turn away God's wrath, and to obtain his favour, and in token of their dedication of themselves to him, and to him only, making a covenant by this sacrifice. The disease being thus taken in time, and the physic administered working so well, one would

20 ¶ And [t]the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel; and he said, Because that this people have [u]transgressed my covenant which I commanded their fathers, and have not hearkened unto my voice;

21 I also [x]will not henceforth drive out any from before them of the nations which Joshua left when he died:

22 That [y]through them I may [z]prove Israel, whether they will keep the way of the LORD to walk therein, as their fathers did keep it, or not.

23 Therefore the LORD [†]left those nations,[7] without driving them out hastily; neither delivered he them into the hand of Joshua.

CHAP. III.

The nations left to prove Israel, 1; by communion with them they commit idolatry, 5. Of Othniel, 8, Ehud, 12, and Shamgar, 31.

NOW these are [a]the nations which the LORD left, to [b]prove Israel by them, even as many of Israel [c]as had not known all the wars of Canaan;

2 Only that the generations of the children of Israel [d]might know to teach them war, at the least such as before knew nothing thereof;

3 Namely, [e]five lords of the Philistines, and all the [f]Canaanites, and the [g]Sidonians, and the Hivites that dwelt [h]in mount Lebanon, from mount Baal-hermon unto the entering in of Hamath.

4 And they were [i]to prove Israel by them, to know whether they would hearken unto the commandments of the LORD, which he commanded their fathers by the hand of Moses.

5 ¶ And the children of Israel [j]dwelt among the [k]Canaanites, Hittites, and Amorites, and Perizzites, and Hivites, and Jebusites:

6 And [l]they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their sons, and served their gods.

7 And the children of Israel [m]did evil in the sight of the LORD, and forgat the LORD their God, and served Baalim and [n]the groves.

8 ¶ Therefore the anger of the LORD [o]was hot against Israel, and [p]he sold them into the hand of [q]Chushan-rishathaim king of *Mesopotamia:[1] and the children of Israel served Chushan-rishathaim eight years.

9 And when the children of Israel [r]cried unto the LORD, the LORD [s]raised up a [†]deliverer to the children of Israel, who delivered them, even [‡]Othniel the son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother.

10 And [u]the Spirit of the LORD [‡]came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war: and the LORD delivered Chushan-rishathaim king of [§]Mesopotamia into his hand; and his hand prevailed against Chushan-rishathaim.

11 And [x]the land had rest forty years. And [y]Othniel the son of Kenaz died.

12 ¶ And the children of Israel [z]did evil again in the sight of the LORD: and [a]the LORD strengthened Eglon [b]the king of Moab against Israel, because they had done evil in the sight of the LORD.

13 And he gathered unto him the children of [c]Ammon and Amalek, and went and smote Israel,[2] and possessed [d]the city of palm trees.

14 So the children of Israel [e]served Eglon the king of Moab eighteen years.

15 But when the children of Israel [f]cried unto the LORD, the LORD raised them up a deliverer, Ehud the son of Gera, [l]a Benjamite, [‘]a man *lefthanded: and by him the children of Israel [g]sent a present unto Eglon the king of Moab.

16 But Ehud made him a dagger which had [h]two edges, of a cubit length; and he did gird it under his raiment [i]upon his right thigh.

17 And he brought the present unto Eglon king of Moab: and Eglon was [j]a very fat man.

18 And when he had made an end to offer the present, he sent away the people that bare the present.

19 But he himself turned again from the [†]quarries that were by Gilgal, and said, I have [k]a secret errand unto thee, O king: who said, Keep silence. [l]And all that stood by him went out from him.

20 And Ehud came unto him; and he was sitting in [‡]a summer parlour,[3] which he had for himself alone. And Ehud said, [m]I have a message from God unto thee. And [n]he arose out of his seat.

21 And Ehud put forth his left hand,[4] and took the dagger from his right thigh, and [o]thrust it into his belly:

22 And the haft also went in after the blade; and the fat closed upon the blade, so that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly; and [§]the dirt came out.

23 Then Ehud went forth through the porch,[5] and shut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them.

24 When he was gone out, his servants came; and when they saw that, behold, the doors of the parlour were locked, they said Surely he [‖]covereth his feet in his summer chamber.

25 And they tarried till they were ashamed: and, behold, he opened not the doors of the parlour; therefore they took a key, and have hoped a cure might have been effected. But by the sequel of the story, it appears to have been too deeply rooted to be wept out.

SIN AND PUNISHMENT.—God's just resolution was, still to continue the rod over them. 1. Their sin was, sparing the Canaanites; and thus, in contempt and violation of the covenant God had made with them, and the commands he had given them, ver. 20. 2. Their punishment was, that the Canaanites were spared, and so they were beaten with their own rod. They were not all delivered into the hand of Joshua while he lived, ver. 23. Our Lord Jesus, though he "spoiled principalities and powers," yet did not complete his victory at first; "we see not yet all things put under him;" there are remains of Satan's interest in the church, as there were of the Canaanites in the land; but yet our Joshua lives for ever, and will in the great day perfect his conquests. After Joshua's death, little was done for a long time against the Canaanites: Israel indulged them, and grew familiar with them, and therefore God would not "drive them out" any more, ver. 21. If they will have such inmates as these among them, let them take them, and see what will come of it. "God chose their delusions," Isa. lxvi. 4. Thus men cherish and indulge their own corrupt appetites and passions, and, instead of mortifying them, make provision for them, and therefore God justly leaves them to themselves under the power of their sins, which will be their ruin: "So shall their doom be, themselves have decided it." These remnants of the Canaanites were left to prove Israel, ver. 22, "whether they would keep the way of the Lord or not;" not that God might know them, but that they might know themselves. It was to try, (1.) Whether they could resist the temptations to idolatry which the Canaanites would lay before them. God had told them they could not, Deut. vii. 4, but they thought they could; "Well," said God, "I will try you;" and, upon trial, it was found that the tempter's charms were quite too strong for them. God has told us how deceitful and desperately wicked our hearts are, but we are not willing to believe it, until, by making bold with temptation, we find it too true by sad experience. (2.) Whether they would make a good use of the vexations which the remaining natives would give them, and the many troubles they would occasion them, and would thereby be convinced of sin and humbled for it, reformed, and driven to God and their duty; whether by continual alarms from them they would be kept in awe, and made afraid of provoking God.—Henry.

CHAP. III. THE FIRST JUDGE—OTHNIEL.—Observe, 1. Who the deliverer was; it was Othniel, who married Caleb's daughter; one of the old stock that had "seen the works of the Lord," and had himself, no question, kept his integrity, and secretly lamented the apostacy of his people, but waited for a divine call to appear publicly for the redress of their grievances. He was now, we may suppose, far advanced in years, when God raised him up to this honour; but the decays of age were no hinderance to his usefulness, when God had work for him to do. 2. Whence he had his commission, not of man, or by man; but "the Spirit of the Lord came upon him," ver. 10. The spirit of wisdom and courage to qualify him for the service, and a spirit of power to excite him to it, so as to give him and others full satisfaction, that it was the will of God he should engage in it; the Chaldee says, "The spirit of prophecy remained on him." 3. What method he took; he first judged Israel, reproved them, called them to an account for their sins, and reformed them, and then went out to war; that was the right method. Let sin at home be conquered, that worst of enemies, and then enemies abroad will be the more easily dealt with. Thus let Christ be our Judge and Lawgiver, and then "he will save us," and on no other terms, Isa. xxxiii. 22. 4. What good success he had. He prevailed to break the yoke of the oppression, and, as it should seem, to break the neck of the oppressor; for it is said, "The Lord delivered Chushan-rishathaim into his hand." Now was Judah, of which tribe Othniel was, "as a lion's whelp gone up from the prey." 5. The happy consequence of Othniel's good services. The land, though not getting ground, yet had rest, and some fruits of the reformation, forty years; and it had been perpetual, if they had kept close to God and their duty.—Henry.

PERIOD OF THE JUDGES.—Ver. 11. Some expositors compute these forty years from the death of Joshua: and consequently suppose, that many of them had passed before Chushan's oppression began; but others reckon them from Othniel's being raised up to judge Israel, which seems the more natural interpretation.—The chronology of this book is, however, so very intricate, that the most learned men differ exceedingly concerning it. In general, we are informed that Solomon, in the fourth year of his reign, laid the foundation of the temple, four hundred and eighty years after Israel came out of Egypt; 1 Kings vi. 1. This was forty-four years after David's accession to the throne, which it will appear could not take place till about sixty years after the death of Eli. From the exodus to the death of Joshua, might be sixty-six years; (though some reckon it only fifty-seven;) and this leaves about three hundred and ten years from the death of Joshua to that of Eli.—Many schemes have been formed for allotting these years, (which some make rather more, and others less,) to the time of the several judges: but none of them give entire satisfaction. It is, however, probable, that the years of oppression generally form a part of the time given to each judge; and that in several instances there were more judges than one employed in different parts of the land. In this case the years assigned to each were coincident; and a few hints of the opinions formed by learned men on the subject will be given as we proceed.

Deborah and Barak deliver Israel from Jabin and Sisera, 1. Jael killeth Sisera, 18.

AND the children of Israel again [a]did evil in the sight of the LORD, when Ehud was dead.

2 And the LORD [b]sold them into the hand of Jabin king of Canaan, that reigned in [c]Hazor; the captain of whose host was [d]Sisera, which dwelt in [e]Harosheth of the Gentiles.

3 And the children of Israel [f]cried unto the LORD: for he had nine hundred [g]chariots of iron; and twenty years he [h]mightily oppressed the children of Israel.

4 ¶ And [i]Deborah, a prophetess,[1] the wife of Lapidoth, she judged Israel at that time.

5 And she dwelt under [k]the palm tree of Deborah, [l]between Ramah and Beth-el in mount Ephraim: and the children of Israel [m]came up to her for judgment.

6 And she sent and called [n]Barak the son of Abinoam out of [o]Kedesh-naphtali, and said unto him, [p]Hath not the LORD God of Israel commanded, saying, Go, and draw toward mount [q]Tabor,[2] and take with thee [r]ten thousand men of the children of Naphtali and of the children of Zebulun?

7 And [s]I will draw unto thee to the river [t]Kishon Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitude; and [u]I will deliver him into thine hand.

8 And Barak said unto her, [v]If thou wilt go with me, then I will go: but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.

9 And she said, I will surely go with thee: [x]notwithstanding the journey that thou takest shall not be for thine honour; for the LORD shall [y]sell Sisera [z]into the hand of a woman. And Deborah arose, and went with Barak to Kedesh.

10 ¶ And Barak called [a]Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedesh; and he went up with ten thousand men [b]at his feet: and Deborah went up with him.

11 Now [c]Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of [d]Hobab the father-in-law of Moses, had severed himself from the Kenites,[3] and pitched his tent unto the plain of [e]Zaanaim, which is by [f]Kedesh.

12 And they shewed Sisera that Barak the son of Abinoam was gone up to [g]mount Tabor.

13 And Sisera *gathered together all his chariots, even [h]nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth of the Gentiles unto the river of Kishon.

14 And Deborah said unto Barak, [i]Up; for this is the day in which the LORD hath delivered[4] Sisera into thine hand: [j]is not the LORD gone out before thee? So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him.

15 And [k]the LORD discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword before Barak; so that Sisera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.

16 But Barak [l]pursued after the chariots, and after the host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles: and all the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword; and there was not [†]a man left.

17 ¶ Howbeit Sisera [m]fled away on his feet to the tent of [n]Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was [o]peace between Jabin the king of Hazor and the house of Heber the Kenite.

18 And Jael went out to meet Sisera, and said unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not. And when he had turned in unto her into the tent, she covered him with a [‡]mantle.

19 And he said unto her, [p]Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink: for I am thirsty. And she opened a bottle of milk,[5] and gave him drink, and covered him.

20 Again he said unto her, Stand in the door of the tent, and it shall be, when any EHUD.—Ver. 15—18. Some suppose that Ehud could use both hands alike well; but if he were unable to use his right hand, as the original words evidently imply, Eglon would be the less apt to suspect him. The Israelites sent their tribute by Ehud under the name of a present, or some oblation above what was exacted in order to obtain favour; and the Lord doubtless directed Ehud to take this opportunity of executing his vengeance on the tyrant. The king of Israel raised up a deliverer, who acted by commission from him: and Eglon had usurped his throne, and was condemned by him to be thus put to death. But Ehud's conduct cannot possibly be drawn into precedent, or authorize the assassination of kings, however tyrannical or persecuting; unless any man were called to act by the same evident commission from the God of heaven.—The law, of being subject to principalities and powers in all things lawful, is the rule of our conduct.—Scott.

SHAMGAR.—God raised Shamgar up to deliver them, as it should seem, while Ehud was yet living, but superannuated. So inconsiderable were the enemies for number, that it seems the killing of six hundred of them amounted to a deliverance of Israel, and so many he slew with an ox-goad, or as some read it, a plough-share. It is probable that he was himself following the plough, when the Philistines made an inroad upon the country to ravage it, and God put it into his heart to oppose them: the impulse being sudden and strong, and having neither sword nor spear to do execution with, he took the instrument that was next at hand, some of the tools of his plough, and with that killed so many hundred men, and came off unhurt. See here, 1. That God can make those eminently serviceable to his glory and his church's good, whose extraction, education, and employment, are very mean and obscure. He that has the residue of the Spirit, could, when he pleased, make ploughmen judges and generals, and fishermen apostles. 2. It is no matter how weak the weapon is, if God direct and strengthen the arm. An ox-goad, when God pleases, shall do more than Goliath's sword. And sometimes he chooses to work by such unlikely means, that the excellency of the power may appear to be of God.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. DEBORAH.—Ver. 4. Deborah, notwithstanding her extraordinary call to judge Israel, could not personally undertake those military expeditions, which generally distinguished these deliverers; but she used her authority to repress iniquity, to reform religion, and to execute impartial justice to the people.—She is called "the wife of Lapidoth;" but the termination of the word is the feminine of the plural, and seldom used for the names of men. Some have therefore supposed it to be the name of the town in which she dwelt, (the woman of Lapidoth;) others refer it, according to the signification of the original word, either to her occupation, as making lamps, or to the inspiration of the Almighty; translating it, "a woman of illuminations:" and others understand it as meaning, that she was an illustrious woman, and a light in Israel. Yet our rendering is most natural. Ver. 5, "Under the palm tree," &c. That is, in some lowly habitation, shaded by a large palm tree, more suited to the sanctity of a prophetess than the dignity of a judge. Her character of a prophetess being established, the people readily referred their differences to her decision; when it is probable the ordinary courts were shut up, and the magistrates deprived of their authority by Jabin's oppression: but perhaps he feared no danger from a woman acting in this capacity. Ver. 6, 7: It is not certain whether Barak had previously been employed by Deborah or not; for he dwelt at a distance from her. But, by direction from God, he was at this time singled out, and commanded whither to go and what troops to raise; and assured of both opportunity to attack and assistance to subdue the enemies of Israel. These orders were sent to him as the commandment of "The LORD God of Israel:" but, under the tyranny of a jealous oppressor, he could draw together an army only by persuasions and exhortations, and thus induce a number of men to assemble at Kedesh, and thence to follow him to Tabor; whither the Lord engaged to draw Sisera, or influence his mind, to meet him.—Scott.

BARAK.—Ver. 6, 7. Barak, it may be, had been meditating some great attempt against the common enemy; a spark of generous fire was glowing in his breast, and fain he would do something to the purpose for his people, and for the cities of his God. But two things discouraged him: 1. He wanted a commission to levy forces; that therefore Deborah here gives him under the broad seal of heaven; which, as a prophetess, she had a warrant to affix to it. "'Hath not the Lord God of Israel commanded it?' Yes, certainly he has, take my word for it." Some think she intends this as an appeal to Barak's own heart: "Has not God, by a secret whisper to thyself, given thee some intimation of his purpose, to make use of thee as an instrument in his hand to save Israel? Hast not thou felt some impulse of this kind upon thine own spirit?" If so, the spirit of prophecy in Deborah confirms the spirit of a soldier in Barak; "Go and draw toward mount Tabor." (1.) She directs him what number of men to raise, ten thousand; and let him not fear that those will be too few, when God hath said, he will by them save Israel. (2.) Whence he should raise them; only out of his own tribe, and that of Zebulun, next adjoining; those two counties should furnish him with an army sufficient, he need not stay to go further. And, lastly, she orders him where to make his rendezvous; at mount Tabor, in his own neighbourhood. 2. When he had an army raised, he knew not how he should have an opportunity of engaging the enemy, who, perhaps, declined fighting, having heard that Israel, if they had but courage enough to

The Song of Deborah and Barak.

THEN [a]sang Deborah and Barak the son of Abinoam on that day, saying,

2 Praise ye the LORD [b]for the avenging of Israel, [c]when the people willingly offered themselves.

3 Hear, [d]O ye kings; give ear, O ye princes; [e]I, even I, will sing unto the LORD; I will sing praise to the LORD God of Israel.

4 LORD, [f]when thou wentest out of Seir, when thou marchedst out of the field of Edom, [g]the earth trembled, and the heavens [h]dropped, the clouds also dropped water.

5 The [1]mountains *melted[1] from before the LORD, even [j]that Sinai from before the LORD God of Israel.

7 The inhabitants of [n]the villages ceased, they ceased in Israel, until that I Deborah arose, that I arose a [o]mother in Israel.

8 They chose [p]new gods; then was war in the gates: [q]was there a shield or spear seen among forty thousand in Israel?

9 My heart is toward the governors of Israel, that [r]offered themselves willingly among the people. Bless ye the LORD.

12 Awake, [a]awake, Deborah: awake, awake, utter a song: arise, Barak, and [b]lead thy captivity captive, thou son of Abinoam.

13 Then [c]he made him that remaineth[4] have dominion over the nobles among the people: the LORD made me have dominion over the mighty.

make head against the enemy, seldom failed of success. "Well," says Deborah, "in the name of God, 'I will draw unto thee Sisera and his army.'" She assures him that the matter should be determined by one pitched battle, and should not be long in the doing.

FALL OF SISERA.—As to this act of Jael's, (like that of Ehud's in the chapter before,) we have reason to think she was conscious of such a divine impulse upon her spirit to do it, as did abundantly satisfy herself (and it ought therefore to satisfy us) that it was well done. God's judgments are a great deep. The instrument of this execution was a nail of the tent, that is, one of the great pins with which the tent, or the stakes of it, were fastened. They often removed their tents; she had been used to drive these nails, and therefore knew how to do it the more dexterously on this great occasion. He that had thought to have destroyed Israel with his many iron chariots, is himself destroyed with one iron nail. Thus do the weak things of the world confound the mighty. See here Jael's glory and Sisera's shame. The great commander dies, 1. In his sleep, fast asleep, and weary. It comes in as a reason why he stirred not to make any resistance. So fettered was he in the chains of sleep, that he could not find his hands. Thus "the stout hearted are spoiled at thy rebuke, O God of Jacob; they are cast into a deep sleep," and so are made to sleep their last, Ps. lxxvi. 5, 6. Let not the strong man then glory in his strength; for when he sleeps, where is it? It is weak, and he can do nothing; a child may insult him then, and steal his life from him; and yet if he sleep not, he is soon spent and weary, and can do nothing neither. These words which we here put in a parenthesis, ("for he was weary,") all the ancient versions read otherwise: "he struggled," (or started, as we say,) "and died;" so the Syriac and Arabic. Exagitans sese mortuus est—He fainted and died; so the Chaldee. "He was darkened and died;" so the LXX. Consocians morte soporem, so the vulgar Latin, joining sleep and death together, seeing they are so near akin. "He fainted and died." He dies, 2. With his head nailed to the ground, an emblem of his earthly mindedness. O curvæ in terram animæ! His ear (says Bishop Hall) was fastened so close to the earth, as if his body had been listening what was become of his soul. He dies, 3. By the hand of a woman. This added to the shame of his death before men; and had he but known it as Abimelech did, chap. ix. 54, we may well imagine how much it would have added to the [illegible] of his own heart.—Henry.

[illegible] by a song. Which is, (1.) A very natural expression of rejoicing: "Is any merry? Let him sing;" and holy joy is the very soul and root of praise and thanksgiving. God is pleased to reckon himself glorified by our joy in him, and in his wondrous works. His servants' joy is his delight, and their songs melody to him. (2.) A very proper expedient for spreading the knowledge and perpetuating the remembrance of great events. Neighbours would learn this song of one another, and children of their parents; and by that means they who had not books, or could not read, yet would be made acquainted with these works of God; and "one generation" would thus "praise God's works to another," and "declare his mighty acts," Ps. cxlv. 4, &c. 2. Deborah herself penned this song, as appears by ver. 7, "Till I Deborah arose." And the first words should be rendered, "Then she sang, even Deborah." She used her gifts as a prophetess in composing the song; and the strain throughout is very fine and lofty, the images lively, the expressions elegant, and an admirable mixture there is in it of sweetness and majesty. No poetry is comparable to the sacred poetry. And we may suppose she used her power as a princess, in obliging the conquering army of Israel to learn and sing this song. She expects not that they should, by their poems, celebrate her praises, and magnify her; but requires, that in this poem they should join with her in celebrating God's praises, and magnifying him. She had been the first wheel in the action, and now is so in the thanksgiving. 8. It was sung on that day, not the very day that the fight was, but on that occasion, and soon after, as soon as a thanksgiving day could conveniently be appointed. When we have received mercy from God, we ought to be speedy in our returns of praise, while the impressions of the mercy are fresh. It is rent to be paid at the day.

CURSE OF MEROZ.—Above all, Meroz is condemned, and a curse pronounced upon the inhabitants of it, "because they came not to the help of the Lord," ver. 23. Probably this was some city that lay near the scene of action, and therefore the inhabitants had a fair opportunity of showing their obedience to God, and their concern for Israel, and of doing good service to the common cause; but they basely declined it, for fear of Jabin's iron chariots, being willing to sleep in a whole skin. The Lord needed not their help; he made it to appear he could do his work without them: but no thanks to them; for aught they knew, the attempt might have miscarried for want of their hand; and therefore they are cursed for "not coming to the help of the Lord," when it was in effect proclaimed, "Who is on the Lord's side?" The cause between God and the mighty (the principalities and powers of the kingdom of darkness) will not admit of neutrality. God looks upon those as against him, that "are not with him." This curse is pronounced by the "Angel of the Lord," our Lord Jesus, the Captain of the Lord's host; (and [illegible] "them [illegible]") and further than we have [illegible]

3 And so it was, [e]when Israel had sown, that the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and [f]the children of the east,[2] even they came up against them;

4 And they encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, [g]till thou come unto Gaza,[3] and [h]left no sustenance for Israel, neither [†]sheep, nor ox, nor ass.

5 For they came up with their cattle, and their [i]tents, and they came [k]as grasshoppers for multitude; for both they and [i]their camels were without number: and they entered into the land [m]to destroy it.

6 And Israel was greatly [n]impoverished because of the Midianites; and the children of Israel [o]cried unto the LORD.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when the children of Israel cried unto the LORD because of the Midianites,

8 That the LORD sent [‡]a prophet unto the children of Israel, which said unto them, [p]Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought you up from Egypt, and brought you forth out of the house of bondage;

9 And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all that oppressed you, and [q]drove them out from before you, and gave you their land;

10 And I said unto you, [r]I am the LORD your God; [s]fear not the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell: but [t]ye have not obeyed my voice.

11 ¶ And there came [u]an angel[4] of the LORD and sat under an oak which was in Ophrah, that pertained unto Joash the [x]Abiezrite; and his son [y]Gideon thrashed[5] wheat by the winepress, to [§]hide it from the Midianites.

12 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto him, and said unto him, [z]The LORD is with thee, thou mighty man of valour.

13 And Gideon said unto him, Oh my Lord, [a]if the LORD be with us, [b]why then is all this befallen us? and where be all his miracles which [c]our fathers told us of, saying, Did not the LORD bring us up from Egypt? but now the LORD hath [d]forsaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites.

14 And [e]the LORD looked upon him, and said, [f]Go in this thy might,[6] and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites: have not I sent thee?

15 And he said unto him, O my Lord, [g]wherewith shall I save Israel? behold, [h]my [i]family is poor in Manasseh, and I am [i]the least in my father's house.

16 And the LORD said unto him, [j]Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man.

17 And he said unto him, [k]If now I have found grace in thy sight, then [l]shew me a sign that thou talkest with me.

18 Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I come unto thee, and [m]bring forth my [*]present,[7] and set it before thee. And he said, I will tarry until thou come again.

19 And Gideon went in, and [n]made ready [†]a kid, and [o]unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour: the flesh he put in a basket, and he put the broth in a pot, and brought it out unto him under the oak, and presented it.

20 And the angel of God said unto him, Take the flesh and the unleavened cakes, and [p]lay them upon this rock, and [q]pour out the broth. And he did so.

21 Then the angel of the LORD put forth the end of the staff that was in his hand, and touched the flesh and the unleavened cakes; and there [r]arose up fire out of the rock, and consumed the flesh and the unleavened cakes. Then the angel of the LORD departed [§]out of his sight.

22 And when Gideon [e]perceived that he was an angel of the LORD, Gideon said, Alas, from him, we may not curse. He that will richly reward all his good soldiers, will certainly and severely punish all cowards and deserters. This city of Meros seems to have been at this time a considerable place, since something great was expected from it; but, probably, after the Angel of the Lord had pronounced this curse upon it, it dwindled, and, like the fig-tree which Christ cursed, withered away, so that we never read of it after this in the Scripture.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When we rehearse the righteous, faithful, and merciful acts of the Lord, we should also bear true respect and affection, and give due commendation to those who have been his willing messengers of kindness to us, and should recompense them with our fervent prayers for his blessing on them; and while he needs no human help, he is pleased to employ, and accept the services, of those who in their several stations improve their talents to advance his cause; nay, he requires every man to do this, and will call those to a severe account who neglect or evade his service.—The higher any man is advanced in Providence, the more forward ought he to be in promoting the public good, and in stirring up others, by his example, influence, and authority, to do the same; not deeming the high praises of God unbecoming the bench, the senate, or the throne, or unseasonable in the most ordinary conversation with strangers; nay, even with the nobles of the earth.—They who would do good must shake off sloth, renounce indulgence, and learn to be active and endure hardship. On some occasions they may be called to "jeopardy their lives in the high places of the field;" at all times to sacrifice many personal interests for the public good; and by so doing, to incur the reproach and censure of a misjudging world. Most men will therefore excuse themselves; and whilst they are averse to the cross, and disaffected to the cause of God, they will find apologies for their conduct from the variety of their secular engagements and avocations. But they who temporize in a matter which admits not of neutrality, are numbered among his enemies; and whilst they grieve and discourage the hearts of others, bring heavy wrath upon themselves. Indeed, power and preeminence at present seem to be on their side, and the servants of God are poor, despised, and afflicted; but the tables will soon be turned, and the feeblest believer shall "tread down strength," and exercise dominion over the mightiest of the wicked.—When the Almighty "arises to judgment, to help all the meek upon earth," and to avenge the cause of his people, the whole creation wages war against his enemies; "the stars in their courses," the elements melting with fervent heat, and all the hosts in heaven, shall concur in their destruction.—Scott.

GIDEON.—Gideon was a mighty man of valour, but as yet weak in faith, which makes it hard to him to reconcile the assurances now given him of the presence of God. 1. The distress to which Israel was reduced; Why is all this (and all this was no little) befallen us? Note, It is sometimes hard, but never impossible, to reconcile cross providences with the presence of God and his favour. 2. The delay of their deliverance; "'Where are all the miracles which our fathers told us of?' Why does not the same power which delivered our fathers from the yoke of the Egyptians, deliver us out of the hands of the Midianites?" As if, because God did not immediately work miracles for their deliverance, though they had by their sins forfeited his favour and help, it must be questioned whether ever he had wrought the miracles which their fathers told them of, or if he had, whether he had now the same wisdom and power and good-will to his people, that he had had formerly.

O Lord God! for [p]because I have seen an angel of the Lord face to face.

23 And the Lord said unto him, [q]Peace be unto thee; fear not: thou shalt not die.

24 Then Gideon [r]built an altar there unto the Lord, and called it [t]Jehovah-shalom: unto this day it is yet in [s]Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

25 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that the Lord said unto him, [t]Take thy father's young bullock, [$]even the second bullock of seven years old, and [u]throw down the altar of Baal that [x]thy father hath, and [y]cut down the grove that is by it:

26 And [z]build an altar unto the Lord thy God upon the top of this [!]rock, in [*]the ordered place, and take the second bullock, and offer a burnt-sacrifice with the wood of the grove which thou shalt cut down.

27 Then Gideon took ten men of his servants, [a]and did as the Lord had said unto him: and so it was, because he feared his father's household, and the men of the city, that he could not do it by day, that [b]he did it by night.

28 ¶ And when the men of the city arose early in the morning, behold, the altar of Baal was cast down, and the grove was cut down that was by it, and the second bullock was offered upon the altar[9] that was built.

29 And they said one to another, Who hath done this thing? And when they enquired and asked, they said, Gideon the son of Joash hath done this thing.

30 Then the men of the city said unto Joash, [c]Bring out thy son, that he may die: because he hath cast down the altar of Baal, and because he hath cut down the grove that was by it.

31 And Joash said unto all that stood against him, [d]Will ye plead for Baal? will ye save him? he that will plead for him, [e]let him be put to death whilst it is yet morning: [f]if he be a god, let him plead for himself, because one hath cast down his altar.

32 Therefore on that day he called him [†]Jerubbaal, saying, Let Baal plead against him, because he hath thrown down his altar.

33 ¶ Then [$]all the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and the [h]children of the east were gathered together, and [i]went over, and pitched in [k]the valley of Jezreel.[10]

34 But [l]the Spirit of the Lord[11] [‡]came upon Gideon, and he [m]blew a trumpet; and [n]Abi-ezer was [§]gathered after him.

35 And he sent [°]messengers throughout all Manasseh; who also was gathered after him: and he sent messengers unto Asher, and unto Zebulun, and unto Naphtali; and they came up to meet them.

36 ¶ And Gideon said unto God, [p]If thou wilt save Israel by mine hand, as thou hast said, 37 [q]Behold,[12] I will put a fleece of wool in the floor; and if the dew be on the fleece [r]only, and it be dry upon all the earth beside, then shall I know that thou wilt save Israel by mine hand, as thou hast said.

38 And it was so: for he rose up early on the morrow, and thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of the fleece, a bowl full of water.[13]

39 And Gideon said unto God, [s]Let not thine anger be hot against me, and I will speak but this once: let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be [t]dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew.

40 And God did so that night: for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

Gideon's army, 1; he is encouraged by the dream and interpretation of the barley-cake, 9. Oreb and Zeeb, 24.

THEN [a]Jerubbaal, who is Gideon, and all the people that were with him, [b]rose up early, and pitched beside the well of Harod: [1] so that the host of the Midianites were on the north side of them, by the hill of [c]Moreh, in the valley.

2 And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people that are with thee are [d]too many, for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest [e]Israel vaunt themselves[2] against me, saying, [f]Mine own hand hath saved me.

3 Now therefore, go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, saying, [g]Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return, and depart early from mount Gilead. And there returned of the people [h]twenty and two thousand, and there remained ten thousand.

4 And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people are yet too many; bring them down unto the water, and [i]I will try them for thee there; and it shall be, that of whom I say unto thee, This shall go with thee, the same shall go with thee; and of whomsoever I say unto thee, This shall not go with thee, the same shall not go.

5 So he brought down the people unto the water: and the Lord said unto Gideon, Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, him shalt thou set by himself; likewise every one that boweth down upon his knees to drink.

6 And the number of them that lapped, putting their hand to their mouth, were three hundred men: but all the rest of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water.

ment are completed: no, nor that the mercies God showed to our fathers that served him, and kept close to him, should be renewed to us, if we degenerate and revolt from him. Gideon ought to have said, either, (1.) That "God had delivered them into the hands of the Midianites," for by their iniquities they had sold themselves: or, (2.) That now they were in their hands, that he had forsaken them, for he had lately sent them a prophet, ver. 8, which was a certain indication that he had not forsaken them. The angel gave him a very effectual answer to his objections, by giving him a commission to deliver Israel out of the hands of the Midianites, and assuring him of success therein, ver. 14.

Gideon's Altar.—The memorial of the vision which Gideon set up, was a monument in form of an altar, the rather, because it was by a kind of sacrifice upon a rock, without the solemnity of an altar, that the angel manifested his acceptance of him: then it needed not; the angel's staff was sufficient to sanctify the gift without an altar; but it was of use to preserve the remembrance of it, which was done by the name he gave to it, Jehovah-shalom, ver. 24, The Lord peace. This is 1. The title of the Lord that spake to him; compare Gen. xvi. 13. The same that is the "Lord our Righteousness is our Peace," Eph. ii. 14, our Reconciler, and so our Saviour. Or, 2. The substance of what he said to him; "'The Lord spake peace,' and created that fruit of the lips; bade me be easy when I was in that agitation." Or, 3. A prayer grounded upon what he had said; so the margin understands it: "The Lord send peace," that is, rest from the present trouble; for still the public welfare lay nearest his heart.—Henry.

Gideon's First Commission.—Ver. 25, 26. Our translation supposes, that only one bullock was sacrificed: yet the term, "the second bullock," seems to imply that two were appointed. It does not, however, appear when, or how, the first bullock, if two were meant, was offered. "This second bullock of seven years old," (the same number as the years of Israel's oppression,) seems to have been fattened on purpose for a public sacrifice to Baal. Before he offered the sacrifice, Gideon was directed to "throw down the altar which his father had for the worship of Baal; and to cut down the grove," and thus to declare open war against idolatry, before he attacked the enemies of his people: regarding the honour and command of God, more than the authority or credit of his father; which probably had hitherto made him satisfy himself with silent disapprobation. Some think that the word rendered grove, means an image of Ashtaroth, which was cut in pieces, and burned as fuel in consuming the sacrifice offered to Jehovah. Gideon was not a priest, or even a Levite; but he acted by extraordinary commission, as a prophet. Sacrificing also was generally restricted to the altar at Shiloh: yet on this occasion the Lord was pleased to dispense with the ritual appointment; and even to command and accept a sacrifice offered with those things which had been employed in idolatry: for it was of great importance, that a protest against the worship of Baal, and an avowal of Jehovah as the only true God, should introduce Israel's deliverance.—Scott.

Gideon's Sign—The Fleece.—Observe, 1. His request for a sign, ver. 36, 37; "Let me by this 'know that thou wilt save Israel by my hand;' let 'a fleece of wool,' spread in the open air, be 'wet with the dew,' and let the ground about it be dry." The purport of this is, "Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief." He found his own faith weak and wavering, and therefore begged of God by this sign to perfect what was lacking in it. We may suppose God, who intended to give him these signs, for the glorifying of his own power and goodness, put it into his heart to ask them. Yet, when he repeated his request for a second sign, the reverse of the former, he did it with a very humble apology, deprecating God's displeasure, because it looked so like a peevish humoursome distrust of God, and dissatisfaction with the many assurances he had already given him, ver. 39. "Let not thine anger be hot against me." Though he took the boldness to ask another sign, yet he did it with such fear and trembling, as showed that the familiarity God had graciously admitted him to, did not breed any contempt of God's glory, or presumption on God's goodness. Abraham had given him an example of this, when God gave him leave to be very free with him, Gen. xviii. 30, 32. "O let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak." God's favour must be sought with great reverence, due sense of our distance, and a religious fear of his wrath. 2. God's gracious grant of his request. See how tender God is of true believers though they be weak, and how ready to condescend to their infirmities, that the bruised reed may not be broken, nor the smoking flax quenched. Gideon would have the fleece wet, and the ground dry; but then, lest any should object, "It is natural for wool, if ever so little moisture fall, to drink it in, and retain it, and therefore there was nothing extraordinary in that;" though the quantity wrung out was sufficient to obviate that objection, yet he desires that next night the ground might be wet and the fleece dry; and so willing is God to "give to the heirs of promise strong consolation," Heb. vi. 17, 18, even by two immutable things. He suffers himself, not only to be prevailed with by their importunities, but even to be prescribed to by their doubts and dissatisfactions.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. Gideon's Experiment upon his Army.—Ver. 2, 3. Gideon either forgot the law, which ordered proclamation to be made before the battle, for the fearful and some others to return home: or he thought it might be dispensed with on so urgent an occasion. But the Lord knew that pride and unbelief prevailed in the army. The people had readily enlisted at first: but when they saw the vast multitude of the 7 And the LORD said unto Gideon, [k]By the three hundred men that lapped will I save you, and deliver the Midianites into thine hand: and let all the other people go every man unto his place.

8 So the people took victuals in their hand, and their [l]trumpets: and he sent all the rest of Israel every man unto his tent, and retained those three hundred men: and the host of Midian was beneath him [m]in the valley.[3]

9 ¶ And it came to pass [n]the same night, that the LORD said unto him, [o]Arise, get thee down unto the host; for [p]I have delivered it into thine hand.

10 But [q]if thou fear to go down, go thou with Phurah thy servant down to the host:

11 And [r]thou shalt hear what they say; and afterward shall [s]thine hands be strengthened to go down unto the host. Then went he down with Phurah his servant unto the outside of the *armed men that were in the host.

12 And [t]the Midianites and the Amalekites and all the children of the east lay along in the valley like [u]grasshoppers for multitude; and their camels were without number, as the sand by the sea side for multitude.

13 And when Gideon was come, behold, there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow, and said, Behold, I dreamed a dream, and, [x]lo, a cake of barley bread tumbled into the host of Midian, and came unto a tent, and smote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the tent lay along.

14 And [y]his fellow answered and said, This is nothing else, save the sword of Gideon the son of Joash, a man of Israel: for [z]into his hand hath God delivered Midian, and all the host.

15 And it was so, when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the [†]interpretation thereof, that he [a]worshipped, and returned into the host of Israel, and said, [b]Arise; for the LORD hath delivered into your hand the host of Midian.

16 ¶ And he divided the three hundred men into three companies, and he put [‡]a trumpet in every man's hand, with [c]empty pitchers,[4] and [§]lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he said unto them, [d]Look on me, and do likewise: and, behold, when I come to the outside of the camp, it shall be that, as I do, so shall ye do.

18 When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, then [e]blow ye the trumpets also on every side of all the camp, and say, [f]The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.[5]

19 ¶ So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came unto the outside of the camp [g]in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly set the watch: and they blew the trumpets, and [h]brake the pitchers that were in their hands.

20 And the three companies [i]blew the trumpets, and [k]brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal: and they cried, The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

21 And they [l]stood every man in his place round about the camp: and [m]all the host ran, and cried, and fled.

22 And the three hundred blew the trumpets, and [n]the LORD set every man's sword against his fellow, even throughout all the host: and the host fled to Beth-shittah[6] [o]in Zererath, and to the *border of [p]Abel-meholah unto Tabbath.

23 And [q]the men of Israel gathered themselves together out of Naphtali, and out of Asher, and out of all Manasseh, and pursued after the Midianites.

24 ¶ And Gideon [r]sent messengers throughout all mount Ephraim, saying, Come down against the Midianites, and [s]take before them the waters unto [t]Beth-barah and Jordan.[7] Then all the men of Ephraim gathered themselves together, and took the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan.

25 And they took [u]two princes of the Midianites, Oreb and Zeeb; and they slew Oreb upon the [v]rock Oreb, and Zeeb they slew at the winepress of Zeeb, and pursued Midian, and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon [x]on the other side Jordan.

Midianites, their courage sunk: and yet, had they prevailed, they would have vaunted, and ascribed the victory to their own valour, and not to the special help of God! Most of them were destitute of faith, and many doubtless disheartened with a guilty conscience. They thought that instead of too many they were too few; and the greater part of them availed themselves of the proclamation, and went home.—Mount Gilead here mentioned must have been some mountain of that name west of Jordan, of less note than Mount Gilead which lay east of that river. Ver. 4—7. Some of the soldiers that still remained were not so courageous as they would be thought: but Gideon had done his part in that respect: and it pleased the Lord himself to prove and purify the company by an extraordinary expedient. Perhaps they were led to the water after the fatigue of a long march, under the idea that they were going directly to attack the enemy. It seems to have been customary for them to drink as the cattle do, by putting their mouths down to the water, and drawing it in: but they who only took a little into their hands and sucked it up, (as dogs are remarked to lap a little water hastily,) might be supposed to be less enslaved to their appetite, more able to endure hardship, and more eager to engage.—It may be supposed that most of this very small company by whom God was pleased to save Israel, were men of genuine faith and piety, as well as of steady courage. Ver. 8: This small company seems to have retained nothing but present necessary provisions, and perhaps all the trumpets which belonged to the whole army, without any other arms!

THE ATTACK.—Ver. 16—22. This small number of men thus divided would be able to encompass the whole camp of the Midianites. Concealing the lamps in the pitchers, they would pass unobserved to their appointed stations: then, in the dead of the night, when most of the enemy were fast asleep, all at once breaking their pitchers one against another, with as much noise as they could; and blowing the trumpets, and shouting "The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon," they would occasion an exceedingly great alarm. And their enemies, thus awakened and affrighted, hearing the continued sound of many trumpets, and seeing the camp surrounded with lights, would in their confusion naturally conclude themselves surprised by a large army; so that, perceiving the lamps and trumpets still keeping their stations, they would be likely to suspect that the enemy was even now in the camp. And in the dark they would [illegible] of one another, the first whom each had by mistake been slain by their companions at a distance; [illegible] would become general; until, [illegible] easily conceive, [illegible] fellow; nay, the obedience of faith alone could have induced so defenceless a company to venture on such an expedient, which no doubt God directed Gideon to employ —Scott.

THE VICTORY.—"All the host" immediately took the alarm; it flew like lightning through all the lines, and "they ran, and cried, and fled," ver. 21. There was something natural in this fright; we may suppose they had not had intelligence of the great diminution of Gideon's army, but rather concluded that, since their last advices, it had been growing greater and greater; and therefore had reason to suspect, knowing how odious and grievous they had made themselves, and what bold steps had been taken toward the throwing off of their yoke, that it was a very great army which was to be ushered in with all those trumpeters and torchbearers: but there was more of a supernatural power impressing this terror upon them; God himself gave it the setting on, to show how that promise should have been fulfilled if they had not forfeited it, "One of you shall chase a thousand." See the power of imagination, and how much it may become a terror at some times, as at other times it is a pleasure. They fell foul upon one another; ver. 22, "The Lord set every man's sword against his fellow." In this confusion, observing the trumpeters and torch-bearers to stand still without their camp, they concluded the body of the army had already entered, and therefore every one ran at the next he met, though a friend, supposing him an enemy; and one such mistake so that would occasion many, for then he that slew him would certainly be taken for an enemy, and would be despatched immediately. It is our interest to preserve such a command of our own spirits, as never to "be afraid with any amazement," for we cannot conceive what mischiefs we thereby plunge ourselves in. See also how God often makes the enemies of his church instruments to destroy one another; it is [illegible] the church's friends should ever be thus infatuated.—Henry.

I am pursuing after Zebah and Zalmunna, kings of Midian.

6 And the princes of Succoth said, [1]Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread unto thine army?

7 And Gideon said, Therefore when the LORD hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into mine hand, then I will [s]tear your flesh with the thorns of the wilderness, and with briers.[2]

8 And he went up thence to [k]Penuel, and spake unto them likewise: and the men of Penuel answered him as the men of Succoth had answered him.

9 And he spake also unto the men of Penuel, saying, When [l]I come again in peace, [m]I will break down this tower.[3]

10 ¶ Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor, and their hosts with them, about fifteen thousand men, all that were left of all the hosts of [n]the children of the east: for there [o]fell [l]an hundred and twenty thousand men that drew sword.

11 And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents on the east of [p]Nobah and Jogbehah, and smote the host: for the host was [q]secure.

12 And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, he pursued after them, and [r]took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and [*]discomfited all the host.

13 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash returned from battle before the sun was up,

14 And [s]caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and enquired of him: and he [†]described unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even threescore and seventeen men.

15 And he came unto the men of Succoth, and said, Behold Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye did [t]upbraid me, saying, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread unto thy men that are weary?

16 And he took [u]the elders of the city, and [x]thorns of the wilderness and briers, and with them he [‡]taught[4] the men of Succoth.

17 And [y]he beat down the tower of Penuel, and slew the men of the city.

18 ¶ Then said he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye slew at [z]Tabor? And they answered, [a]As thou art, so were they; each one [§]resembled the children of a king.

19 And he said, They were my brethren, even the sons of my mother: as the LORD liveth, if ye had saved them alive,[5] I would not slay you.

20 And he said unto Jether his first-born, [b]Up, and slay them. But the youth drew not his sword: for he feared, because he was yet a youth.

21 Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, [c]Rise thou, and fall upon us: for as the man is, so is his strength. And Gideon arose, and [d]slew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the [l]ornaments that were on their camels' necks.

22 ¶ Then the men of Israel said unto Gideon, [e]Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy son, and thy son's son also: for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian.

23 And Gideon said unto them, [f]I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you: [g]the LORD shall rule over you.

24 And Gideon said unto them, I would desire a request of you, that ye would [h]give me every man the earrings of his prey. (For they had golden earrings, [i]because they were Ishmaelites.)[6]

25 And they answered, We will willingly give them. And they spread a garment, and did cast therein every man the earrings of his prey.

26 And the weight of the golden earrings that he requested was a thousand and seven hundred shekels of gold; beside ornaments, and [*]collars, and [k]purple raiment[7] that was on the kings of Midian, and beside the [l]chains[8] that were about their camels' necks.

27 And Gideon made [m]an ephod thereof, and put it in his city, even in [n]Ophrah: and all Israel went thither [o]a whoring after it: which thing became [p]a snare unto Gideon, and to his house.

28 ¶ Thus [q]was Midian subdued before the children of Israel, so that they lifted up their heads no more. And the country was in quietness [r]forty years in the days of Gideon.

29 ¶ And [s]Jerubbaal the son of Joash went and dwelt [t]in his own house.

30 And Gideon had [u]threescore and ten sons [†]of his body begotten: for he had [x]many wives.

31 And his [y]concubine that was in Shechem, she also bare him a son, whose name he [‡]called [z]Abimelech.

32 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash [a]died in a good old age, and was buried in the sepulchre of Joash his father, in [b]Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

33 And it came to pass, [c]as soon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Israel turned again, and [d]went a whoring after Baalim, and made [e]Baal-berith their god.

34 And the children of Israel [f]remembered not the LORD their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every side:

35 Neither [g]shewed they kindness to the house of Jerubbaal, namely, Gideon, according to all the goodness which he had shewed unto Israel.

way or other he "tore their flesh," ver. 7. Those shall have judgment without mercy that have showed no mercy. Perhaps he observed them to be soft and delicate men, who despised him and his company for their roughness and hardiness, and therefore Gideon thus mortified them for their effeminacy. (2.) He instructed their minds; with these "he taught the men of Succoth," ver. 16. Note, Many are taught with the briers and thorns of affliction, that would not learn otherwise. God gives wisdom by the rod and reproof, chastens and teaches, and by correction opens the ear of discipline. Our blessed Saviour, though he were a Son, yet "learned obedience by the things which he suffered," Heb. v. 8. Let every pricking brier, and grieving thorn, especially when it becomes a thorn in the flesh, be thus interpreted, thus improved, "By this God designs to teach me; what good lessons shall I learn?" 2. Penuel's doom comes next, and it should seem he used them more severely than the other, for good reason, no doubt, ver. 17. (1.) He "beat down their tower," of which they gloried, in which they trusted, perhaps scornfully advising Gideon and his men rather to secure themselves in that, than to pursue the Midianites. What men make their pride, the ruin of it is justly made their shame. (2.) He "slew the men of the city," not all, perhaps not the elders or princes, but those that had affronted him, and those only. He slew some of the men of the city that were most insolent and abusive, for terror to the rest, and "so he taught the men of Penuel."

GIDEON'S REFUSAL OF A CROWN.—It was honourable in him to refuse it, ver. 23, "I will not rule over you." What he did was with a design to serve them, not to rule them; to make them safe, easy, and happy, not to make himself great or honourable. And as he was not ambitious of grandeur himself, so he did not covet to entail it upon his family, "'My son shall not rule over you,' either while I live, or when I am gone, 'but the Lord shall' still 'rule over you,' and constitute your judges by the special designation of his own Spirit, as he has done." This intimates, 1. His modesty, and the mean opinion he had of himself and his own merits. He thought the honour of doing good was recompense enough for all his services, which needed not to be rewarded with the honour of bearing sway: "He that is greatest, let him be your minister." 2. His piety, and the great opinion he had of God's government. Perhaps he discerned in the people a [illegible] of the theocracy, or divine government, a desire of a king like the nations; and [illegible] have regarded a seasonable protest to move for this change of government [illegible] by [illegible] which [illegible] No good man can be pleased with any [illegible] displeased. "Were ye baptized in [illegible] like that worn by the high priest; and some think that Gideon also made "a breastplate of judgment," in order to inquire of God by it; nay, that other things requisite were added, and sacrifices offered at Ophrah; else it is difficult to discover how so much treasure could have been expended. Gideon had been commanded, in an extraordinary manner, to offer a sacrifice in the place where the Lord appeared to him; and it is not improbable he might be led to conclude, that this authorized him to officiate as priest occasionally at his own house, without going to the tabernacle; and perhaps this gratified the people's humour and love of ease. But whether this was the case, or whether he merely intended to form a memorial of his victory, his conduct was evidently improper, and proved a snare to him, the cause of his family's ruin, and an occasion of idolatry to Israel after his death.—Scott.

GIDEON'S DEATH.—We have here the conclusion of the story of Gideon. 1. He lived privately, ver. 29; he was not puffed up with his great honours, did not covet a palace or castle to dwell in, but retired to the house he had lived in before his elevation. Thus that brave Roman who was called from the plough upon a sudden occasion to command the army, when the action was over, returned to his plough again. 2. His family was multiplied. He had many wives; (therein he transgressed the law;) by them he had seventy sons, ver. 30, but one by a concubine, whom he named Abimelech, which signifies, my father a king, that proved the ruin of his family, ver. 31. 3. He died in honour, in a good old age, when he had lived as long as he was capable of serving God and his country; and who would desire to live any longer? And he was "buried in the sepulchre of his fathers."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—17. It is one vanity incident to human affairs, that "for every right work a man is envied by his neighbour."—They who will not attempt or venture any thing in the cause of God, are commonly the most ready to censure such as are of a more zealous and enterprising spirit: the charge of pride and ambition will be brought against the most unexceptionable undertakings: when calumny is silenced in one respect by the event, it will assume another form; and they who were most reluctant to the peril and hardship of difficult services, will be the most exasperated if excluded from the credit of them. But, "only by pride cometh contention;" it is the wisdom of Christians to turn away wrath by a soft answer; and their most noble victory is the conquest of their own spirits. In those things which pertain to the truth, [illegible] ity, and glory of God, they should be unmoved as the sturdy oak; but, in the [illegible] cause of their own interest or reputation, they should resemble the [illegible] to every gust. [illegible] shadow over what else [illegible] [illegible] which he has done by others, or by [illegible]

AND [a]Abimelech the son of Jerubbaal went to [b]Shechem unto his mother's brethren, and [c]communed with them, and with all the family of the house of his mother's father, saying,

2 Speak, I pray you, in the ears of all the men of Shechem, [*]Whether is better for you, either that all the sons of Jerubbaal, which are [d]threescore and ten persons, reign over you, or that one reign over you? remember also that I am [e]your bone and your flesh.

3 And his mother's brethren [f]spake of him in the ears of all the men of Shechem all these words: and their hearts inclined [†]to follow Abimelech; for they said, He is [g]our brother.

4 And they gave him threescore and ten pieces of silver out of [h]the house of Baal-berith,[1] wherewith Abimelech hired [i]vain and light persons, which followed him.

5 And he went unto his father's house [k]at Ophrah, and [l]slew his brethren the sons of Jerubbaal, being threescore and ten persons,[2] upon one stone: notwithstanding yet Jotham the youngest son of Jerubbaal was left; for he hid himself.

6 And all the men of Shechem gathered together, and all the [m]house of Millo, and went, and made Abimelech king, by the [‡]plain of the pillar that was in Shechem.

7 ¶ And when they told it to Jotham, he went and stood in the top of [n]mount Gerizim, and lifted up his voice, and cried, and said unto them, [o]Hearken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you.

8 [p]The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them; and they said unto the olive tree, [q]Reign thou over us.

9 But the olive tree said unto them, Should I leave my fatness, [r]wherewith by me they honour God and man, and go [s]to be promoted over the trees?

10 And the trees said to the fig tree, Come thou, and reign over us.

11 But the fig tree said unto them, [t]Should I forsake my sweetness, and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the trees?

12 Then said the trees unto the vine, Come thou, and reign over us.

13 And the vine said unto them, Should I leave my wine, which [u]cheereth God and man,[3] and go to be promoted over the trees?

CHAP. IX. ABIMELECH'S AMBITION AND CRUELTY.—See here, 1. How Abimelech wheedled the Shechemites into the choice, ver. 2, 3. He basely suggested that Gideon having left seventy sons that made a good figure and had a good interest, they were designing to keep the power which their father had, in their hands, and by a joint influence to reign over Israel; "Now," says he, "you had better have one king than more, than many, than so many. Affairs of state are best managed by a single person," ver. 2. We have no reason to think that all or any of Gideon's sons had the least intention to reign over Israel, (they were of their father's mind, that "the Lord should reign over them," and they were not called of him,) yet this he insinuates, to pave the way to his own pretensions. Note, Those who design ill themselves, are commonly most apt to suspect that others design ill. As for himself, he only puts them in mind of his relation to them. Verbum sapienti—A word to the wise is sufficient; remember that I am your bone and your flesh. The plot took wonderfully. The magistrates of Shechem were pleased to think of their city being a royal city, and the metropolis of Israel, and therefore they "inclined to follow him, for they said, 'He is our brother,' and his advancement will be our advantage." 2. How he got money from them to bear the charges of his pretensions, ver. 4. They "gave him seventy pieces of silver;" it is not said what the value of these pieces was; so many shekels was less, and so many talents more, than we can well imagine; therefore it is supposed they were each a pound weight: but they gave it out of the house of Baal-berith, that is, out of the public treasury, which, out of respect to their idol, they deposited in his temple to be protected by him; or, out of the offerings that had been made to that idol, which they hoped would prosper the better in his hands for its having been consecrated to their god. How unfit was he to reign over Israel, because unlikely to defend them, who, instead of restraining and punishing idolatry, thus early made himself a pensioner to an idol! 3. What soldiers he enlisted; he hired into his service vain and light persons, the scum and scoundrels of the country, men of broken fortunes, giddy heads, and profligate lives; none but such would own him, and they were fittest to serve his purposes. Like leader, like followers. How cruelly he got his father's sons out of the way. The first thing he did with the rabble he headed, was, to kill all his brethren at once, publicly, and in cold blood, threescore and ten men, one only escaping, all slain upon one stone. See in this bloody tragedy, (1.) The power of ambition, what beasts it will turn men into, how it will break through all the ties of natural affection and natural conscience, and sacrifice that which is most sacred, dear, and valuable, to its designs. Strange that ever it should enter into the heart of a man to be so very barbarous! (2.) The peril of honour and high birth. Their being the sons of so great a man as Gideon, exposed them thus, and made Abimelech jealous of them. We find just the same number of Ahab's sons slain together at Samaria, 2 Kings x. 1, 7. The grand Seigniors have seldom thought themselves safe while any of their brethren have been unstrangled. Let none envy those of high extraction, or complain of their own meanness and obscurity. The lower, the safer.—Henry.

THE FIRST PARABLE.—Ver. 8—15. A parable, or fable, is a descriptive picture, which shows the similitude of an event, or action, in lively colours; and conveys to the mind the perception of some important truth, to which it was previously inattentive, or against which it was prejudiced. By this management those things are placed in a proper light, which before was misapprehended, and those made evident which before seemed doubtful; the subject is stripped of such circumstances as do not properly belong to it; the trouble of a long chain of arguments being spared, the cause is brought to a compendious decision; reason and conscience are induced to pass sentence, before self-love is consulted; and a man is for a moment, as it were, "imposed on, in order to his being profitably undeceived;" he is made judge in his own cause before he is aware, and decides against himself without ever intending it. The truth of a parable lies in the instruction contained in it: and the feigned circumstances, being known to be such, are no ways inconsistent with veracity, but greatly subserve the cause of truth; conveying it in an unsuspected and agreeable manner to the mind. Parables or fables have therefore been much used by wise men in all ages, as the most advantageous method of teaching mankind the salutary lessons of justice and prudence; and they were abundantly sanctioned by our Lord's own example.—In this parable of Jotham, the folly and ingratitude of the Shechemites, in making the basest of Gideon's sons their king, and in murdering the rest; the presumption and arrogance of Abimelech in aspiring to such an honour; and the consequences of so unreasonable a procedure, are represented with great ingenuity and simplicity. The olive-tree, the fig-tree, and the vine, had excellency and usefulness, if the trees had indeed wanted a king: thus Gideon and his other sons were worthy of Israel's suffrage, if there had been any occasion to set a king over them; yet they had humbly and wisely declined the offer. But Abimelech, the son of a slave and a concubine, a mean and worthless person, useless and troublesome as a bramble, had by insinuation induced them to offer him the kingdom, and had without Jerubbaal? and Zebul his officer? Serve the men of [q]Hamor the father of Shechem: for why should we serve him?

29 And [r]would to God this people were under my hand! then would I remove Abimelech. And he said to Abimelech, [s]Increase thine army, and come out.

30 ¶ And when Zebul[8] the ruler of the city heard the words of Gaal the son of Ebed, his anger was [$]kindled.

31 And he sent messengers unto Abimelech [t]privily, saying, Behold, Gaal the son of Ebed and his brethren be come to Shechem; and, behold, they fortify the city against thee.

32 Now therefore up [t]by night, thou and the people that is with thee, and lie in wait in the field:

33 And it shall be, that in the morning, as soon as the sun is up, thou shalt rise early, and set upon the city: and, behold, when he and the people that is with him come out against thee, then mayest thou do to them [*]as thou shalt find occasion.

34 ¶ And Abimelech rose up, and all the people that were with him, by night, and they laid wait against Shechem in four companies.[9]

35 And Gaal the son of Ebed went out, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city: and Abimelech rose up, and [u]the people that were with him, from lying in wait.

36 And when Gaal saw the people, he said to Zebul, Behold, there come people down from the top of the mountains. And Zebul said unto him, Thou [x]seest the shadow of the mountains as if they were men.

37 And Gaal spake again and said, See there come people down by the [†]middle of the land, and another company come along by the plain of [‡]Meonenim.[10]

38 Then said Zebul unto him, [y]Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou saidst, Who is Abimelech, that we should serve him? Is not this the people that thou hast despised? go out, I pray now, and fight with them.

39 And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem, and fought with Abimelech.

40 And Abimelech chased him, and [z]he fled before him, and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entering of the gate.

41 And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah:[11] and [a]Zebul thrust out Gaal and his brethren, that they should not dwell in Shechem.

42 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the people went out into the field;[12] and they told Abimelech.

43 And he took the people, and divided them into three companies, and laid wait in the field, and looked, and, behold, the people were come forth out of the city; and he rose up against them, and smote them.

44 And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, [b]rushed forward, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city: and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the fields, and slew them.

45 And Abimelech fought against the city all that day; and he took the city, and slew the people that was therein, and [c]beat down the city, and sowed it with salt.[13]

46 ¶ And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard that, they entered into [d]an hold of the house of the god Berith.

47 And it was told Abimelech, that all the men of the tower of Shechem were gathered together.

48 And Abimelech gat him up to mount [e]Zalmon,[14] he and all the people that were with him; and Abimelech took an axe in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his shoulder, and said unto the people that were with him, [f]What ye have seen [$]me do, make haste, and do as I have done.

49 And all the people likewise cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech, and [g]put them to the hold, and set the hold on fire upon them; so that all the men of the tower of Shechem died also, about a thousand men and women.

50 ¶ Then went Abimelech to Thebez,[15] and encamped against Thebez, and took it.

51 But there was a strong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.

52 And [h]Abimelech came unto the tower, and fought against it, and went hard unto the door of the tower to burn it with fire.

53 And a certain [i]woman cast a piece of millstone upon Abimelech's head, and all to break his skull.

54 Then he called hastily unto the young man his armourbearer, and said unto him, [k]Draw thy sword, and slay me, that men say not of me, A woman slew him. And his young man thrust him through, and he died.

55 And [l]when the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every man unto his place.

56 ¶ Thus [m]God rendered[16] the wickedness of Abimelech, which he did unto his father, in slaying his seventy brethren.

57 And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads: and [n]upon them came the curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal.

hesitation accepted it. He had also foolishly promised them vast advantages from his protection, and terrible consequences from offending him: though indeed he was fit for nothing but to be a fire-brand, to set them all at variance, to their common destruction, as the bramble, being set on fire, may communicate the flame to the loftiest cedars, and consume them along with itself in one common conflagration.—The oil, from the olive-tree, was the chief ingredient in the ointment, with which the priests were anointed; it was used for the lamps in the sanctuary; and it formed a part of the meat-offering, by which God was honoured. The wine was used in drink-offerings, which were acceptable to God when properly presented. These trees better represented what a king ought to be, than the stately cedars; for piety to God, and usefulness to man, are more essential to the character of a good prince, than external pomp and majesty.—It is observable that long before Israel had a king by the appointment of God, anointing is spoken of as a customary ceremony of inauguration!—This is the most ancient fable or parable extant; and is very apposite and beautiful.—Scott.

Abimelech's Temporary Success.—He kept the design against the law of Shechem to himself, but set all his men on work to expedite the execution of it, ver. 48, 49. He ordered them all to follow him, and do as he did: as his father had said to his men, chap. vii. 17, "Look on me, and do likewise;" so said he to his, as becomes a general that will not be wanting to give both the plainest direction, and the highest encouragement that can be to his soldiers, "What ye have seen me do, make haste to do as I have done." Not Ite illuc—Go thither, but Venite huc—Come hither. The officers in Christ's army should thus teach by their example, Phil. iv. 9. He and they fetched each of them a bough from a wood, not far off, laid all their boughs together under the wall of this tower, which, it is probable, was of wood, set fire to their boughs, and so burnt down their hold, and all that were in it, who were either burnt or stifled with the smoke. What inventions men have to destroy one another! Whence come these cruel wars and fightings, but from their lusts? Some think that the men of the tower of Shechem were the same with the house of Millo, and then Jotham's just imprecation was answered in the letter, "Let fire come out from Abimelech, and devour not only in general the men of Shechem, but in particular the house of Millo," ver. 20. About one thousand men and women perished in these flames, many of whom, it is probable, were no way concerned in the quarrel between Abimelech and the Shechemites, nor meddled with either side, yet, in this civil war, came to this miserable end; for men of factious, turbulent spirits, "perish not alone in their iniquity," but involve many more that follow them in their simplicity, in the same calamity with them.

Abimelech's Wretched End.—Three circumstances are observed in the death of Abimelech. 1. That he was slain with a stone, as he had slain his brethren all "upon one stone." 2. That he had his skull broken: vengeance aimed at that guilty head which had worn the usurped crown. 3. That the stone was cast upon him by a woman, ver. 53. He saw the stone come, it was therefore strange he did not avoid it; but, no doubt, made it so much the greater mortification to him, to see from what hand it came. Sisera died by a woman's hand, and knew it not; but Abimelech knew it, and when he found himself ready to breathe his last, nothing troubled him so much as this, that it should be said, a woman slew him. See, (1.) His foolish pride, in laying so much to heart this little circumstance of his disgrace. Here was no care taken about his precious soul, no concern what would become of that, no prayer to God for his mercy; but very solicitous he is to patch up his shattered credit, when there is no patching of his shattered skull. Oh, let it never be said that such a mighty man as Abimelech was killed by a woman! The man was dying, but his pride was alive and strong, and the same vain-glorious humour that had governed him all along, appears now at last. Qualis vita finis ita—As was his life, such was his death. As God punished his cruelty by the manner of his death, so he punished his pride by the instrument of it. (2.) His foolish project to avoid his disgrace; nothing could be more ridiculous; his own servant must run him through, not to rid him the sooner out of his pain, but "that men say not, A woman slew him." Could he think that this would conceal what the woman had done, and not rather proclaim it the more? Nay it added to the infamy of his death, for hereby he becomes a self-murderer. Better have it said, "A woman slew him," than that it should be said, His servant slew him by his own order; yet now both will be said of him to his everlasting reproach. And it is observable, that this very thing which Abimelech was in such care to conceal, appears to have been more particularly remembered by posterity than most passages of this history; for Joab speaks of it as that which he expected David would reproach him with, for coming so "nigh the wall," 2 Sam. xi. 21. The ignominy we seek to avoid by sin, we do but perpetuate the remembrance of. Now the issue of all is, that Abimelech being slain, Israel's peace was restored, and an end was put to this civil war, for they that followed him, "departed every man unto his place," ver. 55.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—If parents could foresee their children's sufferings, their joy in them would be often turned into lamentations; we may, therefore, be thankful that we cannot penetrate futurity, and are reminded to commit those whom we most love into the hands of the Lord, and to attend to our present duty, casting our care upon him respecting ourselves and them. We should also be willing to leave this world when he pleases; for if we should live, we may behold such afflictions as would distress our

CHAP. X.

Tola judgeth Israel, 1; also Jair, 3. The Philistines and Ammonites oppressing Israel, 7, upon their repentance, God pitieth them, 15.

AND after Abimelech there [a]arose to [*]defend Israel Tola the son of Puah, the son of Dodo, a man of Issachar; and he dwelt in [b]Shamir in mount Ephraim.

2 And he judged Israel twenty and three years, and died, and was buried in Shamir.

3 ¶ And after him arose Jair, [c]a Gileadite, and judged Israel twenty and two years.

4 And he had thirty sons that [d]rode on thirty ass colts, and they had thirty cities, which are [e]called [†]Havoth-jair[1] unto this day, which are in the land of Gilead.

5 And Jair died, and was buried in Camon.

6 ¶ And the children of Israel [f]did evil again in the sight of the LORD, and served [g]Baalim, and Ashtaroth, and the gods of Syria, and [h]the gods of Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the children of Ammon, and [i]the gods of the Philistines, and forsook the LORD, and served not him.

7 And the anger of the LORD [k]was hot against Israel, and [l]he sold them into the hands of the Philistines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon.

8 And [m]that year they vexed and [‡]oppressed the children of Israel eighteen years, all the children of Israel that were on the other side Jordan in the land of the Amorites, which is in Gilead.

9 Moreover the children of Ammon [n]passed over Jordan to fight also against Judah, and against Benjamin, and against the house of Ephraim; so that Israel was sore [o]distressed.

10 ¶ And the children of Israel [p]cried unto the LORD, saying, We have sinned against thee, both because we have forsaken our God, and also served Baalim.

11 And the LORD said unto the children of Israel, [q]Did not I deliver you from [r]the Egyptians, and from [s]the Amorites, from [t]the children of Ammon, and from [u]the Philistines?

12 [x]The Zidonians also, and [y]the Amalekites, and [z]the Maonites, did oppress you; and ye cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand.

13 [a]Yet ye have forsaken me, and served other gods: wherefore I will deliver you no more.

14 Go and [b]cry unto the gods [2]which ye have chosen; let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation.

15 ¶ And the children of Israel said unto the LORD, [c]We have sinned: [d]do thou unto us whatsoever [§]seemeth good unto thee; [e]deliver us only, we pray thee, this day.

16 And [f]they put away the [i]strange gods from among them, and served the LORD: and [g]his soul was [*]grieved for the misery of Israel.[3]

17 ¶ Then the children of Ammon were [†]gathered together, and encamped in Gilead. And the children of Israel assembled themselves together, and encamped in [h]Mizpeh.[4]

18 And the people and princes of Gilead said one to another, [i]What man is he that will begin to fight against the children of Ammon? [k]he shall be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

CHAP. XI.

Jephthah's covenant with the Gileadites, 1; his vow, 30; he performeth it on his daughter, 34.

NOW [a]Jephthah the Gileadite was [b]a mighty man of valour, and he was the son of [*]an harlot: and Gilead begat Jephthah.

2 And Gilead's wife bare him sons; and his wife's sons grew up, and they [c]thrust out Jephthah, and said unto him, Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house; for thou art the son of [d]a strange woman.

3 Then Jephthah fled from [†]his brethren, and dwelt in the land of [*]Tob:[1] and there were gathered [f]vain men to Jephthah, and went out with him.

4 ¶ And it came to pass [‡]in process of time, that the children of Ammon made war against Israel.

5 And it was so, that when the children of Ammon [g]made war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went [h]to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob:

6 And they said unto Jephthah, Come, and be our captain, that we may fight with the children of Ammon.

7 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, [i]Did not ye hate me, and expel me out of my father's house? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress?

8 And [k]the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, Therefore [l]we turn again to thee now, that thou mayest go with us, and fight against the children of Ammon, and be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

9 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, [m]If ye bring me home again to fight against the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me, shall I be your head?

10 And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, [n]The LORD be [§]witness between us, [o]if we do not so according to thy words.

hearts. Above all, we ought to fear and watch against sin; for our misconduct may very probably produce the most fatal effects on our families, and on society, even after we are laid in the grave.—Scott.

CHAP. X. TOLA.—Ver. 1, 2. After the death of the usurper, the Lord raised up Tola to judge Israel. We do not find that he waged any war, but he restored peace, and the regular administration of justice, after the late distractions, and he reformed the state of religion; and thus he was as great a blessing as those judges who performed more memorable exploits. His name signifies a worm; and he was no worse fitted for being the Lord's instrument for good to his people, if his opinion of himself accorded to so humble a name. Though of the tribe of Issachar, he came to live in mount Ephraim, probably that he might be in the centre of Israel, and near the tabernacle.

JAIR.—Ver. 3—5. The next judge was a descendant of Jair, the grandson of Manasseh. His numerous sons inherited some of the cities which then fell to the lot of their ancestor, and assisted their father as magistrates, riding from place to place to administer justice. Some of these years of which scarcely any thing is recorded, may be considered as the best times of Israel under the judges. We must, however, take some of the eighteen years of Israel's apostacy from the latter part of Jair's government, during which the people seem gradually to have corrupted themselves, and fallen under oppression, and when Jair could no longer restrain them from idolatry, he was not able to defend them from their enemies.—Scott.

ISRAEL'S PENITENCE AND ITS BLESSING.—A blessed reformation was set on foot. They brought forth fruits meet for repentance; ver. 16, "They put away the gods of strangers," (as the word is,) strange gods, and worshipped by those nations that were strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and to the covenants of promise, and they "served the Lord." Need drove them to him. They knew it was to no purpose to go to the gods whom they had served, and therefore returned to the god whom they had slighted. This is true repentance, not only for sin, but from sin. God returned in mercy to them, which is expressed here very tenderly, ver. 16. "His soul was grieved for the misery of Israel." Not that there is any grief in God, he has infinite joy and happiness in himself, which cannot be broken in upon by either the sins or the miseries of his creatures; not that there is any change in God, he "is in one mind, and who can turn him?" But his goodness is his glory; by it he proclaims his name, and magnifies it above all names; and he is pleased to put himself in the relation of a father to his people that are in covenant with him, so he is pleased to represent his goodness to them by the compassions of a father toward his children! for as he is the Father of lights, so he is the Father of mercies; as the disobedience and misery of a child are a grief to a tender father, and make him feel very sensibly from his natural affection, so the provocations of God's people are a grief to him, Ps. xcv. 10; he is "broken with their whorish heart," Ezek. vi. 9; their troubles also are a grief to him; so he is pleased to speak when he is pleased to appear for the deliverance of his people. Such are the tender mercies of our God, and so far is he from having any pleasure in the death of sinners.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The removal of hardened sinners by a righteous God often makes way for reformation and public tranquillity, and proves a great mercy to those who survive.—Man's carnal heart is prone to prefer the bondage of sin and Satan to the service of God: but present indulgence insures future misery; for every expectation and advantage from sin, the world, and the friendship of wicked men, must ensure a distressing disappointment.—God is able to multiply men's punishments, according to the number of their iniquities and idols: but there is hope, when under temporal afflictions sinners cry unto the Lord for help, and lament their ungodliness, as well as more scandalous transgressions. Yet the Lord might justly leave those who have forsaken him to their own wretched choice: he might upbraid them with former mercies and their base returns; he might send them to their beloved idols and lusts; he might mock at their calamity, and absolutely refuse to help them. This will be the dreadful condition of the wicked in another world; but here mercy can never be sought in vain; yet, for the deeper humiliation of those who are but superficially convinced, and to quicken those who are not duly in earnest; the Lord often seems to "shut up his loving-kindness in his displeasure," he upraids them with their sins, pursues them with his awful threatenings, and almost brings them to conclude that their case is hopeless. He will, however, keep them from desperation; and when their prayers are rendered more fervent, their confessions more ingenuous, their self-examination more diligent, their submission to his justice and dependence on his mercy more entire, and their forsaking of sin more unreserved; it may be certainly concluded that comfort and deliverance are at hand.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. JEPHTHAH.—Ver. 1, 2. Jephthah seems evidently to have been the son of "an harlot," (not a concubine, or secondary wife,) of "a strange woman," either of an alien of bad character, or an Israelitess whose infamous conduct procured her that title. So that his birth seemed, according to the law, to exclude him "from the congregation of the LORD." Gilead, the father of Jephthah, seems to have been a descendant of Gilead, the grandson of Manasseh.—Jephthah had no right to share with his 11 Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him [p]head and captain over them: and Jephthah [q]uttered all his words[2] [r]before the LORD in Mizpeh.

12 ¶ And Jephthah [s]sent messengers[3] unto the king of the children of Ammon, saying, [t]What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come against me to fight in my land?

13 And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah, [u]Because Israel took away my land, when they came up out of Egypt, from Arnon even unto [x]Jabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore restore those lands again peaceably.

14 And Jephthah sent messengers [y]again unto the king of the children of Ammon:

15 And said unto him, Thus saith Jephthah, [z]Israel took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

16 But when Israel came up from Egypt, and [a]walked through the wilderness unto the Red sea, and [b]came to Kadesh;

17 Then Israel [c]sent messengers unto the king of Edom, saying, Let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land: but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto. And in like manner they sent unto [d]the king of Moab: but he would not consent: and Israel [e]abode in Kadesh.

18 Then they [f]went along through the wilderness, and [g]compassed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the east side of the land of Moab, and [h]pitched on the other side of Arnon, but came not within the border of Moab: for Arnon was the border of Moab.

19 And [i]Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon; and Israel said unto him, Let us pass, we pray thee, through thy land into my place.

20 But Sihon trusted not Israel to pass through his coast: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought against Israel.

21 And the [k]LORD God of Israel delivered Sihon and all his people into the hands of Israel, and they smote them: [l]so Israel possessed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country.

22 And they possessed all the coasts of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderness even unto Jordan.

23 So now the LORD God of Israel hath dispossessed the Amorites from before his people Israel, and shouldest thou possess it?

24 Wilt not thou possess that which [m]Chemosh[4] thy god giveth thee to possess? So [n]whomsoever the LORD our God shall drive out from before us, them will we possess.

A. M. 2858.—B. C. 1146.

25 And now art thou any thing better than [o]Balak the son of Zippor king of Moab? did he ever strive against Israel, or did he ever fight against them,

26 While Israel dwelt in [p]Heshbon and her towns, and in [q]Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coasts of Arnon, [r]three hundred years? why therefore did ye not recover them within that time?

27 Wherefore I have not sinned against thee, but thou doest me wrong to war against me: the LORD [s]the Judge [t]be judge[5] this day between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon.

28 Howbeit [u]the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he sent him.

29 ¶ Then [x]the Spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah, and he passed over Gilead, and Manasseh, and passed over [y]Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he passed over unto the children of Ammon.

30 And Jephthah [z]vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands, 31 Then it shall be, that *whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, [a]shall surely be the LORD's, [†]and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

32 ¶ So Jephthah passed over unto the children of Ammon to fight against them; and [b]the LORD delivered them into his hands.

33 And he smote them from [c]Aroer, even till thou come to [d]Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto [‡]the plain of the vineyards, with a very great slaughter. Thus the children of Ammon were subdued before the children of Israel.

34 ¶ And Jephthah came to [e]Mizpeh unto his house, and, behold, [f]his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels [6]and with dances: and she was his only child; [§]beside her he had [g]neither son nor daughter.

35 And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he [h]rent his clothes, and said, Alas, my daughter! thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for [i]I have opened my mouth unto the LORD, and [k]I cannot go back.

36 And she said unto him, My father,[7] if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the LORD, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; [l]forasmuch as the LORD hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

37 And she said unto her father, Let this brethren in the inheritance; but he had not deserved to be turned out destitute, as if he had been a vagabond or a malefactor. Ver. 3. A number of men of broken fortunes and unsettled dispositions joined themselves to Jephthah: it does not appear, however, that they attempted any thing against their own countrymen, but rather that they made reprisals on those nations who oppressed them. In this course of life they learned hardiness, boldness, and military skill; and thus Jephthah acquired that reputation which made way for his advancement, as commander in the war against Ammon.—It is not improbable that he also reformed his followers, and gave them some instructions in religion, as David in similar circumstances evidently did in respect of his adherents.

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER.—Ver. 34—40. The whole conduct of Jephthah's daughter shows that she was an amiable, dutiful, and pious young woman, according to the instructions afforded her: and the tokens of deep distress, which Jephthah showed, confirm the interpretation before intimated. If he had understood the divine law, he would have known that his rash vow bound him to nothing but deep repentance; unless he had accompanied thank-offerings at Shiloh, with a sin-offering on this account.—But he deemed himself irrevocably engaged, and, after two months "he did with her according to his vow:" that is, as it appears evident to me, he offered her for a burnt-offering; perhaps induced by a misinterpretation of the command given to Abraham concerning his son Isaac. In this he acted conscientiously: but his conscience was erroneous; and his error arose from ignorance of the divine law, and too much acquaintance with heathen customs. Otherwise he would not have placed his amiable daughter, who came to congratulate his victory, with joyful songs of praise, among the devoted enemies of God; much less would he have offered so detestable a sacrifice, which was most expressly forbidden, as "an abomination to the LORD, which he hated." When Saul rashly brought his excellent son Jonathan under the curse of utter destruction, the people very properly rescued him; for the crime was Saul's, not Jonathan's.—Indeed, many learned men have endeavoured to show that Jephthah did not sacrifice his daughter, but that he shut her up in perpetual solitude and virginity: and they urge in favour of that opinion, that "she bewailed her virginity," not her death; and that "she knew no man:" and they suppose that the daughters of Israel went to condole with her [illegible] in the year, and not to lament her death. But, it is not at all likely that it [illegible] a custom, not quite [illegible] the daughters of Gilead, but [illegible] unmarried or childless was deemed disgraceful, as well as a misfortune; which seems to have occasioned the expressions above-mentioned, Luke i. 25. So pious a person, supposing her death to be for the glory of God, and the benefit of Israel, would not bewail on that account: but according to the sentiment of all Israelitish women, she must naturally lament that she died unmarried and childless, especially as her father had no other child, or any prospect of posterity. Whereas, had she been shut up in perpetual solitude, as a single example of that kind, in the whole Scripture, and contrary to the whole tenour of it, she would not have needed to request two months to bewail her virginity, for she would have had all her remaining life to do it in.—Scott. But supposing that Jephthah did sacrifice his daughter, the question is whither he did well? 1. Some justify him in it, and think he did well, and as became one that preferred the honour of God before that which was dearest to him in this world. He is mentioned among the eminent believers, who by faith did great things, Heb. xi. 32. And this was one of the great things he did; it was done deliberately, and upon two months' consideration and consultation. He is never blamed for it by any inspired writer. Though it highly exalts the paternal authority, yet it cannot justify any in doing the like; he was an extraordinary person, "the Spirit of the Lord came upon him;" many circumstances, now unknown to us, might make this altogether extraordinary, and justify it, yet not so as that it might justify the like. Some learned men have made this sacrifice a figure of Christ the great Sacrifice; he was of unspotted purity and innocency, as she a chaste virgin; he was devoted to death by his Father, and so made a curse, or an anathema for us; he submitted himself, as she did, to his Father's will—"Not as I will, but as thou wilt." But, 2. Most condemn Jephthah; he did ill to make so rash a vow, and worse to perform it. He could not be bound by his vow to that which God had forbidden by the letter of the sixth commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." God had forbidden human sacrifices, so that it was (says Dr. Lightfoot,) in effect a sacrifice to Moloch. And, probably, the reason why it is left dubious by the inspired penman, whether he sacrificed her or no, was, that who did afterward offer their children, might not take any encouragement from this instance. Concerning this, and some other such passages in the sacred story, which learned men are in the dark, divided, and in doubt about, we need not much amuse ourselves; what is necessary to our salvation, thanks be to God, is plain enough.—Henry.

This should incite us to a diligent study of the whole word of God, that we may be "complete in the knowledge of his will:" and it should remind ministers to be exact, copious, and frequent, in discussing practical subjects; that they, who are disposed to perform their duty, may not be left to sin through ignorance or mistake.—How checkered are the scenes of this mortal life! Sorrow treads upon the heels of mirth; and our choicest comforts, often through our own unwatchfulness, become the occasions of our severest trials; but we need the less wonder at this, when we observe, how defective the best characters are; and how the best actions are often connected with such as are utterly unwarrantable.—A cheerful mind, disposed to be grateful to God, and to endure any thing for his honour and out of love to his people, with a ready submission to parental authority, are such beautiful blossoms in young persons, and promise such fruit in riper years, that we must regret to see them blasted by premature death; and lament that they who have so well performed the inferior duties, are not spared to be useful in the more important relations of the married state. But, though their death is a loss to society, they are themselves no losers: for the preparation for an useful life will render death also comfortable, in whatever way they may be called hence.—In lawful vows, when we have "opened our mouth unto the LORD, we may not go back;" and on that account we should be very considerate in making vows, that we may not involve ourselves or others, in distress, perplexity, or temptation: but nothing can oblige us to that which is in itself unlawful. With this single exception, we cannot do too much to express our gratitude for mercies received, or part with too much for the glory of God.—Though we cannot approve of the conduct of Jephthah: we may well admire and imitate his resolution and self-denial: and still more those of his daughter.—Let us not then forget the love of the Father in giving his Son, or of the Son in giving himself, a real and acceptable sacrifice for the sins of rebellious man. Bought with such a price, let us present our bodies and souls as a living sacrifice unto God; and look forward with heartfelt satisfaction to that country, where ignorance, error, sin, and sorrow shall be known no more; where the believer's victory will be complete, his triumphs unalloyed and unsullied, and his hallelujahs uninterrupted and eternal.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. SHIBBOLETH.—Ver. 5, 6. The Gileadites, who perhaps were better acquainted with the passages of Jordan than the Ephraimites were, secured them with strong guards, who were ordered to slay every Ephraimite that offered to pass the river. Here was, 1. Cruelty enough in the destruction of them. Sufficient surely was "the punishment which was inflicted by many;" when they were routed in the field, there needed not this severity to cut off all that escaped. Shall the sword devour for ever? Whether Jephthah is to be praised for this, I know not, perhaps he saw it to be a piece of necessary justice. 2. Cunning enough in the discovery of them. It seems the Ephraimites, though they spoke the same language with other Israelites, yet had got a custom in the dialect of their country to pronounce the Hebrew letter Shin like Samech, and they had so strangely used themselves to it, that they could not do otherwise, no, not to save their lives. We learn to speak by imitation; they that first used s for sh, did it either because it was shorter, or because it was finer, and their children liked to speak like them, so that you might know an Ephraimite by it: as in England we know a west-country man, or a north-country man, nay, perhaps a Shropshire man, and a Cheshire man, by his pronunciation. "Thou art a Galilean, and thy speech betrays thee." By this the Ephraimites were discovered. If they took a man that they suspected to be an Ephraimite, but he denied it, they bade him say Shibboleth; but either he could not, as our translation reads it, or he did not heed, or frame, or direct himself, as some read, to pronounce it right, but said Sibboleth, and so was known to be an Ephraimite, and was slain immediately. Shibboleth signifies a river or stream; "Ask leave to go over Shibboleth, the river." Those that were thus cut off, made up the whole number of slaughtered Ephraimites, forty-two thousand, ver. 6. Thus another mutiny of that angry tribe was prevented.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. SAMSON'S MOTHER.—Ver. 4, 5. The Nazarite's vow was voluntary, and for a limited time; and by the touch of a dead body it was broken, and the specified time must be begun over again. But Samson was devoted, by the Lord's express appointment, all the days of his life; and it seems probable that this kind of separation was not so strict as the voluntary vow. The infant in the womb, and at the breast, subsists on the same nourishment with the mother; and therefore the mother of Samson was required to observe the same rules during that period. She would be led to expect something extraordinary from a child whose birth was attended by such observances: but it was a great trial to the faith and patience of all concerned to be informed, that even the beginning of a deliverance from their oppressors must be so long waited for.—It is probable that Samson was born about the time when the Philistines began to afflict Israel, as he did not live to complete their deliverance.—It seems that the law concerning distinction of meats was not strictly observed at this time, or Manoah's wife would not have needed a caution to eat no unclean thing.—Scott.

Nazarite to God from the womb to the day of his death.

8 ¶ Then Manoah entreated the LORD, and said, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didst send come again unto us, and [o]teach us[2] what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.

9 And God [p]hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her.

10 And the woman made haste, and ran, and shewed her husband, and said unto him, [q]Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day.

11 And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman? And he said, I am.

12 And Manoah said, Now let thy words come to pass. [†]How shall we order the child, and [‡]how shall we do unto him?

13 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman let her beware.

14 She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: [r]all that I commanded her let her observe.

15 ¶ And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, I pray thee, [s]let us detain thee, until we shall have made ready a kid [$]for thee.

16 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Though thou detain me,[3] I will not eat of thy bread: and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou must offer it [t]unto the LORD. For Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the LORD.

17 And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, What is thy name,[4] that when thy sayings come to pass we may do thee honour?

18 And the angel of the LORD said unto him, [u]Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is [l]secret?

19 So Manoah [x]took a kid with a meat-offering, and offered it upon a rock unto the LORD: and the angel [y]did wondrously;[5] and Manoah and his wife looked on.

20 For it came to pass, [z]when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the LORD ascended in the flame of the altar. And Manoah and his wife looked on it, and [a]fell on their faces to the ground.

21 But the angel of the LORD did no more appear to Manoah and to his wife. Then Manoah [b]knew that he was an angel of the LORD.

22 And Manoah said unto his wife, [c]We shall surely die, because [d]we have seen God.

23 But [e]his wife said unto him, If the LORD were pleased to kill us, [f]he would not have received a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands, neither would [g]he have shewed us all these things, nor would as at this time[6] have told us such things as these.

24 ¶ And the woman bare a son, and called his name [h]Samson: and [i]the child grew, and the LORD blessed him.

25 And [k]the Spirit of the LORD began to move him[7] at times in [*]the camp of Dan[8] [l]between Zorah and Eshtaol.

AND Samson went down to [a]Timnath,[1] and [b]saw a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines.

2 And he came up, and told his father and his mother, and said, I have seen a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines: now therefore [c]get her for me to wife.

3 Then his father and his mother said unto him, Is there never a woman among the daughters of [d]thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the [e]uncircumcised Philistines? And Samson said unto his father, Get her for me; for [*]she pleaseth me well.

6 And [h]the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and [i]he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but [k]he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

7 And he went down, and talked with the woman; and she pleased Samson well.

9 And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, and came to his father and mother, and he gave them, and they did eat: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcase of the lion.

acceptable entertainment of the angels; see Rev. xxii. 9, "Worship God." And Manoah, having so good a warrant, though he was no priest, and had no altar, turned his meat into a meat-offering, and "offered it upon a rock to the Lord," ver. 19, that is, he brought and laid it to be offered; "Lord, here it is, do what thou pleasest with it." Thus we must bring our hearts to God as living sacrifices, and submit them to the operation of his Spirit. All things being now ready, 1. "The angel did wondrously," for his name was Wonderful. Probably, the wonder he did was the same with what he had done for Gideon; he made fire to come either down from heaven, or up out of the rock, to consume the sacrifice. 2. He ascended up toward heaven "in the flame of the sacrifice," ver. 20. By this it appeared that he was not, as they thought, a mere man, but a messenger immediately from heaven; thence certainly he descended, for thither he ascended, John iii. 13; vi. 62. This signified God's acceptance of the offering, and intimates to what we owe the acceptance of all our offerings, even to the mediation of the Angel of the covenant, that other Angel, who puts "much incense to the prayers of saints," and "so offers them before the throne," Rev. viii. 3. Prayer is the ascent of the soul to God. But it is Christ in the heart by faith that makes it an offering of a sweet-smelling savour: without him, our services are offensive smoke, but in him, acceptable flame. We may apply it to Christ's sacrifice of himself for us; he ascended in the flame of his own offering, for "by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place," Heb. ix. 12. While the angel did this, it is twice said, ver. 19, 20, "that Manoah and his wife looked on." This is a proof of the miracle, the matter of fact was true, for out of the mouth of these two eye-witnesses the report of it is established. The angel did all that was done in the sacrifice, they did but look on; yet doubtless when the angel ascended toward heaven, their hearts ascended with him in thanksgiving for the promise which came from thence, and in expectation of the performance to come from thence too. Yet when the angel is ascended, they dare not, as those that were the witnesses of Christ's ascension, stand gazing up into heaven, but in holy fear and reverence they fell on their faces to the ground. And now, (1.) They "knew that it was an angel," ver. 21. It was plain it was not the body of a man they saw, since it was not chained to the earth, nor prejudiced by fire; but ascended, and ascended in flame; and therefore with [illegible] they conclude it was an angel, for he "maketh his angels spirits, and his [illegible] flame of fire. (2.) But he did not any more appear to them; it was for a [illegible] now over, that [illegible] to settle a constant correspondence, [illegible] of the Lord [illegible] blessing, he gives his Spirit to qualify for the blessing. Those are blessed indeed in whom the Spirit of grace begins to work betimes, in the days of their childhood. If the "Spirit be poured out upon our offspring," they will spring up as "willows by the water-courses," Isa. xliv. 3, 4. The Spirit of God moved Samson in the camp of Dan, that is, in the general muster of the trained bands of that tribe, who, probably, had formed a camp between Zorah and Eshtaol, near the place where he lived, to oppose the incursions of the Philistines; there Samson, when a child, appeared among them, and signalized himself by some very brave actions, excelling them all in manly exercises and trials of strength, and, probably, he showed himself more than ordinarily zealous against the enemies of his country, and discovered more of a public spirit than could be expected in a child. The Spirit moved him at times, not at all times, but, as the wind blows, when he listed, to show that what he did was not from himself, then he could have done it at any time.—Henry.

CHAP. XIV. SAMSON'S MARRIAGE.—Ver. 1—4. Many think that Samson was induced to contract this marriage by special direction from the Lord: such marriages not being immoral in themselves, but forbidden to the Israelites, to keep them separate from idolaters. In this manner he was directed to seek occasion against the Philistines; yet he showed his respect to his parents, by seeking their concurrence; who opposed his marriage as long as "they knew not that it was of the LORD." For the words translated, "she pleaseth me well," may be rendered, "it is right," and considered as an intimation that it was from God; upon which his parents consented and went with him.—But perhaps it is only meant, that it pleased God to leave Samson to follow his own inclinations, intending in his infinite wisdom to overrule his misconduct for good to Israel; and that his parents consented because he was bent upon it.—Scott.

HIS VICTORY OVER THE LION.—Samson's encounter with the lion was hazardous. It was a young lion, one of the fiercest sort, that set upon him, roaring for his prey, and setting his eye particularly upon him; "he roared in meeting him," so the word is. He was all alone, in the vineyards, whither he had rambled from his father and mother, (who kept the high road,) probably to eat grapes. Children consider not how they expose themselves to the roaring lion that seeks to devour, when, out of a foolish fondness for liberty, they wander from under the eye and wing of their prudent pious parents. Nor do young people consider what lions lurk in the vineyards, the [illegible] and red wines, as [illegible] under the green grass. Had Samson [illegible] lion in [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] woman: and Samson [m]made there a feast; for so used the young[3] men to do.

11 And it came to pass, when they [n]saw him, that they brought [o]thirty companions to be with him.

12 ¶ And Samson said unto them, I will now put forth [p]a riddle unto you: if ye can certainly declare it me within [q]the seven days of the feast, and find it out, then I will give you thirty [‡]sheets and thirty change of garments:

13 But if ye cannot declare it me, then shall ye give me thirty sheets and [r]thirty change of garments. And they said unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he said unto them, [s]Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. And [t]they could not in three days expound the riddle.

15 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that they said unto Samson's wife, [u]Entice thy husband, that he may declare unto us the riddle, [x]lest we burn thee and thy father's house with fire: have ye called us to [y]take that we have? is it not so?

16 And Samson's wife wept before him, and said, [z]Thou dost but hate me, and lovest me not: thou hast put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and hast not told it me. And he said unto her, Behold, [a]I have not told it my father nor my mother, and shall I tell it thee?

17 And she wept before him [b]the seven days, while their feast lasted: and it came to pass on the seventh day, that he told her, because [c]she lay sore upon him: [d]and she told the riddle to the children of her people.

18 And the men of the city said unto him, on the seventh day before the sun went down, What is sweeter than honey? and what is stronger than a lion? And he said unto them, If ye had not plowed[4] with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

19 ¶ And [e]the Spirit of the LORD came upon him, and he went down to Ashkelon,[5] and slew thirty men[6] of them, and took their [*]spoil, and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle. And his anger was kindled, and he went up to his father's house.

20 But Samson's wife [f]was given to his companion, whom he had used as [g]his friend.

CHAP. XV.

Samson is denied his wife, 1; he burneth the Philistines' corn, 3; he is bound by the men of Judah, and delivered to the Philistines, 9; he killeth them with a jawbone, 14.

BUT it came to pass within a while after, in the time of wheat harvest,[1] that Samson visited his wife with [a]a kid; and he said, [b]I will go in to my wife into the chamber. But her father would not suffer him to go in.

2 And her father said, [c]I verily thought that thou hadst utterly hated her; therefore [d]I gave her to thy companion: is not her younger sister fairer than she? [*]take her, I pray thee, instead of her.

3 ¶ And Samson said concerning them, [†]Now shall I be more blameless[2] than the Philistines, though I do them a displeasure.

4 And Samson went and caught [e]three hundred foxes, and took [‡]firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midst between two tails.

5 And when he had set the brands on fire, [f]he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burnt up both the shocks, and also the standing corn, with the vineyards and olives.

6 ¶ Then the Philistines said, Who hath done this? And they answered, Samson the son-in-law of the Timnite, because he had taken his wife, and given her to his companion. And the Philistines came up, [g]and burnt her[3] and her father with fire.

7 ¶ And Samson said unto them, [h]Though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you, and after that I will cease.

8 And he [i]smote them hip and thigh[4] with a great slaughter: and he went down, and dwelt in the top of the rock Etam.

9 ¶ Then the Philistines went up, and pitched in Judah, and spread themselves in [j]Lehi.[5]

10 And the men of Judah said, Why are ye come up against us? And they answered, To bind Samson are we come up, to do to him as he hath done to us.

11 Then three thousand men of Judah [k]went to the top of the rock Etam, and said to Samson, Knowest thou not that the [k]Philistines are rulers over us? what is this that thou hast done unto us? And he said unto them, As they did unto me, so have I done unto them.

12 And they said unto him, We are come down [l]to bind thee, that we may deliver thee into the hand of the Philistines. And Samson said unto them, Swear unto me, that ye will not [m]fall upon me yourselves.

13 And they spake unto him, saying, No; but we will bind thee fast, and deliver thee into their hand: but surely we will not kill thee. And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him up from the rock.

14 ¶ And when he came unto Lehi, [n]the Philistines shouted against him: and [o]the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and [p]the cords that were upon his arms be-providence in it, and the more hazardous the encounter was, the victory was so much the more illustrious.—Henry.

HIS RIDDLE.—Ver. 8, 9. A swarm of bees had settled and collected honey in the carcase of the lion; which was a most unlikely place for that purpose; being, as might have been supposed, both inconvenient and offensive to that delicate insect, which draws honey from the most odoriferous flowers and plants. This Samson found, when he turned aside to see the carcase, and perhaps repeatedly to thank God for his deliverance. As every remains of a dead carcase of an unclean animal was polluting, it has been thought that Samson did not tell his parents where he found the honey, lest they should scruple to eat it; though the extraordinary circumstances of the transaction satisfied him that it might properly be done. To prevent perhaps a worse use of time, Samson proposed a riddle as a trial of ingenuity; and a wager with each of them, of a sheet, shirt, or other linen garment, and a change of raiment of all sorts, that they could not resolve it. The riddle, in its literal purport, meant no more, than that he had got honey, for food and pleasure, from the lion, which in its strength and fury was prepared to devour him. Yet this explanation of the riddle may be interpreted as containing an emblem of more importance, and more hard to be understood, except by the teaching of God.—The victory which Christ obtained over Satan, by means of his agonies and death; and his subsequent exaltation, the glory that redounded to the Father, and the spiritual advantages thence accruing to his people, may be shadowed forth in it. The entrance of sin, the fall of man, and the ruin of the human race through the malice of Satan, will issue in his deeper misery, in the greater glory of God, and in the increased felicity of the redeemed, and of all holy creatures to all eternity. The persecutions of the church have promoted its purity and prosperity. The trials, conflicts, and temptations of the Lord's people are productive of holiness and comfort to their souls in this world, and work for them an exceeding weight of glory in the next.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. SAMSON'S REVENGE.—Ver. 3—5. Samson, being conscious that he was to be, in part, the deliverer of Israel from the Philistines, only waited for a fair occasion to declare against them. This was afforded him by the injurious treatment which he had received; and that was also a specimen of their conduct towards the Israelites when most submissive.—In the means which he employed, we must advert to the power of God, both in supplying and succeeding them; to mortify the pride, and punish the wickedness of the Philistines. The foxes were doubtless very numerous in those parts, and the people very expert in taking them: and probably Samson engaged assistants in procuring and preparing them. Being thus let go, they would hinder each other from gaining their holes in the woods, and would take shelter in the neighbouring corn fields and vineyards; and the weather being dry, the corn ripe, and the fire kindled in many places at once, we may easily conceive that great destruction would very speedily be effected by this uncommon contrivance.

HIS STRENGTH.—Ver. 12, 13. Samson quietly submitted to be bound by the men of Judah, (who were intentionally his murderers,) and to be delivered up to the Philistines; but he indented with his countrymen, that they would not themselves fall upon him, lest he should be constrained to destroy them instead of their enemies; which he was unwilling to do, though so shamefully treated by them.—In all this he was a type of Christ, who in his retirement was rudely assaulted by the Jews, whom he could easily have destroyed, but would not: into their hands he surrendered himself, and they bound him, and delivered him up to the Romans to be crucified; though the bonds even of death could not hold him, or prevent his victories and triumphs. Ver. 14—17. When "the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon Samson," his bonds were soon broken: and then the jawbone of the contemptible ass became a more formidable weapon than sword or spear, and a thousand men fell before him, being alike unable to resist or to escape! Elated with this surprising victory, he seems to have celebrated his own praise, instead of giving glory to God.—The original word for an ass, signifies also an heap: and this circumstance gives a propriety and an animation to the passage, which cannot be preserved in a translation. "Ramath-lehi" signifies the lifting up of the jawbone.—The name Lehi, before used, referred to this event by an anticipation of the historian.—Scott.

HIS WEAPON.—He made a great destruction among the Philistines, who all gathered about him to make sport with him, ver. 15." See how poorly he was armed, he had no better weapon than the jawbone of an ass, and yet what execution he did with it; he never laid it out of his hand, till he had with it laid a thousand Philistines dead upon the spot; and thus that promise was more than accomplished, "One of you shall chase a thousand," Josh. xxiii. 10. A jawbone was an inconvenient thing to grasp, and, one would think, might easily be wrested out of his hand, and a few such blows as he gave with it, might have crushed and broken it, and yet it held good to the last. Had it been the jawbone of a lion, especially that which he himself had slain, it might have helped to heighten his fancy, and to make him think himself the more formidable; but to take the bone of that despicable animal, was to do wonders by "the foolish things of the world," that the "excellency of the power might be of God, and not of man." One of David's worthies slew three hundred Philistines at once, but it was "with a spear," 1 Chron. xi. 11.

15 And he found a *new jawbone of an ass, and put forth his hand, and took it, and [q]slew a thousand[6] men therewith.

16 And Samson said, With the jawbone of an ass, [t]heaps upon heaps, with the jaw of an ass have I slain a thousand men.

17 And it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking, that he cast away the jawbone out of his hand, and called that place [‡]Ramath-lehi.

18 ¶ And [r]he was sore athirst, and called on the LORD, and said, [s]Thou hast given this great deliverance into the hand of thy servant: and now [t]shall I die for thirst, [u]and fall into the hand of [x]the uncircumcised?

19 But God clave an hollow place that was in [§]the jaw,[7] and there came water thereout; and when he had drunk, [y]his spirit came again, and he revived: wherefore he called the name thereof [‖]En-hakkore, which is in Lehi unto this day.

2 And it was told the Gazites, saying, Samson is come hither. And they [c]compassed him in, and laid wait for him all night in the gate of the city, and were [†]quiet all the night, saying, In the morning, when it is day, we shall [d]kill him.

3 And Samson lay till midnight, and arose at midnight, and [e]took the doors of the gate of the city, and the two posts, and went away with them, [‡]bar and all, and put them upon his shoulders, and carried them up to the top of an hill that is before Hebron.[2]

4 ¶ And it came to pass afterward, that [f]he loved a woman [§]in the valley of Sorek, whose name was Delilah.

5 And [g]the lords of the Philistines came up unto her, and said unto her, [h]Entice him, and see wherein his great strength lieth, and by what means we may prevail against him, that we may bind him to [‖]afflict him: and [i]we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of silver.

6 And Delilah said to Samson, [k]Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great strength lieth, and wherewith thou mightest be bound to afflict thee.

7 And Samson said unto her, [l]If they bind me with seven *green withs that were never dried, then shall I be weak, and be as [†]another man.

8 Then the lords of the Philistines brought up to her seven green withs which had not been dried, and she [m]bound him with them.

9 Now there were men lying in wait, abiding with her in the chamber. And she said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he brake the withs, as a thread of tow is broken when it [‡]toucheth the fire. So his strength[8] was not known.

10 And Delilah said unto Samson, Behold, thou hast mocked me, and told me lies: [n]now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mightest be bound.

11 And he said unto her, [o]If they bind me fast with new ropes [§]that never were occupied, then shall I be weak, and be as another man.

12 Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, and said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And there were liers in wait abiding in the chamber. And he brake them from off his arms like a thread.

13 And Delilah said unto Samson, Hitherto thou hast mocked me, and told me lies: tell me wherewith thou mightest be bound. And he said unto her, If thou weavest the seven locks[4] of my head with the web.

14 And she fastened it with the pin, and said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awaked out of his sleep, and [p]went away with the pin of the beam, and with the web.

15 ¶ And she said unto him, [q]How canst thou say, I love thee, [r]when thine heart is not with me? thou hast mocked me these three times, and hast not told me wherein thy great strength lieth.

16 And it came to pass, when [s]she pressed him daily with her words, and urged him, so that his soul was [‖]vexed unto death;

17 That he told her [t]all his heart, and said unto her, [u]There hath not come a razor upon mine head; for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb: if I be shaven, [5]then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak, and be like any other man.

18 And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his heart, she sent and called for the lords of the Philistines, saying, [x]Come up this once, for he hath shewed me all his heart. Then the lords of the Philistines came up unto her, and [y]brought money in their hand.

how ill we can spare it. And this instance of Samson's relief should encourage us to trust in God, and seek to him, for when he pleases, he can "open rivers in high places." See Isa. xli. 17, 18. The memorial of this, in the name Samson gave this upstart fountain, "En-hakkore, the well of him that cried," thereby keeping in remembrance, both his own distress, which occasioned him to cry, and God's favour to him, in answer to his cry. Many a spring of comfort God opens to his people, which may fitly be called by his name, it is "the well of him that cried." Samson had given a name to that place, which denoted him great and triumphant, "Ramath-lehi," the lifting up of the jawbone; but here he gives it another name, which denotes him wanting and dependent.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. SIN AND WEAKNESS.—The burnt child dreads the fire; yet Samson, that has more than the strength of a man, in this comes short of the wisdom of a child; for though he had been more than once brought into the highest degree of mischief and danger by the love of women, and lusting after them, yet he would not take warning, but is here again taken in the same snare, and this third time pays for all. Solomon seems to refer especially to this story of Samson, when, in his caution against uncleanness, he gives this account of a whorish woman, Prov. vii. 26. That "she hath cast down many wounded, yea many strong men have been slain by her." And chap. vi. 26. That "the adulteress will hunt for the precious life." This bad woman that brought Samson to ruin, is here named Delilah, an infamous name, and fitly used to express the person or thing, that, by flattery or falsehood, brings mischief and destruction on those to whom kindness is pretended.—Henry.

SAMSON'S INFATUATION.—Ver. 17—21. To rebuke and severely correct Samson for his heinous offences, the Lord was pleased to leave him to be infatuated almost beyond conception: and thus he was prevailed upon to disclose the secret to his vile paramour. Probably his manner of speaking, as well as the plain and satisfactory account which he gave of his supernatural strength, convinced Delilah that he had now told the whole truth; and she sent an earnest message to the lords of the Philistines, as one that [illegible] lest they should not credit her, and she should lose the stipulated reward. It [illegible] Samson had [illegible] the Philistines [illegible]

HIS CAPTIVITY AND SLAVERY.—Ver. 21. The Philistines took him when God was departed from him; those that have thrown themselves out of God's protection become an easy prey to their enemies. If we sleep in the lap of our lusts, we shall certainly wake in the hands of the Philistines. It is probable they had promised Delilah not to kill him, but they took an effectual course to disable him; the first thing they did, when they had him in their hands, and found they could manage him, was, to "put out his eyes," by "applying fire to them," says the Arabic version. They considered that his eyes would never come again, as perhaps his hair might, and that the strongest arms could do little without eyes to guide them, and therefore, if now they blind him, they for ever blind him. His eyes were the inlets of his sin, he saw the harlot at Gaza, and went in unto her, ver. 1, and now his punishment began there. Now that the Philistines had blinded him, he had time to remember how his own lust had blinded him. The best preservative of the eyes is, to turn them away from beholding vanity. They "brought him down to Gaza," that there he might appear in weakness, where he had lately given such proofs of his strength, ver. 3, and be a jest to those to whom he had been a terror. They "bound him with fetters of brass," who had before been held in the cords of his own iniquity, and he did "grind in the prison," work in their bridewell, either for their profit, or his punishment, or both. The Devil does thus by sinners, "blinds the minds of them which believe not," and so enslaves them and secures [illegible] in his interests. Poor Samson, how art thou fallen! How is thine honour [illegible] dust! How are the glory and defence of Israel become the drudge and [illegible] Philistines!

knees;[e] and she called for a man, and she caused him to shave off the seven locks of his head; and she began to afflict him, and his strength went from him.

20 And she said, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep, and said, [a]I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself. And he wist not that [b]the LORD was departed from him.

21 ¶ But the Philistines took him,[7] [c]and [*]put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and [d]bound him with fetters of brass; and he did [e]grind in the prison house.

22 Howbeit [f]the hair of his head began to grow again [†]after he was shaven.

23 ¶ Then the lords of the Philistines gathered them together for to offer a great sacrifice unto [g]Dagon[8] their god, and to rejoice: for they said, Our god hath delivered Samson our enemy into our hand.

24 And when the people saw him, they [h]praised their god: for they said, Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the destroyer of our country, [‡]which slew many of us.

25 And it came to pass, when [i]their hearts were merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport.[9] And they called for Samson out of the prison house; and he made [§]them [k]sport: and they set him between the pillars.

26 ¶ And Samson said unto the lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth, that I may lean upon them.

27 Now the house was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon [l]the roof about three thousand men and women, that beheld while Samson made sport.

28 And Samson [m]called unto the LORD, and said, O LORD God, [n]remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God, [o]that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes.

29 And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and [‖]on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left.

30 And Samson said, Let [*]me [p]die with the Philistines. And he bowed himself with all his might; [q]and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. [r]So the dead which he slew at his death were more[10] than they which he slew in his life.

31 Then [s]his brethren and all the house of his father came down, and took him, and brought him up, and buried him [t]between Zorah and Eshtaol in the burying place of Manoah his father. [u]And he judged Israel twenty years.

Micah restoring the stolen money to his mother, she maketh images, 1; he hireth a Levite to be his priest, 7.

AND there was a man of [a]mount Ephraim, whose name was Micah.

2 And he said unto his mother, The eleven hundred shekels of silver that were taken from thee, about which thou [b]cursedst, and spakest of also in mine ears, behold, the silver is with me; [c]I took it. And his mother said, [d]Blessed be thou[1] of the LORD, my son.

3 And when he had restored the eleven hundred shekels of silver to his mother, his mother said, [e]I had wholly dedicated the silver unto the LORD from my hand for my son, to make [f]a graven image and a molten image: now therefore I will restore it unto thee.

4 Yet he restored the money unto his mother; and his mother took [g]two hundred shekels[2] of silver, and gave them to the founder, who made thereof a graven image and a molten image: and they were in the house of Micah.

5 ¶ And the man Micah had [h]an house of gods, and made an [i]ephod, and [k]teraphim, and [*]consecrated one of [l]his sons, who became his priest.

6 In those days there was [m]no king in Israel, but every man did that which was [n]right in his own eyes.[3]

7 ¶ And there was a young man out of [o]Beth-lehem-judah of the family of Judah, who was a Levite, and he sojourned there.

8 And the man [p]departed out of the city from Beth-lehem-judah to sojourn where he could find a place: and he came to mount Ephraim to the house of Micah, as [†]he journeyed.

9 And Micah said unto him, Whence comest thou? And he said unto him, I am a Levite of Beth-lehem-judah, and I go to sojourn where I may find a place.

10 And Micah said unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me [q]a father and a priest, [r]and I will give thee ten shekels[4] of silver by the year, and [‡]a suit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in.

11 And the Levite was content to dwell with the man; and the young man was unto him as one of his sons.

12 And Micah [s]consecrated the Levite; and the young man became [t]his priest, and was in the house of Micah.

whether it was a temple, or a theatre, or some slight building run up for the purpose is uncertain. All the "lords of the Philistines were destroyed," ver. 27, who had by bribes corrupted Delilah to betray Samson to them. Evil pursued those sinners. Many of the people likewise, to the number of three thousand, and among them, a great many women, one of whom, it is likely, was that harlot of Gaza, mentioned ver. 1. Samson had been drawn into sin by the Philistine women, and a great slaughter is made among them. They were destroyed when they were merry, secure, and jovial, and far from apprehending themselves in any danger. When they saw Samson lay hold on the pillars, we may suppose it served them for a jest, and they made sport with that too; "What will this feeble Jew do?" How are sinners brought to desolation in a moment! They are lifted up in pride and mirth, that their fall may be the more dreadful. Let us never enjoy the mirth of wicked people, but infer from this instance, that their triumphing is short, and their joy but for a moment. It was when they were praising Dagon their god, and giving that honour to him which is due to God only; which is no less than treason against the King of kings, his crown and dignity; justly therefore is the blood of these traitors mingled with their sacrifices. Samson pulled the house down upon them; God, no doubt, putting it into his heart, as a public person, thus to avenge God's quarrel with them, Israel's, and his own. Samson may very well be justified, and brought in not guilty of any sinful murder, either of himself or the Philistines. He was a public person, a declared enemy to the Philistines, against whom he might therefore take all advantages; they were now in the most barbarous manner making war upon him, all present were aiding and abetting, and justly die with him. Nor was he a felo de se, or a self-murderer, in it, for it was not his own life that he aimed at, though he had too much reason to be weary of it, but the lives of Israel's enemies, for the reaching of which he bravely resigned his own, "not counting it dear to him, so he might finish his course" with honour.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Nothing but evident duty should prevail with us to venture into those places where bad examples and licentious characters abound. And even then, we should go with fear and trembling; earnestly beseeching God to "turn away our eyes from beholding vanity," to preserve our hearts from every sinful desire, and to strengthen us to resist every temptation. When we become unwatchful and self-confident, we are near some humiliating fall; the roving eye readily admits the licentious desire into the heedless heart; and "lust being conceived, sin is brought forth," and misery ensues. The blandishments of beautiful women have often proved most dangerous temptations, even to pious men; and Satan would rather see the active and useful and pious servant of God yielding to the enticements of a harlot, and sleeping in Delilah's lap, than boldly venturing the tyrant's rage, and enduring the fiery furnace. They who are captivated in this manner must speedily be exposed to the deepest shame and the most imminent danger. Their reputation, strength, and usefulness will be torn from them; they will betray the cause which they should have served; and their enemies will insult and triumph, and be hardened in prejudices and revilings against religion. The outward peril which attends such forbidden intercourse, is generally so great, that nothing but blind infatuation can induce men to venture upon it; but who can tell the machinations of the powers of darkness against those who are stupidly indulging their lusts, and sleeping in the very jaws of destruction! How lamentable is it to consider, that the goodness of God which preserves men from the immediate effects of their folly, is generally abused into an encouragement to future crimes! as every sinful propensity is strengthened by indulgence. So that even believers are seldom duly humbled for their sins, till they taste the bitter effects of them; and therefore it is eventually better to be chastened when they first offend, than to escape with impunity.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. MICAH'S IDOLATRY.—Ver. 5. The man Micah had "a house of gods, a house of God," so the LXX., for so he thought it, as good as that at Shiloh, and better, because his own, of his own inventing, and at his own disposal; for people love to have their religion under their girdle, to manage it as they please. "A house of error," so the Chaldee, for really it was so, a deviation from the way of truth, and an inlet to all deceit. Idolatry is a great cheat, and one of the worst of errors. That which he aimed at in the progress of his idolatry, whether he designed it at first or no, was to mimic and rival both God's oracles and his ordinances. He made Teraphim, little images, which he might advise with as there was occasion, and receive informations, directions, and predictions from. What the Urim and Thummim were to the prince and people, these Teraphim should be to his family.—Henry.

THE WANDERING LEVITE.—Ver. 7, 8. This man's father was a Levite, but by marriage he was allied to the tribe of Judah, and so had been a sojourner at Bethlehem. But he left that place to seek some other situation. Perhaps, in those unquiet times, the tithes were not paid very regularly; yet it can hardly be supposed that a Levite of good character was constrained, from mere want, to ramble like a vagabond. He seems to have been a man of an unsettled disposition, who did not choose to be under the control of the priests. The proposals of Micah did not seem to have been very advantageous: but the Levite thought the situation honourable, and a kind of preferment; especially as Micah spake of his being a father and priest. Thus he was induced to intrude into 13 Then said Micah, [n]Now know I that the LORD will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Danites send five men to seek out an inheritance, 1; they search Laish, and bring back an encouraging report, 7; they win Laish, and call it Dan, 27.

IN those days there was [a]no king in Israel: and in those days [b]the tribe[1] of the Danites sought them an inheritance to dwell in; [c]for unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen unto them among the tribes of Israel.

2 And the children of Dan sent of their family five men from their coasts, *men of valour, from [d]Zorah, and from Eshtaol, [e]to spy out the land, and to search it; and they said unto them, Go, search the land: who when they came to [f]mount Ephraim, to the house of Micah, they lodged there.

3 When they were by the house of Micah, [g]they knew the voice of the young man the Levite: and they turned in thither, and said unto him, Who brought thee hither? and what makest thou in this place? [h]and what hast thou here?

4 And he said unto them, Thus and thus dealeth Micah with me, and hath [i]hired me, and I am his priest.

5 And they said unto him, [k]Ask counsel,[2] we pray thee, [l]of God, that we may know whether our way which we go shall be prosperous.

6 And the priest said unto them, [m]Go in peace: [n]before the LORD is your way wherein ye go.

7 ¶ Then the five men departed, and came to †Laish,[3] and saw the people that were therein, [o]how they dwelt careless, after the manner of the Zidonians, quiet and secure; and there was no ‡magistrate in the land, that might put them to shame in any thing; and they were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any man.

8 And they came unto their brethren to [p]Zorah and Eshtaol: and their brethren said unto them, What say ye?

9 And they said, [q]Arise, that we may go up against them: for we have seen the land, and, behold, it is very good: and [r]are ye still? [s]be not slothful to go,[4] and to enter to possess the land.

10 When ye go, ye shall come unto a people secure, and to a large land: for [t]God hath given it into your hands; a place [u]where there is no want of any thing that is in the earth.

11 ¶ And there went from thence of the family of the Danites, out of Zorah and out of Eshtaol, six hundred men *appointed with weapons of war.

12 And they went up, and pitched in [v]Kirjath-jearim, in Judah: wherefore they called that place [x]Mahaneh-dan unto this day: behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim.

13 And they passed thence unto [y]mount Ephraim, and came unto the house of Micah.

14 ¶ Then answered the five men that went to spy out the country of Laish, and said unto their brethren, Do ye know that there is [z]in these houses an ephod, and teraphim, and a graven image, and a molten image? [a]now therefore consider[5] what ye have to do.

15 And they turned thitherward, and came to the house of the young man the Levite, even unto the house of Micah, and [b]saluted him.

16 And the [b]six hundred men appointed with their weapons of war, which were of the children of Dan, stood by the entering of the gate.

17 And the [c]five men that went to spy out the land went up, and came in thither, and took [d]the graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image: and the priest stood in the entering of the gate with the six hundred men that were appointed with weapons of war.

18 And these went into Micah's house, and fetched the carved image, the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image. Then said the priest unto them, What do ye?

19 And they said unto him, Hold thy peace, [e]lay thine hand upon thy mouth, and go with us, and be to us [f]a father and a priest: is it better for thee to be a priest unto the house of one man, or that thou be a priest unto a tribe and a family in Israel?

20 And the priest's [g]heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midst of the people.

21 So they turned and departed, and put the little ones and their cattle and the carriage before them.

22 ¶ And when they were a good way from the house of Micah, the men that were in the houses near to Micah's house were gathered together, and overtook the children of Dan.

23 And they cried unto the children of Dan. And they turned their faces, and said unto Micah, [h]What aileth thee, that thou *comest with such a company?

24 And he said, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the priest, and ye are gone away: and [i]what have I more?[6] and what is this that ye say unto me, What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan said unto him, the sacerdotal office; and Micah presumed to consecrate him. And so satisfied was Micah with what he had done, that he deemed himself sure of the Lord's blessing on that account: for, it seems he deemed the priesthood of his son informal. But instead of having now done better, he had added to all his other crimes, that of tempting a Levite to act as a priest, and to commit idolatry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Men naturally love their own inventions in religion, being more flattering to pride, and indulgent to their sloth and lusts, than the appointments of God; and the liberality of superstitious people often shames the niggardliness of the professors of true religion.—They who once deviate from the rule of the sacred Scriptures will wander still more widely, and bewilder themselves more entirely; and will presumptuously expect a reward for the very practices which God abhors!—When pride, an unsettled temper, ignorance, and sloth, in those ordained to the ministry, meet with poverty, or extravagance, by the prospect of secular advantage, they may be induced to patronize crimes, and become ringleaders in transgression; while their example and concurrence quiet every remaining scruple in the consciences of others.—Many wealthy people love to have such "Levites for their priests," because, instead of reproving, they embolden them in, their sins; and induce them to conclude, that there is no reality in religion, as its ministers are so mercenary and ungodly.—Scott.

CHAP. XVIII. DANITE SPIES.—Ver. 5, 6. It does not appear that the Danites had consulted the Lord by his high priest, about their intended enterprise: but when the spies met with this Levite, whom they had known in his former rambles, and were informed by him that he was become a priest, they bethought themselves of inquiring by him; in which their ignorance and inattention were lamentably great.—The Levite, it is probable, having gone through his form, answered them, according to their inclinations, in the language of piety: and his words being verified by the event, raised the reputation of the oracle, and sanctioned the idolatry.—Thus all the mistakes and lies of fortune-tellers, monthly prognosticators, and other pretended prophets, are overlooked or soon forgotten, because they sometimes happen to conjecture right; and these random guesses raise their credit with the ignorant and credulous.—Scott.

LAISH.—The people of Laish dwelt careless, quiet, and secure, their gates left open, their walls out of repair, because under no apprehension of danger, any way; though their wickedness was so great, that they had reason to fear divine vengeance every day. It was a sign that the Israelites, through their sloth and cowardice, were not now such a terror to the Canaanites, as they had been when they first came among them, else the city of Laish, which, probably, knew itself to be assigned to them, would not have been so very secure. Though they were an open and inland town, they "lived secure, like the Zidonians," who were surrounded with the sea, and were well fortified both by art and nature; but were "far from the Zidonians," who therefore could not come in to their assistance, nor help to defend them from the danger, which, by debauching their manners, they had helped to bring them into. And lastly, They had "no business with any man," which bespeaks either the idleness they affected, they followed no trade, and so grew lazy and luxurious, and utterly unable to defend themselves, or the independency they affected, they scorned to be either in subjection to, or alliance with, any of their neighbours, and so they had none to protect them, or bring in any aid to them. They cared for nobody, and therefore nobody cared for them. Such as these, were the men of Laish.

DANITE EXPEDITION.—Ver. 11—13. Their military men were but six hundred in all, not a hundredth part of that tribe, for when they entered Canaan, the Danites were above sixty-four thousand, Num. xxvi. 43. It was strange that none of their brethren of their own tribe, much less of any other, came in to their assistance; but it was long after Israel came to Canaan, before there appeared among them any thing of a public spirit, or concern for a common interest, which was the reason why they seldom united in a common head, and that kept them low and inconsiderable. It appears, by ver. 21, that these six hundred were the whole number that went to settle there, for they had their families and effects with them, their "little ones and cattle," so confident were they of success. The other tribes gave them a free passage through their country; their first day's march brought them to Kirjath-jearim, ver. 12, and such rare things were military encampments now become in Israel, that the place where they rested that night was from thence called "Mahaneh-dan," the "camp of Dan;" and, probably, the place whence they began their march between Zorah and Eshtaol, was called by the same name, and is meant, chap. xiii. 25. The second day's march brought them unto mount Ephraim, near Micah's house, ver. 13, and there we must pause a while.—Henry.

FLIGHT OF MICAH'S PRIEST.—Ver. 13—26. The Levite's answer to the spies, having been apparently verified by the event; they seem to have concluded, that he would be a valuable acquisition, if they could induce him to accompany them; especially if they could also take Micah's images, ephod, and teraphim with them: and at their instance, the Danites were led to form a plan for that purpose. They were going to seek a settlement at a great distance from Shiloh; and, it may well be thought, were desirous of excusing themselves from the long journeys which attending on the worship at the sanctuary would require: and here was a religion, a priest, and an oracle, ready prepared for their purpose. They were evidently very ignorant; and they absurdly concluded,

8 And he arose early in the morning on the fifth day to depart: and the damsel's father said, Comfort thine heart, I pray thee. And they tarried [l]until afternoon, and did eat both of them.

9 And when the man rose up to depart, he, and his concubine, and his servant, his father-in-law, the damsel's father, said unto him, Behold, now the day [*]draweth toward evening,[3] I pray you tarry all night: behold, the [†]day groweth to an end, lodge here, that thine heart may be merry; and [k]to-morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayest go [‡]home.

that they should, by taking these, secure the presence and favour of God, in their expedition and settlement. They coveted Micah's house of gods; and, supposing that he could not be induced by fair means to part with them, they determined to plunder his temple; and after they had effected this, they found no difficulty in engaging his priest to accompany them, by a prospect of far better preferment than he then possessed. They perhaps supposed the piety of their motives, and the goodness of their end, would justify the means: but it was a base robbery of Micah, aggravated by the Levite's ingratitude, and their violence and menaces; but was a proper introduction to their subsequent idolatry and apostacy.—Micah, though ignorant and immoral, yet deemed his religion his chief treasure; and when the Danites had taken from him that in which he had gloried, and on account of which he was confident "the Lord would do him good," he counted himself to have lost all, and intimated that they might as well have taken all the rest of his substance! Yet his zeal for his images did not induce him to venture his life in attempting to recover them.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. An Unhappy Marriage.—The domestic affairs of this Levite would not have been related thus largely, but to make way for the following story of the injuries done him, in which the whole nation interested themselves. Bishop Hall's first remark upon this story is, "That there is no complaint of a publicly ordered state, but there is a Levite at one end of it, either as an agent, or as a patient." In Micah's idolatry, a Levite was active; in the wickedness of Gibeah, a Levite was passive; "no tribe shall sooner feel the want of government than that of Levi;" and in all the book of Judges, no mention is made of any of that tribe, but of these two. This Levite was of mount Ephraim, ver. 1. He married a wife of Bethlehem-Judah; she is called his concubine, because she was not endowed, for perhaps he had nothing to endow her with, being himself a sojourner, and not settled; but it does not appear that he had any other wife, and the margin calls her a wife, a concubine, ver. 1. She came from the same city that Micah's Levite came from, as if Bethlehem-Judah owed a double ill turn to mount Ephraim, for she was as bad for a Levite's wife, as that other for a Levite. This Levite's concubine played the whore, and eloped from her husband, ver. 2. The Chaldee reads it, only that she carried it insolently to him, or despised him, and he being displeased at it, she went away from him, and (which was not fair,) was received and entertained at her father's house. Had her husband turned her out of doors unjustly, her father ought to have pitied her affliction; but when she treacherously departed from her husband to embrace the bosom of a stranger, her father ought not to have countenanced her sin. Perhaps she would not have violated her duty to her husband, if she had not known too well where she would be kindly received. Children's ruin is often owing very much to parents' indulgence.

Wickedness of Gibeah.—Its people got the Levite's wife among them, and abused her to death, ver. 25. They slighted the old man's offer of his daughter to their lust, either because she was not handsome, or because they knew her to be one of great gravity and modesty; but when the Levite brought them his concubine, they took her with them by force to the place appointed for their filthiness. Josephus, in his narrative of this story, makes her to be the person they had a design upon when they beset the house, and says nothing of their villanous design upon the Levite himself. They saw her (he says) in the street, when they came into the town, and were smitten with her beauty; and perhaps, though she was reconciled to her husband, her looks did not speak her to be one of the most modest; many bring mischief of this kind upon themselves by their loose carriage and behaviour; a little spark may kindle a great fire. One would think the Levite should have followed them, to see what became of his wife, but it is probable he durst not, lest they should do him a mischief. In the miserable end of this woman, we may see the righteous hand of God, punishing her for her former uncleanness, when she played the whore against her husband, ver. 12. Though her father had countenanced her, and her husband had forgiven her, and the fault was forgotten now that the quarrel was made up, yet God remembered it against her, when he suffered these wicked men thus wretchedly to abuse her; in doing which, how unrighteous soever they were, in permitting it the Lord was righteous. Her punishment answered her sin, Culpa libido fuit, pœna libido fuit—Lust was her sin, and lust was her punishment. By the law of Moses, she was to have been put to death for her adultery; she escaped that punishment from men, yet vengeance pursued her; for if there was no king in Israel, yet there was a God in Israel, a God that judgeth in the earth.

Terrible Summons to the Tribes.—The Levite divided his wife's corpse into twelve pieces, "according to the bones," so some read it, that is, by the joints, sending one to each tribe, even to Benjamin among the rest, with the hope that some among them would have been moved to join in punishing so great a villany, and the more warmly, because committed by some of their own tribe. It did indeed look very barbarous, thus to mangle a dead body, which, having been so wretchedly dishonoured, ought to have been decently interred; but the Levite designed hereby, 1. To represent their barbarous usage of his wife, whom they had better have cut in pieces thus, than have used as they did. 2. To express his own passionate concern, and thereby to excite the like in them. And it had the desired effect. All that saw the pieces of the dead body, and were told how the matter was, expressed the same sentiments upon it. The men of Gibeah had going to [p]the house of the LORD; and there is no man that [l]receiveth me to house.

19 Yet there is both straw and provender for our asses; and there is bread and wine also for me and for thy handmaid, and for the young man which is with thy servants: there is no want of any thing.

20 And the old man said, [q]Peace be with thee; howsoever [t]let all thy wants lie upon me;[7] only [u]lodge not in the street.

21 So he brought him into his house, and gave provender unto the asses: and [x]they washed their feet, and did eat and drink.

22 ¶ Now as they were making their hearts merry, behold, [y]the men of the city, certain [z]sons of Belial, beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house, the old man, saying, [a]Bring forth the man that came into thine house, that we may know him.

23 And [b]the man, the master of the house, went out unto them, and said unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not so wickedly; seeing that this man is come into mine house, [c]do not this folly.

24 Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine; [d]them I will bring out now, and [e]humble ye them, and do with them what seemeth good unto you: but unto this man do not *so vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: so the man took his concubine,[8] and brought her forth unto them; and they [f]knew her, [g]and abused her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to spring, they let her go.

26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the man's house where [h]her lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord rose up in the morning, and opened the doors of the house, and went out to go his way: and, behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the house, and her hands were upon the threshold.

28 And he said unto her, Up, and let us be going. [i]But none answered.[9] Then the man took her up upon an ass, and the man rose up, and gat him unto his place.

29 ¶ And when he was come into his house, he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and [k]divided her,[10] together [l]with her bones, into twelve pieces, and sent her into all the coasts of Israel.

30 And it was so, that all that saw it said, There was no such deed done nor seen, from the day that the children of Israel came up out of the land of Egypt unto this day: [m]consider of it, take advice, and speak your minds.

CHAP. XX.

The Levite, in a general assembly, declareth his wrong, 1; their decree, 8. The Benjamites are destroyed, 26.

THEN [a]all the children of Israel went out, and the congregation was gathered together [b]as one man, [c]from Dan even to Beer-sheba, [d]with the land of Gilead, [e]unto the LORD [f]in Mizpeh.[1]

2 And the chief of all the people, even of all the tribes of Israel, presented themselves in the assembly of the people of God, four hundred thousand footmen that [g]drew sword.

3 (Now [h]the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Israel were gone up to Mizpeh.) Then said the children of Israel, Tell us, how was this wickedness?

4 And *the Levite, the husband of the woman that was slain, answered and said, [i]I came into Gibeah that belongeth to Benjamin, I and my concubine, to lodge.

5 And the men of Gibeah rose against me, and [k]beset the house round about upon me by night, and thought to have slain me:[2] and my concubine have they [t]forced, that she is dead.

6 And I took my concubine, and [l]cut her in pieces, and sent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Israel: for they have committed lewdness and [m]folly in Israel.

7 Behold, [n]ye are all children of Israel; [o]give here your advice and counsel.

8 ¶ And all the people arose [p]as one man, saying, [q]We will not any of us go to his tent, neither will we any of us turn into his house.

9 But now this shall be the thing which we will do to Gibeah; we will go up [r]by lot against it;

10 And we will take ten men of an hundred throughout all the tribes of Israel, and an hundred of a thousand, and a thousand out of ten thousand, to fetch victual for the people, that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Israel.

11 So all the men of Israel were gathered against the city, [‡]knit together as one man.

12 ¶ And the tribes of Israel [s]sent men through all the tribe of Benjamin, saying, What wickedness is this that is done among you?

13 Now therefore [t]deliver us the men,[3] [u]the children of Belial, which are in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and [x]put away evil from Israel. But the children of Benjamin [y]would not hearken to the voice of their brethren the children of Israel:

14 But the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together out of the cities unto Gibeah, [z]to go out to battle against the children of Israel.

been guilty of a very heinous piece of wickedness, the like to which had never been known before in Israel, ver. 30. It was a complicated crime, loaded and blackened with all possible aggravations.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—More inhumanity and villany may be found among degenerate professors of Christianity than among infidels; and in general where we expect the most kindness, we meet with the greatest injuries, that we may learn to "cease from man."—An unfeeling disregard to the wants of others generally accompanies sensuality and ungoverned lusts; and there are numbers who imitate the example of those, whose shameful crimes have been recorded in their punishment, to one who copies the examples of hospitality, integrity, and piety, mentioned with commendation in the Scriptures.—When men have cast off the fear of God, they are frequently given up to their own vile lusts, even to disgrace human nature, and to exceed the very beasts in brutishness; and Israelites especially, who rebel against the light, and grow hardened under the means of grace, will become as abandoned as the inhabitants of Sodom, and vastly more inexcusable.—When iniquity becomes generally triumphant, few will dare to protest against it; and it is safer to venture into a den of lions than into such recesses of iniquity. Yet in the worst of times there are some who venture scorn and reproach, in being kind to the servants of God for his sake, and who do not grudge the expense of hospitality; for, while idleness and sensual lusts waste a man's substance, honest labour and frugality support the expense of being liberal. But such persons live as strangers in this world, and must expect to be abused by their wicked neighbours, except when an equitable government affords them benign protection.—In imitating the good actions of God's people, men are very liable to be betrayed into their faults, against which they need be doubly circumspect; and an unbelieving policy often induces them to make unwarrantable concessions; but committing sin to avoid danger, will generally involve them in still greater difficulties.—The righteous Lord permits transgressors to execute his just vengeance on one another; and if the scene described in this chapter appears exceedingly horrible, what will be the discoveries of the day of judgment? Yet such is human nature! And though few believe the humbling truth, the seeds of all this wickedness are in every human heart! and if we have not committed such abominations in our lives, we owe the more gratitude to the Lord, for the restraints of his providence, or the influences of his grace. While, therefore, it behoves those in authority to "consider, take advice, and speak their minds," by what means crimes may best be prevented by the salutary punishment of criminals; we may each of us consider, how to escape from the wrath to come, to mortify the sins of our own hearts, to resist Satan's temptations, and to avoid the pollutions that are in the world; and how we may best be prepared for our temporal calamities, and extract benefits from them. —Scott.

CHAP. XX. RESPONSE TO THE LEVITE'S SUMMONS—CONVENTION OF THE STATES.—Here is a general meeting of all the congregation of Israel, to examine the matter concerning the Levite's concubine, and to consider what was to be done upon it, ver. 1, 2. It does not appear that they were summoned by the authority of any one common head, but they came together by the consent and agreement, as it were, of one common heart, fired with a holy zeal for the honour of God and Israel. 1. The place of their meeting was Mizpeh, they gathered together unto the Lord there; for Mizpeh was so very near to Shiloh, that their encampment might very well be supposed to reach from Mizpeh to Shiloh. Shiloh was a small town, and therefore, when there was a general meeting of the people to present themselves before God, they chose Mizpeh for their head-quarters, which was the next adjoining city of note; perhaps, because they were not willing to give that trouble to Shiloh, which so great an assembly would occasion; it being the residence of the priests that attended the tabernacle. 2. The persons that met were all Israel, from Dan (the city very lately so called, chap. xviii. 29,) in the north, to Beer-sheba in the south, with the land of Gilead, that is, the tribes on the other side Jordan, all as one man; so unanimous were they in their concern for the public good. Here was an assembly of the people of God; not a convocation of the Levites and priests, though a Levite was the person principally concerned in the cause, but an assembly of the people, to whom the Levite referred himself with an Appello populum—I appeal to the people; the "people of God were four hundred thousand footmen that drew sword," that is, were armed and disciplined, and fit for service; and some of them, perhaps, such as had "known the wars of Canaan," chap. iii. 1. In this assembly of all Israel, the chief (or corners) of the people (for the rulers are the corner-stones of the people that keep all together) presented themselves as the representatives of the rest; they rendered themselves at their respective posts, at the head of the thousands and hundreds, the fifties and tens, over which they presided; for so much order and government, we may suppose at least, they had among them, though they had no general or commander-in-chief. So that here was, (1.) A general congress of the states for counsel; the chief of the people presented themselves, to lead and direct in this affair. (2.) A general rendezvous of the militia for action; all that drew sword and were men of war, ver. 17, not hirelings or pressed men, but the best freeholders, that went at their own charge.

DEMAND UPON GIBEAH.—We have here the fair and just demand which the tribes of Israel, now encamped, sent to the tribe of Benjamin, to deliver up the malefactors of

A. M. 2579.—B. C. 1425.

15 And the children of Benjamin were numbered at that time out of the cities [a]twenty and six thousand men that drew sword, beside the inhabitants of Gibeah, which were numbered seven hundred chosen men.

16 Among all this people there were seven hundred chosen men [b]lefthanded,[4] every one could [c]sling stones at an hair-breadth, and not miss.

17 And the men of Israel, beside Benjamin, were numbered [d]four hundred thousand men that drew sword: all these were men of war.

18 ¶ And the children of Israel arose, and went up to the [e]house of God, and [f]asked counsel of God, and said, Which of us shall go up first to the battle against the children of Benjamin? And the LORD said, [g]Judah shall go up first.

19 And the children of Israel [h]rose up in the morning, and encamped against Gibeah.

20 And the men of Israel went out to battle against Benjamin; and the men of Israel put themselves in array to fight against them at Gibeah.

21 And [i]the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and [k]destroyed down to the ground of the Israelites that day twenty and two thousand men.[5]

22 ¶ And the people the men of Israel [l]encouraged themselves, and set their battle again in array, in the place where they put themselves in array the first day.

23 (And the children of Israel went up and [m]wept before the LORD until even, and asked counsel of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up again to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother? And the LORD said, Go up against him.)

24 And the children of Israel came near against the children of Benjamin the second day.

25 And Benjamin went forth against them out of Gibeah the second day, and [n]destroyed down to the ground of the children of Israel again eighteen thousand men; all these drew the sword.

26 ¶ Then all the children of Israel, and all the people, went up, and came unto the house of God, and [o]wept, and sat there before the LORD, and fasted [6]that day until even, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

27 And the children of Israel [p]enquired of the LORD,[7] (for [q]the ark of the covenant of God was there in those days;

28 And [r]Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, [s]stood before it in those days,) saying, [t]Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease? And the LORD said, [u]Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hand.

29 ¶ And Israel set [x]liers in wait round about Gibeah.

30 And the children of Israel went up against the children of Benjamin on the third day,[8] and put themselves in array against Gibeah, as at other times.

31 And the children of Benjamin went out against the people, and were [y]drawn away[9] from the city; and they began to [z]smite of the people, and kill, as at other times, in the highways, of which one goeth up to [1]the house of God, and the other to [2]Gibeah[10] in the field, about [a]thirty men of Israel.

32 And the children of Benjamin said, They are smitten down before us, as at the first. But the children of Israel said, [b]Let us flee, and draw them from the city unto the highways.

33 And all the men of Israel [c]rose up out of their place, and put themselves in array at Baal-tamar:[11] and the liers in wait of Israel came forth out of their places, even out of the meadows of Gibeah.[12]

34 And there came against Gibeah [d]ten thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and the battle was sore: but they [e]knew not that evil was near them.

35 And the LORD smote Benjamin before Israel: and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamites that day [f]twenty and five thousand and an hundred men: all these drew the sword.

36 So the children of Benjamin saw that they were smitten: [g]for the men of Israel gave place to the Benjamites, because they trusted unto the liers in wait which they had set beside Gibeah.

37 And [h]the liers in wait hasted, and rushed upon Gibeah: and the liers in wait [3]drew themselves along, and smote all the city with the edge of the sword.

38 Now there was an appointed [4]sign between the men of Israel [5]and the liers in wait, that they should make a great [6]flame with smoke to rise up out of the city.

39 And [i]when the men of Israel retired in the battle, Benjamin began to [j]smite and kill of the men of Israel about thirty persons: for they said, Surely they are smitten down before us, as in the first battle.

40 But when the flame began to arise up out of the city with [k]a pillar of smoke, the Benjamites [l]looked behind them, and, behold, the [7]flame of the city ascended up to heaven.

41 And when the men of Israel turned again, the men of Benjamin [m]were amazed: for they saw that evil was [8]come upon them.

42 Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Israel unto the way of the Gibeah to justice, ver. 12, 13. If the tribe of Benjamin had come up, as they ought to have done, to the assembly, and agreed with them in their resolutions, they had had none to deal with but the men of Gibeah only, but they, by their absence, taking part with the criminals, application must be made to them all; the Israelites were zealous against the wickedness that was committed, yet they were discreet in their zeal, and did not think it would justify them in falling upon the whole tribe of Benjamin, unless they, by refusing to give up the criminals, and protecting them against justice, should make themselves guilty, ex post facto—as accessaries after the fact. They desire them to consider how great the wickedness was, that was committed, ver. 12, and that it was done among them: and how necessary it was therefore that they should either punish the malefactors with death themselves, according to the law of Moses, or deliver them up to this general assembly, to be so much the more publicly and solemnly punished, that evil might be put away from Israel, the national guilt removed, the infection stopped by cutting off the gangrened part, and national judgments prevented; for the sin was so very like that of the Sodomites, that they might justly fear, if they did not punish it, God would rain hail from heaven upon them, as he did, not only upon Sodom, but the neighbouring cities.—Henry.

BENJAMIN'S FIRST SUCCESS.—Ver. 20—25. The people were much afflicted at the severe rebuke which they met with on this occasion, and affected with a sense of their sin, as having brought it upon them: and they accordingly made their inquiry more particular than before. But they were not duly humbled: and therefore, though the Lord commanded them to go up to battle, they were again put to the worst, and lost so many men, that the whole number slain in the two encounters amounted to many more than all the fighting men of the tribe of Benjamin! This was a public rebuke for national crimes, and showed that though it was their duty to punish the offenders, they had not gone about it in the proper manner, and in a proper dependence on the Lord.—Their neglect of punishing idolatry in the Danites, while they were so zealous to punish the lewdness of the Benjamites, is mentioned by some Jewish writers as the cause of these disasters, and with great justice.—Scott.

UTTER DEFEAT OF BENJAMIN.—The body of the army faced the city of Gibeah, as they had done before advancing toward the gates, ver. 30. The Benjamites, the body of whose army was now quartered at Gibeah, sallied out upon them, charged them with great bravery; the besiegers gave back, retired with precipitation, as if their hearts failed them upon the sight of the Benjamites, which they were willing to believe, who proudly conceited that by their former success they had made themselves very formidable; some loss the Israelites sustained in this counterfeit flight, about thirty men were cut off in their rear, ver. 31, 39. But when the Benjamites were all drawn out of the city, the ambush seized the city, ver. 37, gave a signal to the body of the army, ver. 38, 40, which immediately turned upon them, ver. 41, and, it should seem, another considerable party that was posted at Baal-tamar came upon them at the same time, ver. 33; so that the Benjamites were quite surrounded, which put them into the greatest consternation that could be: a sense of guilt now disheartened them, and the higher their hopes had been raised, the more grievous was this confusion. At first, "the battle was sore," ver. 34, the Benjamites fought with fury; but when they saw what a snare they were drawn into, they thought one pair of heels (as we say) was worth two pair of hands, and they made the best of their way "toward the wilderness," ver. 42, but in vain, "the battle overtook them," and to complete their distress, "they which came out of the cities of Israel," that waited to see the event of the battle, joined with the pursuers, and helped to cut them off. Every man's hand was against them. Observe, in this story, 1. That the Benjamites, in the beginning of the battle, were confident that the day was their own. "They are smitten down before us," ver. 32, 39. Sometimes God suffers wicked men to be lifted up in successes and hopes, that their fall may be the sorer. See how short their joy is, and their triumphing but for a moment. "Let not him that girdeth on the harness boast," except he has reason to boast in God. 2. Evil was near them, and they did not know it, ver. 34; but, ver. 41, they saw, when it was too late to prevent it, "that evil was come upon them." What evils may at any time be near us, we cannot tell, but the less they are feared, the heavier they fall: sinners will not be persuaded to see evil near them, but how dreadful will it be when it comes, and there is no escaping! 1 Thess. v. 3. 3. Though the men of Israel played their parts so well in this engagement, yet the victory is ascribed to God, ver. 35; "The Lord smote Benjamin before Israel." The battle was his, and so was the success. 4. They "trode down the men of Benjamin with ease," when God fought against them, ver. 43. It is an easy thing to trample upon those who have made God their enemy, see Mal. iv. 3.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We are again called to contemplate the fatal effects of indulged lusts, and taught to mortify every sinful inclination.—Indignation against sin, zeal, promptitude, self-denial, unanimity, and resolution in bringing criminals to justice; when united with a careful investigation of facts and circumstances, that the innocent may not be involved with the guilty, are very commendable: yet repentance of sins, personal and national, with fruits meet for repentance, a dependence on the mercy of God in Jesus Christ for forgiveness and grace, and an application to him for direction and success, are indispensably necessary to ensure his acceptance and assistance.—

9 For the people were numbered, and, behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead there.

10 And the congregation sent thither twelve thousand men of the valiantest, and commanded them, saying, [n]Go and smite the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead with the edge of the sword, with the women and the children.

16 ¶ Then the elders of the congregation said, How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing the women are destroyed out of Benjamin?

17 And they said, There must be [t]an inheritance for them that be escaped of Benjamin, that a tribe be not destroyed out of Israel.

Nature can abhor the crimes of others; but grace teaches us to loathe our own. Nature prompts us to punish others with severity; grace inclines us to exercise severity against our own lusts, and tenderness toward the persons of others.—If we attempt, however, to execute wrath upon offenders, or even to reprove and reform them, while we are under the guilt of unrepented and allowed sin in our hearts and lives; it is merciful in God to rebuke us sharply for our hypocrisy, and not to leave us to be hardened through impunity; nor can we reasonably hope to be useful to others without our own sins are pardoned.—We should not judge of the final event of things, unless we can determine it by the divine law. And if we are baffled in our endeavours, (though honestly meant and zealously persisted in,) to serve the cause of God; we ought not to infer that we should desist, or content ourselves in our ill success: but we are reminded to inquire, whether we have begun our work in the proper manner? whether our private conduct do not blight our public endeavours? whether we have not been precipitate in our measures? whether we have duly adverted to our own character as sinners, and are habitually exercising "repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ?" whether we have not failed of humility and tenderness towards others; and by self-preference and self-confidence, provoked the Lord to leave us experimentally to learn what we are in ourselves, and what we can do without him? Many an honest and zealous endeavour, in a good cause, has attained but little success, for such reasons as these. We should therefore strictly examine ourselves, and be deeply humbled for our sins; praying earnestly, that God "would not condemn us, but show us wherefore he contendeth with us."—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. MARTIAL LAW ON JABESH-GILEAD.—Ver. 9—12. Jabesh-gilead lay at a distance, beyond Jordan, on the borders of Ammon, and perhaps the inhabitants had not heard of the vow which Israel had made. But if they had been guilty of neglect, or disaffection to the common cause, they had not assisted the Benjamites; and yet when the people were lamenting the desolations of that tribe, they proceeded to treat those, who were far less criminal, with equal rigour! They seem, however, to have considered themselves as engaged by their oath to destroy them utterly: yet they directed the detachment sent on this service to spare the virgins, or unmarried women, of good character; probably with reference to the orders given concerning the Midianitish women. But if the vow would admit of this limitation, why could they not spare the other women and children, and innocent persons, and only punish the criminals? It does not appear that they asked counsel of the Lord before they proceeded to action: and the habit of military executions, contracted in the wars of Canaan, in obeying the "express command" of God, had no doubt too great influence on them, in this transaction, which was entirely of a different nature. Indeed convenience, rather than justice or piety, seems to have induced them to spare the virgins, that they might extricate themselves from the difficulties in which their other rash oath had involved them; hoping, perhaps, that a sufficient number would be found.—The four hundred, here mentioned, seem to have been marriageable: and it is not certain, whether the female children were spared or not. "The land of Canaan" here denotes the country west of Jordan.—Scott.

THE STRATAGEM.—We have here the method that was taken to provide the two hundred Benjamites that remained, with wives. And though the tribe was reduced to a small number, they were only in care to provide each man with one wife, not with more, under pretence of multiplying them the faster. They may not bestow their daughters upon them, but, to save their oath, and yet marry some of their daughters to them, they put them into a way of taking them by surprise, and marrying them, which should be ratified by their parents' consent, ex post facto—afterward. That which gave an opportunity for the doing of this was a public ball at Shiloh, in the fields, at which all the young ladies of that city, and the parts adjacent, that were so disposed, met to dance, in honour of a "feast of the Lord" then observed; probably the feast of tabernacles, ver. 19, for that feast (Bishop Patrick says) was the only season wherein the Jewish virgins were allowed to dance; and that, not so much for their recreation, as to express their holy joy, as David, when he danced before the ark; otherwise the present melancholy posture of public affairs would have made dancing unseasonable, as Isa. xxii. 12, 13. The dancing was very modest and chaste, it was not mixed dancing; no men danced with these daughters of Shiloh, nor did any married women so far forget their gravity as to join with them. However, their dancing thus in public made them an easy prey to those that had a design upon them. The elders of Israel gave authority to the Benjaminites to do this, to "lie in wait in the vineyards" which surrounded the green they used to dance on, and, when they were in the midst of their sport, to come upon them, and catch every man a wife for himself, and carry them straight away to their own country.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When the passions are vehemently excited, those mercies appear needful, which are afterwards perceived to be unreasonable and unlawful; and therefore, when we at all suspect this to be our case, we should be sure to proceed with great caution and deliberation, if we would not make work for bitter repentance. This danger attends all contests, public and private; and a good cause often becomes the occasion of great crimes, as the excess of zeal carries men beyond all the bounds of equity and humanity.—Well might the politic Romans refuse a triumph to the commander who their brethren come unto us to complain, that we will say unto them, ‡Be favourable unto them for our sakes: because we reserved not to *each man his wife in the war: for ye did not *give unto them[g] at this time, that ye should be guilty.

23 And the children of Benjamin did so, and took them wives, according to their number, of them that danced, whom they caught: and they went and returned unto their inheritance, and [b]repaired the cities,[9] and dwe in them.

24 And the children of Israel departe thence at that time, every man to his trib and to his family, and they went out fro thence every man to his inheritance.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

This book is a kind of appendix to that of Judges, and an introduction to the subsequent history; and it is most probable that it was written by Samuel, after he had anointed David to be king.—Ruth, a Moabitess, having been married to the son of Elimelech, of the tribe of Judah, after the death of her husband and father-in-law accompanied Naomi, her mother-in-law, into the land of Israel, from love to her and to true religion, and there she was married to Boaz, a near kinsman, and thus brought into the line of David, and consequently of Christ the Son of David. The chief events occurred at Bethlehem, the city of David; whose genealogy from Pharez, the son of Judah, concludes the book, and is attested by the Evangelists Matthew and Luke.—It is not easy to fix the chronology of these events; they occurred in the days when the judges ruled; but there is no evidence to determine exactly under which of them. The narrative itself is very interesting and instructive. It shews the condescending providential care of God to the minutest concerns of his people; and the circumstance of a Moabitess becoming an ancestor of Christ, seems to have been a pre-intimation of the calling of the Gentiles into his Church.

conquered in civil war; in which the common interest is weakened, and the common enemies exult, whatever party acquires the ascendancy. Such unnatural contentions are generally conducted with the most pertinacious fury and envenomed resentment, through the depravity of the human heart and the subtlety of Satan.—But this enemy is most of all gratified, when he can excite divisions and contentions in the church, by which the truth is disgraced, the weak and prejudiced are stumbled, and the enemies of religion alone rejoiced. Yet many persons of apparent godliness use greater asperity against their brethren, who are not exactly of their mind, than against the avowed opposers of all religion! But contests thus managed end in bitterness; and the combatants will ere long weep over the effects of their own success.—Nothing can be more absurd, than solemn oaths and vows made in the heat of passion; many have by them entangled themselves in inextricable perplexity; and been thus induced to add one crime to another, or to use the most disingenuous evasions and equivocations. Of all things, such solemn and important engagements require the most cautious reflection on future probable consequences.—Our penitent confessions, and devotional exercises, are too often succeeded by relapses into sin, for want of simply seeking direction from God, and depending on him to uphold us.—Even necessary justice should be executed with deep concern: and men would not be forward in inflicting vengeance on the less guilty, while more atrocious criminals were spared; were they not more ambitious of dominion for themselves, than zealous for the glory of God?—Even lawful employments may induce habits, which will be apt to influence the conduct in concerns of another nature, and with very bad effect: we should therefore seek for self-knowledge, keep a strict watch over our hearts, and daily consult the word of God as the rule of our duty.—Scott.

CHAP. I. Elimelech's Emigration to Moab.—It seems there was plenty in the country of Moab, when there was scarcity of bread in the land of Israel. Common gifts of providence are often bestowed in greater plenty upon those that are strangers to God, than upon those that know and worship him. "Moab is at ease from his youth," while "Israel is emptied from vessel to vessel," Jer. xlviii. 11; not because God loves Moabites better, but because they have "their portion in this life." Thither Elimelech goes, not to settle for ever, but to sojourn for a time, during the dearth, as Abraham, on the like occasion, went into Egypt, and Isaac into the land of the Philistines. Now here, 1. It was [illegible] to provide for his family; and his taking his wife and children with him, [illegible] "If any provide not for his own, he hath denied the [illegible] 3. When he was in his straits, he did not forsake his [illegible] seek his fortune himself, and leave his wife and children to shift for their own maintenance, but, as became a tender husband, and a loving father, where he went, he took them with him, not as the ostrich, Job xxxix. 16. But 2. I see not how his removal into the country of Moab, upon this occasion, could be justified. Abraham and Isaac were only sojourners in Canaan, and it was agreeable to their condition to remove; but the seed of Israel were now fixed, and ought not to remove into the territories of the heathen. What reason had Elimelech to go more than any of his neighbours? If by any ill husbandry he had wasted his patrimony, and sold his land, or mortgaged it, (as it should seem, chap. iv. 3, 4,) which brought him into a more necessitous condition than others, the law of God had obliged his neighbours to relieve him, Lev. xxv. 35; but that was not his case, for he went out full, ver. 21. By those who tarried at home, it appears that the famine was not so extreme, but that there was sufficient to keep life and soul together; and his charge was but small, only two sons. But if he could not be content with the short allowance that his neighbours took up with, and "in the day of famine could not be satisfied," unless he kept as plentiful a table as he had done formerly; if he could not live in hope that there would come years of plenty again in due time, or could not with patience wait for these years, it was his fault, and he did by it dishonour God, and the good land he had given them, "weaken the hands of his brethren," with whom he should have been willing to take his lot, and set an ill example to others. If all should do as he did, Canaan would be dispeopled.

Ruth's deep Affection and Piety.—1. She begs of her mother-in-law to say no more against her going, "'Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee;' for all thy entreaties now cannot shake that resolution which thy instructions formerly have wrought in me; and therefore let me hear no more of them." Note, It is a great vexation and uneasiness to those that are resolved for God and religion, to be tempted and solicited to alter their resolution. They that would not think of it, would not hear of it. "Entreat me not." The margin reads it, "Be not against me." Note, We are to reckon those against us, and really our enemies, that would hinder us in our way to the heavenly Canaan. Our relations they may be, but they cannot be our friends, that would dissuade us from, and discourage us in, the service of God and the work of religion. 2. She is very particular in her resolution to cleave to her, and never to forsake her; and she speaks the language of one resolved for God and heaven. She is so in love, not with her mother's beauty, or riches, or quality, (all these were withered and gone,) but with her wisdom, [illegible] which remained with her, even in her poverty and [illegible] 11.) She will travel with her, [illegible] I will go, [illegible] way; for I am [y] too old to have an husband. If I should say, I have hope, if [z] I should have an husband also to-night, and should also bear sons;

13 Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye [a] stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for [b] it grieveth me much for your sakes, that [c] the hand of the LORD [d] is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and [e] Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but [f] Ruth clave unto her.

15 And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law [g] is gone back unto her people, and unto [h] her gods: [i] return thou after thy sister-in-law.

16 And Ruth said, [*] Entreat me not [k] to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for [l] whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: [m] thy people shall be my people, and [n] thy God my God:

17 Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: [o] the LORD do so to me, [5] and more also, if ought [p] but death part thee and me.

18 [q] When she saw that she [†] was [r] stedfastly minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her.

19 ¶ So they two went until they came to Beth-lehem. And it came to pass, when they were come to Beth-lehem, that [s] all the city was moved about them, and they said, [t] Is this Naomi?

20 And she said unto them, Call me not [‡] Naomi,[6] call me [u] Mara: for [v] the Almighty hath [w] dealt very bitterly with me.

21 I went out full, [x] and the LORD hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing [y] the LORD hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in [z] the beginning of barley harvest.

CHAP. II.

Ruth gleaneth in the fields of Boaz, 1; he taketh knowledge of her, 4, and sheweth her favour, 8.

AND Naomi had a [a] kinsman of her husband's, [b] a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name was [c] Boaz.

2 And Ruth the Moabitess said unto Naomi, Let me now go to the field, and [d] glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find grace. And she said unto her, Go, my daughter.

3 And she went, and came, and [] gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her [] hap[1] was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

4 ¶ And, behold, Boaz came from Beth-lehem, and said unto the reapers, [f] The LORD be with you. [g] And they answered him, The LORD bless thee.

5 Then said [h] Boaz unto his servant[2] that was set over the reapers, Whose damsel is this?

6 And [i] the servant that was set over the reapers answered and said, [k] It is the Moabitish damsel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab:

7 And she said, [l] I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came, and hath [m] continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house.

8 Then said Boaz unto Ruth, Hearest thou not, [n] my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but [o] abide here fast by my maidens:

9 Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not [p] touch thee? and when thou art athirst, [q] go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn.

10 Then she [r] fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, [s] Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldest take knowledge of me, [t] seeing I am a stranger?

11 And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been shewed me, [u] all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband: and how [x] thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore.

12 The LORD [y] recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the LORD God of Israel, under whose [z] wings thou art come to trust.

13 Then she said, [†] Let me find favour in thy sight, my lord; for that thou hast comforted me, and for that thou hast spoken [‡] friendly unto thine handmaid, though I be [a] not like unto one of thine handmaidens.

14 And Boaz said unto her, [b] At mealtime come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. And she sat beside the reapers: and he reached her [c] parched corn,[3] and [d] she did eat, and was sufficed, and left.

15 And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, Let her glean even among the sheaves, and [§] reproach her not:

never saw, and which I have been trained up in a low and ill opinion of; though far from my own country, yet with thee every road shall be pleasant." (2.) She will dwell with her; "'Where thou lodgest, I will lodge,' though it be in a cottage, nay, though it be no better a lodging than Jacob had, when he had the stones for his pillow. Where thou settest up thy staff, I will set up mine, be it where it will." (3.) She will twist interests with her, "Thy people shall be my people." From Naomi's character she concludes certainly, that that great nation was a wise and an understanding people; she judges of them all by her good mother, who, wherever she went, was a credit to her country, (as all those should study to be, who profess relation to the better country, that is, the heavenly,) and therefore she will think herself happy if she may be reckoned one of them. "Thy people shall be mine to associate with, to be conformable to, and to be concerned for." (4.) She will join in religion with her; thus she determined to be hers, usque ad aras—to the very altars. "'Thy God shall be my God,' and farewell to all the gods of Moab, which are vanity and a lie. I will adore the God of Israel, the only living and true God, trust in him alone, serve him, and in every thing be ruled by him;" this is to take the Lord for our God. (5.) She will gladly die in the same bed, "Where thou diest will I die;" she takes it for granted they must both die, and that, in all probability, Naomi, as the elder, would die first, and resolves to continue in the same house, if it might be, till her days also were fulfilled; intimating likewise a desire to partake of her happiness in death: she wishes to die in the same place, in token of her dying after the same manner, "Let me die the death of righteous Naomi, and let my last end be like hers." (6.) She will desire to be buried in the same grave, and to lay her bones by hers; "There will I be buried;" not desiring to have so much as her dead body carried back to the country of Moab, in token of any remaining kindness for it; but Naomi and she having joined souls, she desires they may mingle dust, in hopes of rising together, and being together for ever in the other world.—Henry.

CHAP. II. RUTH'S CHARACTER.—Let Ruth be remembered, who is a great example, 1. Of humility; when providence had made her poor, she did not say, "To glean, which is in effect to beg, I am ashamed;" but cheerfully stoops to the meanness of her circumstances, and accommodates herself to her lot. High spirits can more easily starve than stoop; Ruth was none of those. She does not tell her mother she was never brought up to live upon crumbs. Though she was not brought up to it, she is brought down to it, and is not uneasy at it. Nay, it is her own motion, not her mother's injunction: humility is one of the brightest ornaments of youth, and one of the best omens. Before Ruth's honour, was this humility. Observe how humbly she speaks of herself, in her expectation of leave to glean; "Let me glean after him, in whose sight I shall find grace." She does not say, "I will go glean, and surely nobody will deny me liberty;" but, "I will go glean, in the hope that somebody will allow me the liberty." Note, Poor people must not demand kindness as a debt, but humbly ask it, and take it as a favour, though in ever so small a matter. It becomes the poor to use entreaties. 2. Of industry. She does not say to her mother-in-law, "Let me now go a-visiting to the ladies of the town, or go a-walking in the fields to take the air, and be merry, I cannot sit all day moping with you;" no, it is not sport, but business, that her heart is upon, "'Let me go and glean ears of corn,' and that will turn to some good account." She was one of those virtuous women that loved not to eat the bread of idleness, she loved to take pains. This is an example to young people; let them learn betimes to labour, and "what their hand finds to do, do it with their might;" a disposition to diligence bodes well, both for this world and the other. Love not sleep, love not sport, love not sauntering, but love business. It is also an example to poor people to work for their living, and not beg that which they are able to earn. We must not be shy of any honest employment, though it be mean, ἐργον ὀνειδος—No labour is a reproach. Sin is a thing below us, but we must not think any thing else so that Providence calls us to. 3. Of regard to her mother: though she was but her mother-in-law, and though, being loosed by death from the law of her husband, she might easily suppose herself thereby loosed from the law of her husband's mother, yet she is dutifully observant of her. She will not go out without letting her know, and asking her leave. This respect young people ought to show to their parents and governors; it is part of the honour due to them. She did not say, "Mother, if you will go with me, I will go glean:" but, "Do you sit at home, and take your ease, and I will go abroad and take pains." Juniores ad labores—Youth should work. Let young people take advice from the aged, but not put them upon toil. 4. Of dependence upon Providence; intimated in that, I will "glean after him in whose sight I shall find grace." She knows not which way to go, nor whom to inquire for, but will trust Providence to raise her up some friend or other that will be kind to her. Let us always keep up good thoughts of the Divine Providence, and believe that while we do well, it will do well for us.

BOAZ.—Boaz is an example of a good master. 1. He had a servant that was set over the reapers, ver. 6. 2. Yet he came himself to his reapers, to see how the work went forward, if he found any thing amiss to rectify it, and to give further orders what should be done. This was both for his own interest, (he that wholly leaves his business to others, will have it done by the halves; the master's eye makes a fat horse,) and it was also for the encouragement of his servants, who would go on the more cheerfully in their 17 So [r]she gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that she had gleaned: and it was about an [s]ephah of barley.

18 ¶ And she took it up, and went into the city: and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her that [h]she had reserved after she was sufficed.

19 And her mother-in-law said unto her, Where hast thou gleaned to-day? and where wroughtest thou? [i]blessed be he that did take knowledge of thee. And she shewed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is [k]Boaz.

THEN Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, My daughter, [a]shall I not seek rest for thee,[1] that it [b]may be well with thee?

2 And now [c]is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidens thou wast? Behold, he winnoweth barley[2] to-night in the thrashing-floor.

3 Wash thyself therefore, and [d]anoint thee, and [e]put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thyself known unto the man, until he shall have done eating and drinking.[3]

4 And it shall be, when he lieth down, that thou shalt mark the place where he shall lie, and thou shalt go in, and [*]uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou shalt do.

5 And she said unto her, All that thou sayest unto me I will do.

6 ¶ And she went down unto the floor, [f]and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her.

7 And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and [g]his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

8 And it came to pass at midnight, that the man was afraid, and [†]turned himself: and, behold, a woman lay at his feet.

9 And he said, Who art thou? And she answered, I am [h]Ruth thine handmaid: [i]spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art [‡]a near kinsman.

10 And he said, [k]Blessed be thou of the LORD, my daughter: for thou hast shewed more kindness[4] in the latter end than [l]at the beginning, inasmuch as thou followedst not young men, whether poor or rich.

11 And now, my daughter, fear not; I will do to thee all that thou requirest: for [m]all the [§]city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman.

12 And now it is true that I am thy near kinsman: howbeit [n]there is a kinsman nearer than I.

13 Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning, that [o]if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part: but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee, as [p]the LORD liveth: lie down until the morning.

14 ¶ And she lay at his feet until the morning: and she rose up before one could know another. And he said, [q]Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor.

15 Also he said, Bring the [‖]vail that thou hast upon thee, and hold it. And when she held it, [r]he measured six measures of barley, and laid it on her: and she went into the city.

16 And when she came to her mother-in-law, she said, Who art thou,[5] my daughter? And she told her all that the man had done to her.

17 And she said, These six measures of barley[6] gave he me; for he said to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.

18 Then said she, [s]Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day.

work, when their master countenanced them so far as to make them a visit. Masters that live at ease, should think with tenderness of those that toil for them, and bear the burden and heat of the day. 3. Kind and pious salutations were interchanged between Boaz and his reapers. He said to them, "The Lord be with you;" and they replied, "The Lord bless thee," ver. 4. Hereby they expressed, (1.) Their mutual respect to each other; he to them as good servants, and they to him as a good master. When he came to them he did not fall a chiding them, as if he came only to find fault and exercise his authority, but he prayed for them; "'The Lord be with you,' prosper you, and give you health and strength, and preserve you from any disaster:" nor did they, as soon as ever he was out of hearing, fall a cursing him, as some ill-natured servants that hate their master's eye; but they returned his courtesy, "'The Lord bless thee,' and make our labours serviceable to thy prosperity!" Things are likely to go on well in a house where there is such good-will as this between master and servants. (2.) Their joint dependence upon the divine providence; they expressed their kindness to each other by praying one for another. They show not only their courtesy, but their piety, and an acknowledgment that all good comes from the presence and blessing of God, which therefore we should value and desire above any thing else, both for ourselves and others. Let us from hence learn to use, (1.) Courteous salutations, as expressions of a sincere good-will to our friends. (2.) Pious ejaculations, lifting up our hearts to God for his favour, in such short prayers as these. Only we must take heed that they do not degenerate into formality, lest in them we "take the name of the Lord our God in vain;" but if we be serious in them, we may in them keep up our communion with God, and fetch in mercy and grace from him. It appears to have been the usual custom, thus to wish reapers good speed, Ps. cxxix. 7, 8. 4. He took an account from his reapers concerning a stranger he met with in the field, and gave necessary orders concerning her, that they should not touch her, ver. 9, nor reproach her, ver. 15. Masters must take care, not only that they do no hurt themselves, but that they suffer not their servants, and those under them to do hurt. He also ordered them to be kind to her, and "let fall some of the handfuls on purpose for her;" though it is fit that masters should restrain and rebuke their servants' wastefulness, yet they should not tie them up from being charitable, but give them allowance for that, with prudent directions.—Henry.

CHAP. III. NAOMI'S ADVICE.—Ver. 1—6. If the measure here proposed by Naomi, had been of as ill appearance in those days, as it would be at present, it can hardly be supposed that she would have advised it, or that Ruth would have complied with it. [illegible], a man's marrying his brother's widow when he died childless, was by custom extended, as it seems, to the other near relations, when there were no brethren. This gave Ruth, now proselyted to the true religion, a legal claim upon Boaz; as Naomi supposed, who either did not know of another nearer kinsman, or was aware that it would be in vain to apply to him. It was customary for widows to assert this claim; and, considering Boaz's character and superiority of station, she supposed that this was best done in a private manner. She deemed herself bound to promote this desirable settlement for Ruth, and had an entire confidence in both her and Boaz; whose character in all respects appears to have been very excellent, and who seems to have been advanced in life. And as Ruth supposed Naomi to be best acquainted with the laws and customs of Israel, she implicitly followed her counsel. Yet, when all allowances are made, perhaps neither party can be entirely exculpated. At least, though their plan was graciously rendered successful, it was not recorded for imitation in the present state of society; nor must it be judged of by modern customs and maxims.

PRUDENCE AND ATTACHMENT OF BOAZ.—Ver. 10—13. The conduct of Boaz in this transaction is worthy of the highest encomiums. He neither attempted to take advantage of Ruth's exposed situation, nor reproached her with impropriety of conduct, nor disdained her as a poor destitute stranger, nor suggested that she was swayed by interest in preferring her claim. On the contrary, instead of suspecting her of any ill intentions, he imputed her whole conduct to her affection to the family of Elimelech, and to Naomi; as if she had thus shown her greater kindness, than in coming with her into the land of Israel: and he commended her for giving him, an elder man, the preference to younger persons, whether rich or poor, Moabites or Israelites: and for her regard to the law of God. Perceiving her confused, as it is probable, upon the recollection of her situation, he also obviated her fears, applauded her as a woman of known and approved virtue, and made her a promise of marriage, (in case a still nearer kinsman who had a prior claim, would waive it, as it might be supposed he would.) This he confirmed for her fuller satisfaction with a solemn oath; and in the morning he sent her away with a present to her mother-in-law.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. ANCIENT MARRIAGE LAW.—Ver. 1—8. Considerable difficulties arise, in explaining this transaction consistently with the laws before given; and it does not appear in whose possession the estate of Elimelech was at this time. It is, however, probable, that it had been sold till the year of jubilee, and as Elimelech had no male issue surviving, and it could not be alienated from his family, the nearest relation would have a right to redeem it, by repaying the proportion of the purchase-money; except as unto whom he said, [c]Ho, such a one! turn aside, sit down here. And he turned aside, and sat down.

2 And he took ten men of [d]the elders of the city, and said, Sit ye down here. And they sat down.

3 And [e]he said unto the kinsman, Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelech's:

4 And *I thought to advertise thee, saying, [f]Buy it [g]before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: [h]for there is none to redeem it beside thee; and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it.

5 Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy[1] it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, [i]to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

6 ¶ And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it.

7 Now this was the manner in former time in Israel, concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; [k]a man plucked off his shoe,[2] and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a testimony in Israel.

8 Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee: so he drew off his shoe.

9 ¶ And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, [l]Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi.

10 Moreover Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, [m]have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that [n]the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: [o]ye are witnesses this day.

11 And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said, We are witnesses. [p]The LORD make the woman that is come into thine house like [q]Rachel and like Leah, [r]which two did build the house of Israel: and [t]do thou worthily in [s]Ephratah, and [u]be famous in Beth-lehem:

12 And let thy house be like [v]the house of Pharez, [w]whom Tamar bare unto Judah, of [x]the seed which the LORD shall give thee of this young woman.

13 ¶ So Boaz [y]took Ruth, and she was his wife: and when he went in unto her, [z]the LORD gave her conception, and she bare a son.

14 And [a]the woman said unto Naomi, [b]Blessed be the LORD, [c]which hath not [d]left thee this day without a [1]kinsman, [d]that his name may be famous in Israel.

15 And he shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life, and *a nourisher of thine old age: [e]for thy daughter-in-law, which loveth thee, which is [f]better to thee than seven sons, hath born him.

16 And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her bosom, and became nurse unto it.

17 And [g]the women[3] her neighbours gave it a name, saying, There is a son born to Naomi; and they called his name Obed: he is the father of Jesse, the father of David.

18 ¶ Now these are the generations of Pharez: [h]Pharez begat Hezron,

19 And Hezron begat [1]Ram, and Ram begat Amminadab,

20 And Amminadab begat [k]Nahshon, and Nahshon begat Salmon,

21 And [l]Salmon begat Boaz, and [m]Boaz begat Obed,

22 And Obed begat [n]Jesse, and Jesse begat [o]David.

Ruth, Elimelech's daughter-in-law, was entitled to his inheritance, according to the law given in the case of those who left only daughters.—To obviate therefore all doubt and difficulty in this matter, Boaz proposed to this kinsman of Elimelech that he should both redeem the estate and marry Ruth; in which case the estate would certainly belong to his eldest son by her: but if he was unwilling to do it, he desired him to renounce his claim, and he would marry her, and redeem the land for himself. As, however, the kinsman was not willing to marry the poor widow, lest he should injure his circumstances, or create himself disturbance; (for perhaps he had at this time a wife and family;) he therefore resigned all claim to the estate also. This transaction respects all the several laws above referred to, and doubtless the whole was settled in the most regular, legal, and customary manner: and as the pulling off the shoe was not done by Ruth with the prescribed ceremonies, but, as it appears, by the kinsman himself, it seems not to refer merely to the law about refusing to marry a brother's widow, but to have been the custom in transferring inheritances.—The manner in which Boaz brought forward this business evinced a strict regard to equity; and also an affection for Ruth, whom it is evident he was desirous of marrying, provided the kinsman was willing to relinquish his prior claim.—Scott.

PECULIAR CEREMONY.—The right of redemption was fairly resigned to Boaz; if this nameless kinsman lost a good bargain, a good estate, and a good wife too, he may thank himself for not considering it better, and Boaz will thank him for making his way clear to that which he valued and desired above any thing. In those ancient times it was not the usage to pass estates by writings, as afterwards, Jer. xxxii. 10, &c., but by some sign or ceremony, as with us by livery and seisin, as we commonly call it; that is, the delivery of seisin, seisin of a house by giving the key, of land by giving turf and a twig. The ceremony here used was, he that surrendered, "plucked off his shoe," (the Chaldee says, it was "the glove of his right hand,") and gave it to him to whom he made the surrender, intimating thereby, that whatever right he had to tread or go upon the land, he conveyed and transferred it, upon a valuable consideration, to the purchaser; this was a "testimony in Israel," ver. 7, and it was done in this case, ver. 8. If this kinsman was obliged by the law to have married Ruth, and his refusal had been a contempt of that law, Ruth must have "plucked off his shoe," and "spit in his face," Deut. xxv. 9. But though his relation should in some measure oblige him to the duty, yet the distance of his relation might serve to excuse him from the penalty, or Ruth might very well dispense with it, since his refusal was all she desired from him. But Bishop Patrick, and the best interpreters, think this had no relation to that law, and that the drawing off of the shoe was not any disgrace, as there, but a confirmation of the surrender, and an evidence that it was not fraudulently or surreptitiously obtained. Note, Fair and open dealing in all matters of contract and commerce, is what all those must make conscience of that would approve themselves Israelites indeed, without guile. How much more honourably and honestly does Boaz come by this purchase, than if he had secretly undermined his kinsman, and privately struck up a bargain with Naomi, unknown to him. Honesty will be found the best policy.

RUTH'S MARRIAGE.—It was attended with many prayers. The elders and all the people when they witnessed to it, wished well to it, and blessed it, ver. 11, 12. Ruth, it should seem, was now sent for, for they speak of her, ver. 12, as present, "this young woman," and he having taken her to wife, they look upon her as already come into his house. And very heartily they pray for the new-married couple. The senior elder, it is likely, made this prayer, and the rest of the elders, with the people, joined in it, and therefore it is spoken of as made by them all, for in public prayers, though but one speaks, we must all pray. Observe, 1. Marriages ought to be blessed, and accompanied with prayer, because every creature and every condition are that to us, and no more, that God makes them to be. It is civil and friendly to wish all happiness to those who enter into that condition; and what good we desire, we should pray for from the Fountain of all good. The minister who gives himself to the word and prayer, as he is the fittest person to exhort, so he is the fittest to bless and pray for, those that enter into this relation. 2. We ought to desire and pray for the welfare and prosperity one of another, so far from envying or grieving at it. Now here, (1.) They pray for Ruth; "The Lord make the woman that is come into thine house like Rachel and Leah;" that is, "God make her a good wife, and a fruitful mother." Ruth was a virtuous woman, and yet needed the prayers of her friends, that by the grace of God she might be made a blessing to the family she was come into. They pray she might be like Rachel and Leah, rather than like Sarah and Rebekah; for Sarah had but one son, and Rebekah but one that was in covenant; the other was Esau who was rejected: but Rachel and Leah did "build up the house of Israel;" all their children were in the church, and their offspring was numerous. "May she be a flourishing, fruitful, faithful vine by thy house side." (2.) They pray for Boaz, that he might continue to do worthily in the city, to which he was an ornament, and might there be more and more famous. They desire that the wife might be a blessing in the private affairs of the house, and the husband a blessing in the public business of the town; that she in her place, and he in his, might be wise, virtuous, and successful. (3.) They pray for the family; "Let thy house be like the house of Pharez;" that is, "Let it be very numerous, let it greatly increase and multiply, as the house of Pharez did."—Henry.

THE FIRST BOOK OF # SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS book and the following form but one in the Hebrew canon, and derive their name from Samuel, though he could not write more than the former part (perhaps twenty-four chapters) of the first book. The remainder of them is, with great probability, ascribed to the prophets Nathan and Gad; for we read in Chronicles, "Now the acts of David, first and last, behold they are written in the book of Samuel, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the Seer" (1 Chron. xxix. 29). It is therefore very reasonable to conclude, that Samuel wrote the first acts of David; and Nathan and Gad, continuing the history after Samuel's death, wrote his last acts, or the records of his reign till near his death; and that the whole was formed into one book, which was ascribed to Samuel, as the more eminent person, and as the latter part formed a sort of appendix to the history which he had begun. It may also be observed, that in the time of Samuel a new epoch commenced—the government by judges was changed for that of kings; and Samuel anointed both those kings whose history is here given, and was himself a principal person in all these transactions. From the Vulgate Latin translation these books are also called "The First and Second Books of Kings," and consequently the two following are "The Third and Fourth Books of Kings." When Eli was judge and high priest of Israel, Samuel was born; and while Eli's indulged sons were bringing destruction on themselves and their family, and almost on the nation, Samuel was growing up in wisdom and piety, to be an illustrious prophet, and the reformer, deliverer, and judge of Israel. Yet the people, at length ungratefully weary of his mild government, desired a king; and Saul having been placed over them, his family was soon set aside for his disobedience to God, and David was anointed as his successor. The rest of the book is taken up with an account of David's illustrious actions, and the harassing persecutions which he endured, till the death of Saul opened his way to mount the throne. It is not agreed how many years elapsed during these events—some confining them within eighty years, and others extending them to a hundred and fifteen. It is evident that this book was extant when the first book of Kings was written (1 Kings ii. 27). Almost every subsequent part of Scripture refers to the events recorded in it as of undoubted certainty; and especially very many of the Psalms are poems made on occasion of one or other of them. Our Lord and his apostles quote it as a part of the Sacred Oracles (Matt. xii. 3, 4; Acts vii. 45, 46; xiii. 21-28). The history of David, the son of Jesse, forms a sort of introduction to all the prophecies concerning his family, and especially concerning Christ, who sprang from the root of Jesse, was distinguished as the Son of David, and inherited the throne of David (Ps. ii., lxxii., lxxxix. 19-28; Is. ix. 6, 7, xi. 1, 10; Acts ii. 25-31). The narrative itself may in some sense be considered as prophetical—recording many typical events which had their accomplishment in Christ. The book likewise contains several direct prophecies concerning the families of Eli and Saul, which were speedily fulfilled; and the song of Hannah concludes with a prophecy of our Lord, in which he is, for the first time, predicted expressly as the Messiah, or the anointed of God (ii. 10).

Elkanah and his two wives, 1. Hannah's prayer, 9. Samuel is born, 19; and presented to the Lord, 24.

A. M. 2869, or 2833.—B. C. 1135, or 1171.

NOW there was a certain man of Ramathaim-zophim, of [a]mount Ephraim, and his name was [c]Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Elihu, the son of Tohu, the son of Zuph, an [d]Ephrathite:

2 And he had [e]two wives; the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah: and Peninnah had children, [f]but Hannah had no children.

3 And this man went up out of his city [g]yearly to worship and to sacrifice unto the LORD of hosts in [h]Shiloh. And the [i]two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the priests of the LORD, were there.

4 ¶ And when the time was that Elkanah [k]offered, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her sons and her daughters, portions:

5 But unto Hannah he gave a [t]worthy portion; for [l]he loved Hannah: but the LORD had [m]shut up her womb.[l]

6 And her [n]adversary also [t]provoked her sore, for to make her fret, because the LORD had shut up her womb.

7 And as he did so [o]year by year, [s]when she went up to the house of the LORD, so she provoked her; therefore she wept, and did not eat.

8 Then said Elkanah her husband to her, Hannah, [p]why weepest thou? and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? [q]am not I better to thee than ten sons?

9 ¶ So Hannah rose up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk: now Eli the priest sat upon a seat by a post of [r]the temple of the LORD.

10 And she was [l]in bitterness of soul, and [s]prayed unto the LORD, [t]and wept sore.

11 And she [u]vowed a vow, and said, O LORD of hosts, if thou wilt indeed [x]look on the affliction of thine handmaid, and [y]remember me, and not forget thine handmaid, but wilt give unto thine handmaid a [z]man child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, and [z]there shall no razor come upon his head.

12 ¶ And it came to pass, as she [t]continued praying before the LORD, that Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, she [s]spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought [b]she had been drunken.

14 And Eli said unto her, [c]How long wilt thou be drunken? [d]put away thy wine from thee.

CHAP. I. POLYGAMY.—Elkanah's was a divided family, and the divisions of it carried with them both guilt and grief. Where there is piety, it is pity but there should be unity. The joint devotions of a family should put an end to divisions in it. 1. The original cause of this division was, Elkanah's marrying two wives, which was a transgression of the original institution of marriage, to which our Saviour reduces it, Matt. xix. 5, 8, "From the beginning it was not so." It made mischief in Abraham's family, and Jacob's, and here in Elkanah's: how much better does the law of God provide for our comfort and ease in this world than we should, if we were left to ourselves! It is probable, that Elkanah married Hannah first, and because he had no children by her so soon as he hoped, he married Peninnah, who bare him children indeed, but was in other things a vexation to him. Thus are men often beaten with rods of their own making. 2. That which followed upon this error was, that the two wives could not agree. They had different blessings; Peninnah, like Leah, was fruitful, and had many children, which should have made her easy and thankful, though she was but a second wife, and was less beloved; Hannah, like Rachel, was childless indeed, but she was very dear to her husband, and he took all occasions to let both her and others know that she was so, and many a "worthy portion he gave her," ver. 5, and this should have made her easy and thankful. But they were of different tempers; Peninnah could not bear the blessing of fruitfulness, but she grew haughty and insolent; Hannah could not bear the affliction of barrenness, but she grew melancholy and discontented: and Elkanah had a difficult part to act between them. (1.) Elkanah kept up his attendance at God's altar, notwithstanding this unhappy difference in his family, and took his wives and children with him, that if they could not agree in other things, they might agree to worship God together. If the devotions of a family prevail not to put an end to its divisions, yet let not the divisions put a stop to the devotions. (2.) He did all he could to encourage Hannah, and to keep up her spirits under her affliction, ver. 4, 5. At the feasts he offered peace-offerings, to supplicate for peace in his family; and when he and his family were to eat their share of the sacrifice, in token of their communion with God and his altar, though he carved to Peninnah and her children competent portions, yet to Hannah he gave a worthy portion, the choicest piece that came to the table, the piece (whatever it was) that used to be given on such occasions to those that were most valued; this he did, in token of his love to her, and to give all possible assurances of it. Observe, [1.] Elkanah loved his wife never the less for her being barren. "Christ loves his church," notwithstanding her infirmities, her barrenness; and "so ought men to love their wives," Eph. v. 25. To abate our just love to any relations for the sake of any infirmity which they cannot help, and which is not their sin but their affliction, is to make God's providence quarrel with his precept, and very unkindly to add affliction to the afflicted. [2.] He studied to show his love so much the more, because she was afflicted, insulted, and low-spirited. It is wisdom and duty to support the weakest, and to hold up those that are run down. [3.] He showed his great love to her, by the share he gave her of his peace-offerings. Thus we should testify our affection to our friends and relations, by abounding in prayer for them. The better we love them, the more room let us give them in our prayers.

HANNAH'S DEVOTION.—Now concerning Hannah's prayer, we may observe, The warm and lively devotion there was in it; which appeared in several instances, for our direction in prayer. 1. She improved the present grief and trouble of her spirit, for the exciting and quickening of her pious affection in prayers. "Being in bitterness of soul, she prayed," ver. 10. This good use we should make of our afflictions, they should make us the more lively in our addresses to God. Our blessed Saviour himself, "being in an agony, prayed more earnestly," Luke xxii. 44. 2. She mingled tears with her prayers; she wept sore; like a true Israelite, she "wept and made supplication," Hos. xii. 4, with an eye to the tender mercy of our God, who knows the troubled soul; the prayer came from her heart, as the tears from her eyes. 3. She was very particular, and yet very modest, in her petition. She begged a child, a man-child, that it might be fit to serve in the tabernacle. God gives us leave, in prayer, not only to ask good things in general, but to mention that special good thing which we most need and desire. Yet she says not as Rachel, "Give me children," Gen. xxx. 1. She will be very thankful for one. 4. She made a solemn vow or promise, that if God would give her a son, she would "give him up to God," ver. 11. He would be, by birth, a Levite, and so devoted to the service of God; but he should be, by her vow, a Nazarite, and his very childhood should be sacred. It is probable she had acquainted Elkanah with her purpose before, and had his consent and approbation. Note, (1.) Parents have a right to dedicate their children to God, as living sacrifices and spiritual priests; and an obligation is thereby laid upon them to serve God faithfully "all the days of their life." (2.) It is very proper, when we are in pursuit of any mercy, to bind our own souls with a bond, that if God give it us, we will devote it to his honour, and cheerfully use it in his service. Not that hereby we can pretend to merit the gift, but thus we are qualified for it, and for the comfort of it. In hope of mercy, let us promise duty. 5. She spoke all this so softly, that none could hear her. Her lips moved, but "her voice was not heard," ver. 13. Hereby she testified her belief in God's knowledge of the heart and its desires. Thoughts are words with him, nor is he one of those gods that must be "cried aloud to," 1 Kings xviii. 27. It was likewise an instance of her humility and holy shame-facedness in her approach

15 And Hannah answered and said, [e]No, my lord, I am a woman [‡]of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have [f]poured out my soul before the LORD.

16 Count not thine handmaid for [g]a daughter of Belial: for [h]out of the abundance of my [§]complaint and grief have I spoken hitherto.

17 Then Eli answered and said, [i]Go in peace: and [k]the God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him.

18 And she said, [l]Let thine handmaid find grace in thy sight. So the woman [m]went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad.

19 ¶ And they rose up in the morning [n]early, and worshipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their house to Ramah:[2] and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; [o]and the LORD remembered her.

20 Wherefore it came to pass, [p]when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son, and called his name [*]Samuel, saying, [p]Because I have asked him of the LORD.

21 And [q]the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly sacrifice, and his vow.[3]

22 But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and [r]then I will bring him, that he may appear before the LORD, [s]and there abide [t]for ever.

23 And Elkanah her husband said unto her, [u]Do what seemeth thee good; tarry until thou have weaned him; only [x]the LORD establish his word. So the woman abode, and gave her [y]son suck until she weaned him.

24 ¶ And when she had weaned him, [z]she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the [a]house of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child was young.

25 And they slew a bullock, and brought the child to Eli.

26 And she said, O my lord, [c]as thy soul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the LORD.

27 [d]For this child I prayed; and the LORD hath given me my petition which I asked of him:

28 Therefore also I have [†]lent him[4] to the LORD; as long as he liveth he shall be lent to the LORD. And [f]he worshipped the LORD there.

AND Hannah [a]prayed, and said, My heart rejoiceth in the LORD; [c]mine horn is exalted in the LORD: [d]my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies; because I rejoice in thy salvation.

2 There is [f]none holy as the LORD: for there is [g]none beside thee: neither is there any [h]rock like our God.

3 Talk no more[1] so exceeding proudly; [i]let not [*]arrogancy come out of your mouth: for the LORD is [k]a God of knowledge, and [l]by him actions are weighed.

4 The [m]bows of the mighty men are broken, and they that [n]stumbled are girded with strength.

5 They that were [o]full, have hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry ceased: so that [p]the barren hath born seven;[2] and she that hath many children is [q]waxed feeble.

6 The LORD [r]killeth, and maketh alive: [s]he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up.

7 The LORD [t]maketh poor, and maketh rich: he [u]bringeth low, and lifteth up.

8 He raiseth up [x]the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to [y]set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: for the pillars of the earth are the LORD'S, and he hath set the world upon them.

9 He [z]will keep the feet of [b]his saints, and the wicked shall [c]be silent in darkness; for [d]by strength shall no man prevail.

10 The [e]adversaries of the LORD shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall [f]he thunder upon them: the LORD shall [g]judge the ends of the earth; and [h]he shall give strength unto his king, and [i]exalt the horn of his [k]anointed.

11 And Elkanah went to Ramah to his house. And the child did [l]minister unto the LORD before Eli the priest.

12 ¶ Now [m]the sons of Eli were [n]sons of Belial; they [o]knew not the LORD.

13 And the priest's custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hand;

14 And he struck it into the pan, or kettle, or caldron, or pot; [p]all that the flesh-hook brought up the priest took for himself. So they did in Shiloh unto all the Israelites that came thither.

15 Also [q]before they burnt the fat, the priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the

to God; she was none of those that "made her voice to be heard on high," Isa. lviii. 4. It was a secret prayer, and therefore, though made in a public place, yet was thus made secretly, and not as the Pharisees prayed, "to be seen of men." It is true, prayer is not a thing we have reason to be ashamed of, but we must avoid all appearances of ostentation. Let what passes between God and our souls be kept to ourselves.—Henry.

ELI'S MISTAKE.—Ver. 12—16. Perhaps Eli had many times seen such intemperance as he here charged upon Hannah; and, perhaps, he sat near the tabernacle to repress these enormities, though he did not adopt the only effectual method. Perceiving her great discomposure, and observing that her lips moved, he too hastily attributed it to drunkenness. But Hannah had now obtained such inward consolation, that this severe reflection neither distressed her, nor excited her anger; so that she intimated her abhorrence of the crime with which she had been charged, and calmly and respectfully explained to him the real cause of her agitation. In doing this, she emphatically described the nature of fervent prayer; "I poured out my soul before the LORD." For prayer doth not consist merely in using good words, but in opening before the Lord the inmost soul, and in unreserved confidence, pouring out before him all our fears, sorrows, desires, and purposes; as a child would before a loving father, from whom alone he had expectations of relief, and who, he was satisfied, was able and disposed to help him.—Scott.

CONSECRATION OF YOUNG SAMUEL.—Observe how she presented her child, 1. With a sacrifice; no less than three bullocks, with a meat-offering for each, ver. 24. A bullock, perhaps, for each year of the child's life. Or, one for a burnt-offering, another for a sin-offering, and the third for a peace-offering. So far was she from thinking that, by presenting her son to God, she made God her debtor, that she thought it requisite by these slain offerings, to seek God's acceptance of her living sacrifice. All our covenants with God for ourselves, and ours, must be made by sacrifice, the great Sacrifice. 2. With a grateful acknowledgment of God's goodness in answer to prayer. This she makes to Eli, because he had encouraged her to hope for an answer of peace, ver. 26, 27. "For this child I prayed." (Here it was obtained by prayer, and here it is resigned to the prayer-hearing God.) "You have forgotten me, my Lord; but I who now appears so cheerful, am the woman, the very same, that, three years ago, stood by thee here, weeping and praying, and this was the child I prayed for." Answers of prayer may thus be humbly triumphed in, to the glory of God. Here is a living testimony for God, "I am his witness that he is gracious." See Ps. lxvi. 16, 19. "For this mercy, this comfort I prayed, 'and the Lord has given me my petition.'" See Ps. xxxiv. 2, 4, 6. Hannah does not remind Eli of it by adverting to the suspicion he had formerly expressed; she does not say, "I am the woman whom you passed that severe censure upon; what do you think of me now? Good men ought not to be upbraided with their infirmities and oversights; they have themselves repented of them, let them hear no more of them.—Henry.

CHAP. II. HANNAH'S HYMN.—1. When she had received mercy from God, she owned it, with thankfulness to his praise. Not like the nine lepers, Luke xvii. 17. Praise is our rent, our tribute, we are unjust if we do not pay it. 2. The mercy she had received was an answer to prayer, and therefore she thought herself especially obliged to give thanks for it. What we win by prayer, we may wear with comfort, and must wear with praise. 3. Her thanksgiving is here called a prayer; "Hannah prayed;" for thanksgiving is an essential part of prayer. In every address to God, we must express a grateful regard to him as our Benefactor. Nay, and thanksgiving for mercies received shall be accepted as a petition for further mercy. 4. From this particular mercy which she had received from God, she takes occasion, with an elevated and enlarged heart, to speak glorious things of God, and of his government of the world for the good of his church. Whatever at any time gives rise to our praises, in this manner they should be raised. 5. Her prayer was mental, "her voice was not heard;" but in her thanksgiving she spake, that all might hear her. She made her supplication "with groanings that could not be uttered," but now her lips were opened to "show forth God's praise." 6. This thanksgiving is here left upon record for the encouragement of those of the weaker sex to attend to the throne of grace; God will regard their prayers and praises. The Virgin Mary's song has great affinity with this of Hannah, Luke i. 46.—Henry.

PROVIDENCE.—Ver. 4—8. The events which these verses speak of, are often called the caprices of blind fortune: but they in fact are the settled purposes of God, thus manifesting his own perfections by saving those who trust in him; and pouring contempt upon all the distinctions in which ungodly men confide and glory. Are they proud of valour, military skill, or strength? their bows shall be broken, and themselves crushed by an inferior and despised company. Do they glory in riches, and riot in ease and luxury, whilst they despise and oppress the poor? They are often impoverished, and reduced to the necessity of hiring themselves out for bread, whilst the poor and hungry are surprisingly advanced to affluence. Do any glory (as Peninnah did) in the increase of their families, and despise the childless? Providence may soon by unexpected death reduce their numbers; whilst the desolate are as wonderfully increased. The Lord gives life and takes it away; the most vigorous are by the stroke of his hand brought down to the gates of the grave; and the feeble are unexpectedly restored to health and strength. Such vicissitudes may likewise be often observed in men's circumstances and families; in which capacity and industry often prove utterly unavailing to prevent the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw.

16 And if any man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat [t]presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth; then he would answer him, Nay; but thou shalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great [s]before the LORD; for men [t]abhorred the offering[s] of the LORD.

18 ¶ But Samuel [u]ministered before the LORD, being a child, girded with [x]a linen ephod.

19 Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him [y]from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice.

20 ¶ And Eli [z]blessed Elkanah and his wife, and said, The LORD give thee seed of this woman, for [‡]the loan which is lent to the LORD. And they went unto their own home.

21 And the LORD [a]visited Hannah, so that she conceived, and bare three sons and two daughters. And the child Samuel [b]grew before the LORD.[4]

22 Now Eli [c]was very old, and heard all that his sons [d]did unto all Israel; and how they lay with the women that [§]assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

23 And he said unto them, [e]Why do ye such[5] things? for [‖]I hear of your evil dealings [f]by all this people.

24 Nay, my sons; for it is [g]no good report that I hear: [h]ye make the LORD's people to [*]transgress.

25 If one man [‖]sin against another, the judge shall judge him: but [k]if a man sin against the LORD, who shall entreat for him? notwithstanding they [‖]hearkened not unto the voice of their father, because the LORD would slay them.

26 And the child Samuel [m]grew on, and [n]was in favour both with the LORD, and also with men.

27 ¶ And there came [o]a man of God unto Eli, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [p]Did I plainly appear unto the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt, in Pharaoh's house?

28 And [q]did I choose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest, to offer upon mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me? and [r]did I give unto the house of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Israel?

29 Wherefore [s]kick ye at my sacrifice, and at mine offering, which I have commanded in my [t]habitation; and [u]honourest thy sons above me, to [x]make yourselves fat with the chiefest of all the offerings of Israel my people?

30 Wherefore the LORD God of Israel saith, [y]I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should walk before me for ever; but now the LORD saith, [z]Be it far from me; for [a]them that honour me [b]I will honour, and they [c]that despise me shall be lightly esteemed.

31 Behold, the days come, that [d]I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thine house.

32 And thou shalt see [†]an enemy in my habitation, in all the wealth which God shall give Israel: and there shall not be [e]an old man in thine house for ever.

33 And the man of thine, whom I shall not cut off from mine altar, shall be [f]to consume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart: and all the increase of thine house shall die [‡]in the flower of their age.

34 And this shall be [g]a sign unto thee, that shall come upon thy two sons, on Hophni and Phinehas; [h]in one day they shall die both of them.

35 And [i]I will raise me up a faithful priest,[6] that shall do according to that which is in mine heart and in my mind: and [k]I will build him a sure house; and he shall walk before [l]mine Anointed for ever.

36 And it shall come to pass, that every one that [m]is left in thine house shall come and crouch to him for a piece of silver and a morsel of bread, and shall say, [§]Put me, I pray thee, into [l]one of the priest's offices, that I may [n]eat a piece of bread.

adversity of some: while others are wonderfully prospered, and rise even from the lowest and most abject condition to the throne of glory. Events of this kind occasion surprise, and many attempt to account for them; but "the pillars of the earth are the LORD's, and he hath set the world upon them:" and the same power, which first created and established the earth in its settled course, without human help, and in such a manner as no human power can change; by his secret overruling providence does every thing, and should be acknowledged in every thing. These things are equally applicable to the dispensations of his kingdom of grace; in which he respects, not men's wisdom, learning, greatness, or imagined excellency; but selects the vile, the poor, the foolish of the world, having taught them to feel their guilt and misery, and to value his free and precious salvation. Thus he "takes the poor from the dust, and the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory;" "according to the eternal purpose, which he hath purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Scott.

THE YOUTHFUL SAMUEL.—He did well indeed, for he "ministered to the Lord," ver. 11, 18, according as his capacity was; he learnt his catechism, and was constant in his devotions; soon learnt to read, and took a pleasure in the book of the law, and thus he "ministered to the Lord." He ministered before Eli, that is, under his inspection, and as he ordered him, not before Eli's sons; all parties were agreed that they were unfit to be his tutors. Perhaps he attended immediately on Eli's person, was ready to him to fetch and bring as he had occasion, and that is called "ministering to the Lord." Some little services perhaps he was employed in about the altar, though much under the age appointed by the law for the Levites' ministration. He could light a candle, or hold a dish, or run on an errand, or shut a door: and because he did this with a pious disposition of mind, it is called "ministering to the Lord," and great notice is taken of it. After a while, he did his work so well that Eli appointed that he should minister with a linen ephod as the priests did, (though he was no priest,) because he saw that God was with him. Note, Little children must learn betimes to "minister to the Lord;" parents must train them up to it, and God will accept them; particularly, let them learn to pay respect to their teachers, as Samuel to Eli. None can begin too soon to be religious. See Ps. viii. 2, and Matt. xxi. 15, 16.—Henry.

ELI'S SONS.—Ver. 12. The sons of Eli had been brought up in the courts of God, and instructed out of the law, and perhaps had some speculative knowledge of divine things: yet being sons of Belial, men of a rebellious and disobedient spirit, it is said, that "they knew not the LORD." They had neither that acquaintance with the divine perfections, nor that disposition of heart to love them, which are essential to true religion: nor that experience of the faithfulness and loving-kindness of God, to which those attain who trust him and call on him, and have real communion with him.—Eli appears to have been a godly man, and probably set his sons a good example in private life, and gave them good advice and instruction; but he yielded to a natural timidity and feebleness of mind, and shunned trouble and exertion. Thus he was induced to indulge his children, instead of exercising his parental authority to restrain and correct them when young: and he connived at many abuses in the service of the sanctuary till they became customs, and made way for greater abominations; and even then he did not exert himself, as it became the high priest and judge of Israel, to punish and repress them. Ver. 13—16. The priests had the whole breast, the right shoulder, the cheeks, and the maw, allotted to them by the law out of every peace-offering; Lev. vii. 31, 32; Deut. xviii. 3. But in addition to this, it had become customary for the servants of the priests to come, while the flesh was boiling for the use of the offerer and his friends, (in vessels of various sizes, according to the nature of the oblation, placed in the court of the tabernacle;) and to carry away whatever the flesh-hook, or three-pronged fork, brought up; and the people, in veneration for the priesthood, quietly submitted to it; by which the appetites of the priests were gratified with greater variety, and their avarice with an additional perquisite. The sons of Eli, however, were not satisfied with this innovation, which did not always secure the choicest parts: but, whilst they neglected, or postponed, "burning the fat," (which, typifying the sacrifice of Christ, and, being the appointed expression of the offerer's repentance and faith, was essential to the acceptance of the sacrifice;) they insisted upon having such portions of the flesh as they chose for roasting; and when any one, however conscientiously and mildly, remonstrated against this abuse in a sacred ordinance, though willing to yield every other point, the very servants were so insolent, as to threaten to take it by force! Thus these priests "lorded it over God's heritage," and "kicked at his sacrifice which he had commanded!"—Scott.

CHAP. III. SAMUEL'S FIRST CALL.—Ver. 1. The manner of God's revealing himself to Samuel is here related very particularly, for it was uncommon. 1. Eli was retired; Samuel had waited on him to his bed, and the rest that attended the service of the sanctuary were gone, we may suppose, to their several apartments; ver. 2, "Eli was laid down in his place," he went to bed betimes, being unfit for business, and soon weary of it, and perhaps loving his ease too well. Probably, he kept his chamber much, which gave his sons the greater liberty. And he sought retirement the more, because his eyes began to wax dim, an affliction which came justly upon him for winking at his sons'

Here am I; for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, [g]my son; lie down again.

7 *Now Samuel [h]did not yet know the LORD, neither was the word of the LORD yet revealed unto him.

8 And the LORD called Samuel again [i]the third time. And he arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And Eli perceived that the LORD had called the child.

9 Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down: and it shall be, if he call thee, that thou shalt say, [k]Speak, LORD; for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went and lay down in his place.

10 And the LORD came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak; for thy servant heareth.

11 ¶ And the LORD said to Samuel, Behold, [l]I will do a thing in Israel, at which [m]both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle.

12 In that day [n]I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: †when I begin, I will also make an end.

13 ‡For I have told him that [o]I will judge his house for ever;[2] for the iniquity [p]which he knoweth; because [q]his sons made themselves [s]vile, and he [t]restrained them not.

14 And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that [r]the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever.

15 ¶ And Samuel lay until the morning and [u]opened the doors of the house of the LORD. And Samuel [v]feared to shew Eli the vision.

16 Then Eli called Samuel, and said, Samuel, my son. And he answered, Here am I.

17 And he said, What is the thing that the LORD hath said unto thee? [w]I pray thee hide it not from me: [x]God do so to thee, and *more also, if thou hide any †thing from me of all the things that he said unto thee.

18 And Samuel told him ‡every whit, and hid nothing from him. And he said, [y]It is the LORD;[3] let him do what seemeth him good.

19 ¶ And Samuel [z]grew, and [a]the LORD was with him, and did [b]let none of his words fall to the ground.

20 And all Israel from [c]Dan even to Beer-sheba knew that Samuel was [$]established to be a prophet of the LORD.

21 And the LORD [d]appeared again in Shiloh: for the LORD revealed himself to Samuel in Shiloh by [e]the word of the LORD.[4]

CHAP. IV.

The Israelites are overcome by the Philistines, 1. The ark is taken, and Eli's sons slain, 10; upon hearing the news, Eli falleth backward, and breaketh his neck, 12.

AND the word of Samuel *came to all Israel. Now Israel went out[1] against the Philistines to battle, and pitched beside [e]Eben-ezer: and the Philistines pitched in [b]Aphek.

2 And the Philistines [c]put themselves in array against Israel: and when †they joined battle, [d]Israel was smitten before the Philistines: [e]and they slew of ‡the army in the field about four thousand men.

3 ¶ And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, [f]Wherefore hath the LORD smitten us to-day before the Philistines? [g]Let us [$]fetch[2] [h]the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of Shiloh unto us, that, when it cometh among us, [i]it may save us out of the hand of our enemies.

4 So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hosts, [k]which dwelleth between [l]the cherubims: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there [n]with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, [o]all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again.

6 And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, [p]What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

7 And the Philistines [q]were afraid; for they said, God is come into the camp. And they said, Woe unto us! for there hath not been such a thing [$]heretofore.

8 Woe unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty Gods?[3] these are the Gods that [r]smote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness.

9 [s]Be strong, and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not servants unto the Hebrews, [t]as they have been to you: *quit yourselves like men, and fight.

10 ¶ And the Philistines fought, and [u]Israel was smitten, and they fled [x]every man into his tent: and there was [y]a very great slaughter: for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen.

11 And the [z]ark of God was taken, and [a]the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, †were slain.

12 ¶ And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same faults. 2. Samuel was laid down to sleep, in some closet near to Eli's room, as his page of the back-stairs, ready within call, if the old man should want any thing in the night, perhaps to read to him if he could not sleep. He chose to take Samuel into this office rather than any of his own family, because of the towardly disposition he observed in him. When his own sons were a grief to him, his little servitor was his joy. Let those that are afflicted in their children thank God if they have any about them in whom they are comforted. "Samuel was laid down ere the lamp of God went out," ver. 3, it should seem he lay somewhere so near the holy place that he went to bed with that light, before any of the lamps in the branches of the candlestick went out, (for the main lamp never went out,) which, probably, was toward midnight; till that time Samuel had been employing himself in some good exercise or other, reading and praying, or perhaps cleaning or making ready the holy place, and then went softly to his bed. Then we may expect God's gracious visits, when we are constant and diligent in our duty. 3. God called him by name, and he took it for Eli's call, and ran to him, ver. 4, 5. Samuel lay awake in his bed, his thoughts, no doubt, well employed, (as David's, Ps. lxiii. 6,) when the Lord called to him, Bishop Patrick thinks, out of the most holy place; and so the Chaldee paraphrase reads it, "A voice was heard out of the temple of the Lord;" but Eli, though it is likely he lay nearer, heard it not; yet, possibly, it might come some other way. Hereupon, we have an instance of Samuel's industry and readiness to wait on Eli; supposing it was he that called him, he hastened out of his warm bed and ran to him to see if he wanted any thing, and perhaps fearing he was not well. "Here am I," said he. A good example to servants, to come when they are called, and to the younger, not only to submit to the elder, but to be careful and tender of them.

HIS FIRST ORACLE.—Ver. 11. Here is the message which, after all this introduction, God delivered to Samuel concerning Eli's house. God did not come to him now to tell him how great a man he should be in his day, what a figure he should make, and what a blessing he should be in Israel. Young people have commonly a great curiosity to be told their fortune; but God came to Samuel, not to gratify his curiosity, but to employ him in his service, and send him on an errand to another person, which was much better; and yet the matter of this first message, which, no doubt, made a very great impression upon him, might be of good use to him afterward, when his own sons proved, though not so bad as Eli's, yet not so good as they should have been, chap. viii. 3. The message is short, not near so long as that which the man of God brought, chap. ii. 27; for Samuel being a child, it could not be expected he should remember a long message, and God considered his frame. The memories of children must not be overcharged, no, not with divine things. But it is a sad message, a message of wrath, to ratify the message in the former chapter, and to build on the sentence there pronounced, because perhaps Eli did not give so much regard to that as he ought to have done. Divine threatenings, the less they are heeded, the surer they will come, and the heavier they will fall. Reference is here had to what was there said concerning both the sin and the punishment.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. SUPERSTITON.—Ver. 3. These elders seem to have been miserably sunk in ignorance and formality, which was the genuine consequence of the impiety of the priests. Though ripe for dreadful judgments, they had no idea that the defeat which they had received was intended as a warning to repent; and they proposed a very foolish expedient to secure the assistance of JEHOVAH. They had heard what wonders had formerly been wrought for Israel, when the ark, the symbol of the Lord's presence, was "by his command" carried before the people, under the care of "holy men," who trusted and glorified him; and when Israel was comparatively an obedient people, fighting under his banner; and they did not make the obvious and important distinction between the outward sign or token, and the invisible presence of the Almighty as assisting his servants. In fact, they made an idol of the ark, and imagined that, (without humiliation before God or repentance of their sins,) by fetching it into the army, by two sons of Belial, who were doomed to destruction, and whose presence brought a curse into the camp, Josh. vii. 10—13, xxii. 20, they could induce God to fight for them, though he was evidently contending against them! Nay, they spake as if the ark itself could deliver them.—Scott.

ELI'S DEATH.—The account of the defeat of the army, and the slaughter of a great number of the soldiers, was very grievous to him as a judge; the tidings of the death of his two sons, of whom he had been so indulgent, and who, he had reason to fear, died impenitent, touched him in a tender part as a father; yet it was not for these that his heart trembled, there is a greater concern upon his spirit, which swallows up the lesser; he does not interrupt the narrative with any passionate lamentations for his sons, like David for Absalom, but waits for the end of the story, not doubting but that the messenger, being an Israelite, would, without being asked, say something of the ark; and if he could but have said, "Yet the ark of God is safe, and we are bringing that home," his joy for that would have overcome his grief for all the other disasters, and have made him easy; but when the messenger concludes his story with, "The ark of God is taken," he is struck to the heart, his spirits fail, and, it should seem, he swooned away, fell off his seat, and partly with the fainting, and partly with the fall, he died immediately, and never spoke a word more. His heart was broken first and then his neck. So fell the high priest and judge of Israel, so fell his heavy head, when he had lived within two of a hundred years: so fell the crown from his head, when he had judged Israel about forty day, [b]with his clothes rent, and [c]with earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli [d]sat upon a seat by the wayside watching: for [e]his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city, and told it, all the city cried out.

14 And when Eli heard the noise of the crying, he said, What meaneth the noise of this tumult? And the man came in hastily, and told Eli.

15 Now Eli was [g]ninety and eight years old; [h]and his eyes were ‡dim, that he could not see.

16 And the man said unto Eli, I am he that came out of the army, and I fled to-day out of the army. And he said, [i]What ‖is there done, [k]my son?

17 And the messenger answered and said, [l]Israel is fled before the Philistines, and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people, and thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead; and the ark of God is taken.

18 And it came to pass, [m]when he made mention[4] of the ark of God, that he fell from off the seat backward by the side of the gate, and [n]his neck brake, and he died: for he was an old man, and heavy. And he had judged Israel forty years.

19 ¶ And his daughter-in-law, Phinehas' wife, was with child, near to [l]be delivered: and when she heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father-in-law and her husband were dead, she bowed herself and travailed; for her pains *came upon her.

20 And about the time of her death the women that stood by her said unto her, [o]Fear not; for thou hast born a son. But she answered not, †neither did she regard it.

21 And she named the child ‡I-chabod, saying, [p]The glory is departed from Israel:[5] because the ark of God was taken, and because of her father-in law and her husband.

22 And she said, [q]The glory is departed from Israel; for the ark of God is taken.

CHAP. V.

The Philistines bring the ark into the house of Dagon, 1; Dagon falleth down, 3. They are smitten with emerods, 6, 9, 12.

AND the Philistines [a]took the ark of God, and brought it from [b]Eben-ezer unto [c]Ashdod.

2 When the Philistines took the ark of God, they brought it into the house of [d]Dagon, and set it by Dagon.

3 ¶ And when they of Ashdod[1] arose early on the morrow, behold, [e]Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth, before the ark of the LORD. And they took Dagon, and [f]set him in his place again.

4 And when they arose early on the morrow morning, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground before the ark of the LORD; and [g]the head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands were cut off upon the threshold; only the stump of* Dagon was left to him.

5 Therefore [h]neither the priests of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's house, [i]tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod unto this day.

6 ¶ But [k]the hand of the LORD was heavy upon them of Ashdod and he destroyed them, and smote them with [l]emerods,[2] even Ashdod and the coasts thereof.

7 And when the men of Ashdod [m]saw that it was so, they said, [n]The ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us: for his hand is sore upon us, and [o]upon Dagon our god.

8 ¶ They sent therefore and gathered all the lords of the Philistines unto them, and said, [p]What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? And they answered, Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about unto [q]Gath. And they carried the ark of the God of Israel about thither.

9 And it was so, that, after they had carried it about, [r]the hand of the LORD was against the city with a very great destruction: and he smote the men of the city, both small and great, [s]and they had emerods in their secret parts.

10 ¶ Therefore they sent the ark of God to [t]Ekron.[3] And it came to pass, as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried out, saying, They have brought about the ark of the God of Israel to †us, to slay us and our people.

11 So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay ‡us not, and our people: for there was [u]a deadly destruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there.[4] years: thus did his sun set under a cloud, thus were the folly and wickedness of those sons of his, whom he had indulged, his ruin at last. Thus does God sometimes set marks of his displeasure upon good men in this life, who have misconducted themselves, that others may hear, and fear, and take warning. A man may die miserably, and yet not die eternally; may come to an untimely end, and yet the end be peace.—Henry.

12 And the men that [x]died not were smitten with the emerods: and [y]the cry of the city went up to heaven.

ICHABOD.—The wife of Phinehas (though married to so wicked a priest) appears to have been a person of eminent piety. The death of her father-in-law and of her husband contributed to hasten her death; but her dying regret was for the captivity of the ark, and the departure of the glory from Israel; for, with her parting breath, she named her son Ichabod, or inglorious. In this her judgment was right; the presence and ordinances of God were the chief glory of Israel; and the loss of them was the departure of that glory. "This chiefly lay at her heart, as the concerns of religion do on all pious spirits." (Bp. Patrick.) But if she supposed that the Lord had finally departed from Israel she was under a great mistake. From Shiloh, indeed, the ark, the glory of Israel, was finally removed; (for probably the inhabitants of that city had too much resembled the abandoned priests;) but it was restored to Israel, and established in another place.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When the judgments denounced in the word of God do not bring sinners to repentance, the speedy execution of them may be expected. The nearer any persons are to the Lord in profession, and the greater privileges they are favoured with, the more certain and dreadful will be their punishment, if they thence take encouragement to commit iniquity. Unhumbled professors of true religion are apt to think that they are entitled to help from God, because they are called by his name, though they disgrace it with their crimes; and to murmur at those rebukes by which they are warned to repent and to amend their lives. As their dependence is placed upon external forms, the increase of their hypocrisies buoys up their presumptuous hopes; and they often take the name of the Lord in vain, and dishonour him more in attending on his ordinances than they could do by neglecting them, so that he abhors those services for which they expect his favour. But he will rather let his avowed enemies triumph for a season than encourage hypocrites, whose crimes still more dishonour his holy name.—Scott.

CHAP. V. DAGON'S FALL.—Ver. 3—5. The next night Dagon fell the second time, ver. 4. They rose early, either, as usual, to make their addresses to their god, or earlier than usual, being impatient to know whether Dagon had kept his standing this night; and, to their great confusion, they find his case now worse than before; whether the matter of which the image was made, was apt to break or no, so it was, that the head and hands were "cut off upon the threshold." So that nothing remained but the stump, or, as the margin reads it, the fishy part of Dagon; for (as many learned men conjecture) the upper part of this image was in a human shape, the lower, in the shape of a fish; as mermaids are painted. Such strong delusions were idolaters given up to, so vain were they in their imaginations, and so wretchedly darkened were their foolish hearts, as to worship the images, not only of creatures, but of nonentities, the mere figments of fancy. Well, the misshapen monster is by this fall made to appear, 1. Very ridiculous, and worthy to be despised. An admirable figure Dagon made now, when the fall had anatomized him, and showed how the human part and the fishy part were artificially put together, which, perhaps, the ignorant devotees had been made to believe was done by miracle. 2. Very impotent, and unworthy to be prayed to, or trusted to; for his losing of his head and hands, proved him utterly destitute both of wisdom and power, and for ever disabled either to advise or act for them. This they got by setting Dagon in his place again; they had better have let him alone when he was down. But they can speed no better that contend with God, and will set up that which he is throwing down, Mal. i. 4. God, by this, magnified his ark and made it honourable, then when they vilified and made it contemptible. He also showed what will be the end of all that which is set up in opposition to him; "Gird yourselves," but "ye shall be broken to pieces," Isa. viii. 9. One would have thought that this incontestible proof of the ark's victory over Dagon, should have convinced the Philistines of their folly in worshipping such a senseless thing, and that from henceforward they should have paid their homage to the Conqueror; but, instead of being reformed, they were hardened in their idolatry, and, as evil men and seducers are wont to do, became worse and worse, 2 Tim. iii. 13.—Henry.

EMERODS.—Ver. 6—12. As the Philistines were not convinced by this defeat of Dagon that their attempt to keep the ark in captivity was foolish and ruinous, they were visited with some fatal judgment—probably a pestilence, which swept away multitudes; while the rest were afflicted very generally with emerods, which put them to excruciating pain, and extorted the most doleful lamentations. The emerods are supposed to have been the worst sort of the disease called the piles. Under this terrible visitation, they sent the ark of God from city to city, probably in hopes of thus obtaining deliverance; but the same calamities attended the inhabitants wherever they carried it.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. PHILISTIA PUNISHED.—Ver. 2—9. It has been conjectured, that when the emerods and pestilence exceedingly afflicted the inhabitants of each city, to which the ark was carried, the Philistines placed it in the open field; and that then a vast multitude of mice began to destroy their crops, and spoil the land. At length, however, being no longer able to endure, they determined to send back the ark, and consulted

3 And they said, If ye send away the ark of the God of Israel, send it not [c]empty; but in any wise return him [d]a trespass-offering: then ye shall be healed, and it shall be [e]known to you why his hand is not removed from you.

4 Then said they, What shall be the trespass-offering which we shall return to him? They answered, [f]Five golden emerods, and five golden mice,[1] according to the number of the lords of the Philistines: for one plague was on *you all, and on your lords.

5 Wherefore, ye shall make images of your emerods, and images of your [g]mice that mar the land; and ye shall [h]give glory unto the God of Israel: peradventure he will [i]lighten his hand from off you, and from [k]off your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye [l]harden your hearts, as [m]the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? when he had wrought [†]wonderfully among them, [n]did they not let [‡]the people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore make a [o]new cart, and take two milch kine, [p]on which there hath come no yoke,[2] and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

8 And take the ark of the LORD, and lay it up in the cart; and put the [q]jewels of gold, which ye return him for a trespass-offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away, that it may go.

9 And see, if it goeth up by the way of his own coast[s] to [r]Beth-shemesh, then [s]he hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we shall know that it is [t]not his hand that smote us; it was [u]a chance that happened to us.

10 ¶ And the men did so; and took two milch kine, and tied them to the cart, and shut up their calves at home:

11 And [v]they laid the ark of the LORD upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold and the images of their emerods.

12 And the kine took the straight way to the way of Beth-shemesh, and went along the highway, lowing as they went, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philistines went after them unto the border of Beth-shemesh.

13 And they of Beth-shemesh were reaping their wheat harvest in the valley: and they lifted up their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it.

14 And the cart came into the field of Joshua, a Beth-shemite, and stood there, where there was a great stone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and [w]offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of the LORD, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were, and put them on the great stone: and the men of Beth-shemesh offered burnt-offerings and sacrificed sacrifices[4] the same day unto the LORD.

16 And when [x]the five lords of the Philistines had seen it, they returned to Ekron the same day.

17 And these are the golden emerods which the Philistines returned for a trespass-offering unto the LORD; [y]for Ashdod one, [z]for Gaza one, [a]for Askelon one, [b]for Gath one, [c]for Ekron one;

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philistines belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the [l]great stone of Abel, whereon they set down the ark of the LORD: which stone remaineth unto this day in the field of Joshua, the Beth-shemite.

19 ¶ And [d]he smote the men of Beth-shemesh, because they had looked into the ark[5] of the LORD, even he smote of the people fifty thousand and threescore and ten men: and the people lamented, because the LORD had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter.

20 And the men of Beth-shemesh said, [e]Who is able to stand before this holy LORD God? and [f]to whom shall he go up from us?

21 ¶ And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of [g]Kirjath-jearim, saying, The Philistines have brought again the ark of the LORD; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

AND the men of [a]Kirjath-jearim came, and fetched up the ark of the LORD, and brought it into the house of [b]Abinadab in the hill, and sanctified Eleazar his son to keep the ark of the LORD.

2 And it came to pass, while the ark abode in Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years:[1] and all the house of Israel [c]lamented after the LORD.

3 ¶ And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do [d]return unto the LORD with all your hearts, then [e]put away the strange gods and Ashtaroth from among you, and [f]prepare your hearts unto the LORD, and [g]serve him only: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines.

4 Then the children of Israel did put away [h]Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served the LORD only.

[1] This was also a custom among the ancient heathens, to consecrate to their gods such monuments of their deliverances as represented the evils from which they were freed. Tavernier relates that this is still practised among the Indians: he says, that when any pilgrim goes to a pagod for the cure of disease, he brings the figure of the limb or part of the body which is affected, made either of gold, silver, or copper, according to his quality, which he offers to his god, and then begins to sing, as all others do, after they have offered. Mr Selden also has observed, that mice were used among the ancient heathen for lustration and cleansing.—PATRICK.

their priests and diviners about it; whose answer contains such inconsistencies, as aptly develop the workings of the human heart in difficult circumstances. From the tradition of Pharaoh's rebellion, and the destruction of him and his subjects, they seriously exhorted the people not to harden their hearts, but to let the ark go; but they did not advise them to repent, to renounce idolatry, or to worship JEHOVAH. Nay, they were reluctant to conclude that their afflictions were from him, and framed an artful device for putting it to the trial; and, if not convinced by another complicated miracle, they seemed determined to keep the ark, and ascribe their sufferings to chance. Some trespass-offerings they supposed to be necessary, if the ark must be restored, in order that "the LORD might lighten his hand from off them;" or that they "might know wherefore he did not." These were indeed such oblations as he had not required; but well suited to be monuments of their shame, and of the Lord's triumph over them. In short, they evinced how unwilling they were to yield, and how unable to resist. As the Egyptians hired Israel with jewels of gold to depart from them, yet were unwilling to let them go quite away, so did the Philistines respecting the ark, in taking which they had so greatly triumphed.

RETURN OF THE ARK.—Ver. 10—16. That two kine which had never been yoked, and whose calves were left at home, should draw quietly, and keep the road without a driver, for several miles, neither stopping, turning aside, nor attempting to return; and that, while they showed the force of instinct in lowing for their calves, they should be urged forward with a stronger impulse to the very place which the Philistines had mentioned, and stop there, constituted, in all respects, a most astonishing miracle; and the obedience of the animals in carrying back the ark reproached the negligence of Israel. The presumption of the Philistines in requiring this additional proof of JEHOVAH's power, was very great; but it was overruled for the manifestation of his glory, and to their deeper condemnation in cleaving to idolatry. The triumph of the ark was completed, when it was thus miraculously restored, with oblations, and the distant attendance of the lords of the Philistines.—Beth-shemesh was a city of the priests on the border of the land, Josh. xxi. 16; and no doubt some of that order, very properly, [illegible] the kine in sacrifice before the ark, though kine in ordinary circumstances were [illegible] for burnt-offerings: but nothing which had been used in this sacred [illegible] to any ordinary use. Their other sacrifices also [illegible]

BETH-SHEMESH.—Ver. 19. The number, as it stands in our version, is so large to be found in one small city, and the expression in the original is so uncommon, that it is generally allowed some mistake is made: Josephus mentions only seventy. The passage may be rendered "He smote—seventy men, even fifty out of a thousand men;" which supposes that about 1400 persons were present, and that a twentieth part was slain: and this appears to be the genuine meaning of the passage. The Beth-shemites seem not to have been duly humbled for their offence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When transgressors, under Divine rebukes, harden themselves in sin, they are sure to prolong and multiply their own miseries; and it is so much more pleasant to learn wisdom by the experience of others, than by our own, that it would be deemed madness to do otherwise, were it not so general.—Those convictions which spring from terror without humiliation, will never produce more than a reluctant and submissive obedience: and the indignant hearts of proud rebels avail themselves of every pretence to ascribe afflictions to chance, rather than to the hand of God, and to infer that it is not absolutely necessary to part with every sin.—If correction be withdrawn, while the heart is thus disposed, the respite proves an encouragement to proceed in transgression: if the affliction be continued after a partial amendment, this is deemed an argument, that repentance and reformation are useless; and every dispensation of Providence eventually occasions increasing guilt and condemnation.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. KIRJATH-JEARIM.—Twenty years of time were passed, before the house of Israel was sensible of the want of the ark. The Septuagint reads it somewhat more clearly than we do; "And it was twenty years, and (that is, when) the whole house of Israel looked up again after the Lord." So long the ark remained in obscurity, and the Israelites were not sensible of the inconvenience, nor ever made any inquiry after it, what was become of it; though, while it was absent from the tabernacle, the token of God's special presence was wanting, nor could they keep the day of atonement, as it should be kept. They were content with the altars without the ark; so easily can formal professors rest satisfied in a road of external performances, without any tokens of God's presence or acceptance. But at length they bethought themselves, and began to lament after the Lord, stirred up as it is probable, by the preaching of Samuel, with which an extraordinary working [illegible] to repentance [illegible] to "look unto him [illegible] and pouring it out [illegible]

5 And Samuel said, [1]Gather all Israel to [j]Mizpeh, and [k]I will pray for you unto the LORD.

6 And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and [l]drew water,[2] and poured it out before the LORD, and [m]fasted on that day, and said there, [n]We have sinned against the LORD. And Samuel [o]judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

7 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard it, they were afraid of the Philistines.

8 And the children of Israel said to Samuel, [p]Cease not to cry unto the LORD our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines.

9 ¶ And Samuel took [q]a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD: and Samuel [r]cried unto the LORD for Israel; and the LORD [†]heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: but the LORD [s]thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and [t]discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel.

11 And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, until they came under Beth-car.

12 Then Samuel [u]took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it [‡]Eben-ezer, saying, [x]Hitherto hath the LORD helped us.

13 ¶ So the Philistines were [y]subdued, and they [z]came no more into the coast of Israel: and the hand of the LORD was [a]against the Philistines all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the coasts thereof did Israel deliver out of the hands of the Philistines. And there was [b]peace between Israel and the Amorites.

15 ¶ And Samuel [c]judged Israel all the days[3] of his life.

16 And he [§]went from year to year in circuit to Beth-el, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places.

17 And [d]his return was to Ramah; for there was his house; and there he judged Israel; and there [e]he built an altar[4] unto the LORD.

CHAP. VIII.

By the occasion of the ill government of Samuel's sons, the Israelites ask a king, 1. The manner of a king, 10.

AND it came to pass, when Samuel was old, that he [a]made his [b]sons judges over Israel.

2 Now the name of his first-born was [c]Joel; and the name of his second, Abiah: they were judges in Beer-sheba.

3 And [d]his sons walked not in his ways, [e]but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment.

4 Then all [f]the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah,

5 And said unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now [g]make us a king to judge us like all the nations.

6 ¶ But the thing [e]displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel [h]prayed unto the LORD.

7 And the LORD said unto Samuel, [i]Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for [k]they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.

8 According [l]to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forsaken me, and served other gods; so do they also unto thee.

9 Now therefore [†]hearken unto their voice: [‡]howbeit yet protest solemnly unto them, and shew them [m]the manner of the king that shall reign over them.

10 ¶ And Samuel told all the words of the LORD unto the people that asked of him a king.

11 And he said, [n]This will be the manner[1] of the king that shall reign over you: [o]He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen; and some [p]shall run before his chariots.

12 And he will [q]appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties; [r]and will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvest, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

14 And he will [s]take your fields, and your vineyards, and your oliveyards, even the best of them, and [t]give them to his servants.

15 And he will take the tenth[2] of your seed, and of your vineyards, and give to his [§]officers, and to his servants.

16 And he will take your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and your goodliest before the LORD," might be an emblem of the effects of divine grace upon the heart; which disposes it to pour forth itself as water before the Lord, in penitential confessions, with tears of godly sorrow, and in fervent prayers and thanksgivings.—Some, indeed, think, that the water was used in a kind of baptismal ablution or purification; others, that it was an expression of their holy joy in God; and others, that it was intended to purify the ground on which the altar was built.—On this occasion Samuel publicly acted as judge, or chief magistrate, in settling differences, and perhaps in punishing criminals and obstinate idolaters; though he seems to have previously exercised authority in a more private manner.—Scott.

EBEN-EZER.—Samuel erected a thankful memorial of this victory, to the glory of God, and for the encouragement of Israel, ver. 12; he set up an Eben-ezer, the stone of help. If ever the people's hard hearts should lose the impressions of this providence, this stone would either revive the remembrance of it, and make them thankful, or remain a standing witness against them for their unthankfulness. 1. The place where this memorial was set up, was the same where twenty years before, the Israelites were smitten before the Philistines, for that was beside Eben-ezer, chap. iv. 1. The sin which procured that defeat formerly, being pardoned upon their repentance, the pardon was sealed by this glorious victory in the very same place where they then suffered loss, see Hos. i. 10. 2. Samuel himself took care to set up this monument: he had been instrumental by prayer to obtain the mercy, and therefore he thought himself in a special manner obliged to make this grateful acknowledgment of it. 3. The reason he gives for the name is, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us:" in which he speaks thankfully of what was past, giving the glory of the victory to God only, who had added this to all his former favours; and yet he speaks somewhat doubtfully for the future; "Hitherto things have done well, but what God may yet do with us, we know not, that we refer to him; but let us praise him for what he has done." Note, The beginnings of mercy and deliverance are to be acknowledged by us with thankfulness so far as they go, though they be not completely finished; nay, though the issue seem uncertain. "Having obtained help from God, I continue hitherto," says blessed Paul, Acts xxvi. 22.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. PETITION FOR A MONARCHY.—"Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." Thus far it was well, that they did not rise up in rebellion against Samuel, and set up a king for themselves, vi et armis—by force; but they applied themselves to Samuel, God's prophet, and humbly begged of him to do it. But it appears by what follows, that it was a bad motion, and ill made, and was displeasing to God. God designed them a king, a man after his own heart, when Samuel was dead; but they would anticipate God's counsel, and would have one now that Samuel was old. They had a prophet to judge them, that had immediate correspondence with heaven, and therein they were great and happy above any nation, none having God "so nigh unto them" as they had, Deut. iv. 7. But this would not serve, they must have a king to judge them with external pomp and power, like "all the nations." A poor prophet in a mantle, though conversant in the visions of the Almighty, looked mean in their eyes, who judged by outward appearance: but a king in a purple robe, with his guards and officers of state would look great; and such a one they must have. They knew it was in vain to court Samuel to take upon him the title and dignity of a king, but he must appoint them one. They do not say, "Give us a king that is wise and good, and will judge better than thy sons do," but, "Give us a king," any body that will but make a figure. Thus foolishly did they forsake their own mercies, and, under pretence of advancing the dignity of their nation to that of their neighbours, did really thrust themselves down from their own excellency, and profane their crown by "casting it to the ground.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Discontent, fondness of change, a desire of conformity to the world, and of outward splendour, are natural to man, and follow him from the cradle to the grave, unless regenerated by the Holy Spirit. No change of circumstance can cure these diseases; the dissatisfaction of the present situation is impatiently felt, the comfort of some other is eagerly and ignorantly conceived; and neither the counsels of wise men, nor the testimony of God, will suppress these inordinate desires. When the mind is thus disposed, the slightest circumstance serves as a pretext for rushing upon gratification; yet a pious man would grieve to give others by his conduct even an occasion of sin. The Lord requires his servants rather to yield to the unjust and unreasonable desires of men, than to seem attached to earthly objects. And he frequently gives men their wishes in anger, to chastise their iniquity, and convince them of their folly.—When our grief or displeasure leads us to prayer, nothing can injure or even long distress us; for the consolation of God will richly repay the injuries of men.—Under the troubles which Providence hath allotted us, we may expect the supports of grace: but if we absolutely persist, in choosing for ourselves; when we have exchanged slight inconveniences for real grievances, we shall have the aggravation of an accusing conscience and the Divine rebuke: and this will often be the case; for those things which at a distance look pleasant, are generally most bitter when in actual possession. The law of God, and the manner of men, are widely different; the former would be the rule of our conduct in the several relations of life; the latter the measure of our expectations from others.—As magistracy is the appointment of God and a great blessing, and as every form is liable to abuses; it is our wisdom to be thankful for the advantages, and patient under the incon-young men, and your asses, and put them to his work.

17 He will take the tenth of your sheep: and ye shall be his servants.

18 And ye shall [u]cry out in that day because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the LORD [x]will not hear you in that day.

19 ¶ Nevertheless the people [y]refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay; but we will have a king over us;

20 That [z]we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and [a]he rehearsed them in the ears of the LORD.

22 And the LORD said to Samuel, [b]Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye[3] every man unto his city.

10 Then said Saul to his servant, [*]Well said; come let us go. So they went unto the city where the man of God was.

11 ¶ And as they went up [†]the hill to the city, they [q]found young maidens going out to draw water, and said unto them, Is the seer here?

12 And they answered them, and said, He is; behold, he is before you: make haste now, for he came to day to the city; for there [‡]is a [‡]sacrifice of the people to-day in [r]the high place:[5]

13 As soon as ye be come into the city, ye shall straightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, because [s]he doth bless the sacrifice; and afterwards they eat that be bidden. Now therefore get you up; for about [§]this time ye shall find him.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out against them, for to go up to the high place.

15 ¶ Now [t]the LORD had [‖]told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, saying,

16 To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and [u]thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may save my people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have [x]looked upon my people, because their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel saw Saul, the LORD said unto him, [y]Behold the man whom I spake to thee of! this same [*]shall reign[6] over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is.

19 And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer: go up before me unto the high place; for ye shall eat with me to-day; and to-morrow I will let thee go, [z]and will tell thee all that is in thine heart.

20 And as for thine asses that were lost [†]three days ago, [a]set not thy mind on them; veniences, of that government under which we live; and our duty to pray continually for our rulers, that they may govern us in the fear of God, and that we may live in all godliness and honesty; thus "honouring God and the king, and not meddling with them that are given to change," or disposed, upon every imaginary grievance to speak evil of the ruler of the people.—But the Lord's servants should behave so unexceptionably, that even those who injure them may not be able to impeach their integrity, or to withhold from them respect and confidence. And it is a hopeful symptom, when our desires of worldly objects can brook delay; and we can refer the time and manner of their being granted to the determination of Providence.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. SAUL.—We are here told, 1. What a goodly family Saul was of, ver. 1. He was of the tribe of Benjamin; so was the New Testament Saul, who also was called Paul, and he mentions it as his honour, for Benjamin was a favourite, Rom. xi. 1, Phil. iii. 5. That tribe had been reduced to a very small number by the fatal war with Gibeah, and much ado there was to provide wives for those six hundred men that were the poor remains of it out of that diminished tribe, which is here called, with good reason, "the smallest of the tribes of Israel," ver. 21. Saul sprang as a root out of a dry ground. That tribe, though fewest in number, was first in dignity, "God giving more abundant honour to that part which lacked," 1 Cor. xii. 24. His father was "Kish, a mighty man of power," or, as the margin reads it, "in substance;" in spirit stout, in body strong, in estate wealthy. The whole lot of the tribe of Benjamin coming to be distributed among six hundred men, we may suppose their inheritances were much larger than theirs who were of other tribes; an advantage which somewhat helped to balance the disadvantage of the smallness of their number. 2. What a good figure Saul made, ver. 2. No mention is here made of his wisdom or virtue, his learning or piety, or any of the accomplishments of his mind, but that he was a tall, proper, handsome man, that had a good face, a good shape, and a good presence, graceful and well-proportioned; "among all the children of Israel, there was not a goodlier person than he;" and, as if nature had marked him for pre-eminence and superiority, he was taller, by the head and shoulders, than any of the people, the fitter to be a match for the giants of Gath, the companions of the Philistines. When God chose a king after his own heart, he pitched upon one that was not at all remarkable for the height of his stature, nor any thing in his countenance, but the innocency and sweetness that appeared there, chap. xvi. 7, 12. But when he chose a king after the people's heart, who aimed at nothing so much as stateliness and grandeur, he pitched upon this huge tall man, who, if he had no other good qualities, yet would look great. It does not appear that he excelled in strength, so much as he did in stature; Samson did, and him they slighted, bound, and betrayed into the hands of the Philistines; justly therefore are they now put off with one, who, though of uncommon height, is weak as other men. They would have a king like the nations, and the nations commonly chose portly men for their kings.

SAMUEL'S LOYALTY.—Two marks of honour Samuel put upon him. 1. He set him "in the best place," as more honourable than any other of the guests, to whom he said, "Give this man place," Luke xiv. 9. Though we may suppose the magistrates were there, who in their own city would claim precedency, yet the master of the feast made Saul and his servant too (who, if he were a king, must be respected as his prime minister of state) "sit in the chiefest place," ver. 22. Note, Civil respects must be paid to those who, in civil things, have the precedency given them by the Divine Providence. 2. He presented him with the "best dish;" which, having had notice from heaven the day before of his coming, ver. 16, he had designed for him, and ordered the cook to secure for him, when he gave orders for inviting the guests, and making preparation for them. And what should this precious dish be, which was so very carefully reserved for the king-elect? One would expect it should be something very nice and delicate; no, it was a plain shoulder of mutton, ver. 23, 24: the right shoulder of the peace-offering was to be given to the priests, who were God's receivers, Lev. vii. 32; the next in honour to that was the left shoulder, which, probably, was always allotted to those that sat at the upper end of the table, and was wont to be Samuel's mess at other times; so that his giving it to Saul now, was an implicit resignation of his place to him. Some observe a significancy in this dish; the shoulder denotes strength, and the breast, which, some think, went with it, denotes affection: he that was king had "the government upon his shoulder," for he must bear the weight of it; and the people in his bosom, for they must be dear to him.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—True grace teaches us to honour those whom God hath honoured, though their advancement be attended by our degradation; but that respect should be shown in the way which may best tend to bring them acquainted with the truths and worship of God.—Without fervent prayer and praise, springing from a penitent, believing heart, a solemn sacrifice would have degenerated into a profane meal; and with them an ordinary meal becomes a spiritual sacrifice: but they who eat their food without thanking the Lord for it, or seeking his blessing on it, are scarcely distinguishable from brutes, or from atheists; and the examples of eminent persons, in such matters as these, may have a salutary effect on those around them.—"Before honour is humility," and they who have well learned to obey, are most likely to be advanced to for they are found. And [b]on whom is all the desire of Israel? is it not on thee, and on all thy father's house?

21 And Saul answered and said, Am not I [c]a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and [d]my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then speakest thou [z]so to me?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them sit [e]in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

23 And Samuel said unto the cook, [f]Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up [g]the shoulder, and that which was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, Behold that which is [h]left! set it before thee, and eat: for unto this time hath it been kept for thee since I said, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

25 ¶ And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon [h]the top of the house.[7]

26 And they arose early: and it came to pass about the spring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, saying, [i]Up, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, [k]Bid the servant pass on before us, (and he passed on,) but stand thou still [l]a while, [l]that I may shew thee the word of God.

CHAP. X.

Samuel anointeth Saul, 1; he confirmeth him by prediction of three signs, 2. Saul's heart is changed, and he prophesieth, 9.

THEN Samuel took a [a]vial of oil,[1] and poured it upon his head, and [b]kissed him, and said, Is it not because the LORD hath anointed thee to be [c]captain over [d]his inheritance?

2 When thou art departed [2]from me to-day, then thou shalt find two men by [e]Rachel's sepulchre in the border of [f]Benjamin at [g]Zelzah; and they will say unto thee, [h]The asses which thou wentest to seek are found: and, lo, thy father hath left the [e]care of the asses, and sorroweth for you, saying, What shall I do for my son?

3 Then shalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou shalt come to the plain of [i]Tabor,[3] and there shall meet thee three men going up to God to [k]Beth-el, one carrying [i]three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine:

4 And they will [f]salute thee, and give thee two loaves of bread; which thou shalt receive of their hands.

5 After that thou shalt come to the [m]hill of God,[4] where is the garrison of the Philistines: and it shall come to pass, when thou art come thither to the city, that thou shalt meet [n]a company of prophets coming down from the high place with [o]a psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp, before them; and they shall prophesy:

6 And the [p]Spirit of the LORD will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them,[5] and shalt be turned into [q]another man.

7 And [z]let it be, when these [r]signs are come unto thee, [s]that thou do as occasion shall serve thee; for [t]God is with thee.

8 And thou shalt go down before me [t]to Gilgal; and, behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace-offerings: [u]seven days shalt thou tarry, till I come to thee, and shew thee what thou shalt do.

9 ¶ And it was so, that when he had turned his [l]back to go from Samuel, God [x]gave him [x]another heart:[6] and [y]all those signs came to pass that day.

10 And when [z]they came thither to the hill, behold, a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them.

11 And it came to pass, [a]when all that knew him beforetime saw that, behold, he prophesied among the prophets, then the people said [f]one to another, [b]What is this that is come unto the son of Kish? [c]Is Saul also among the prophets?

12 And one [z]of the same place answered and said, But [d]who is[7] their father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul also among the prophets?

13 And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came to the high place.

14 ¶ And Saul's uncle said unto him and to his servant, Whither went ye? [e]And he said, To seek the asses: and when we saw that they were [f]nowhere, we came to Samuel.

15 And Saul's uncle said, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said unto you.

16 And Saul said unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the asses were found. But [g]of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not.

17 ¶ And Samuel called the people together [h]unto the LORD to Mizpeh;

18 And said unto the children of Israel, [l]Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I command, and to do it properly.—But how different are the Lord's purposes concerning us, to our intentions for ourselves! Perhaps Saul was the only man who set out to seek asses and literally found a kingdom: but many have taken long voyages and journeys, or moved their habitations, to seek riches and pleasures, who have been guided to places where they have found the salvation of their souls; having met with those who addressed them as if informed of the secrets of their lives and hearts; and having been thus led seriously to regard the message of the Lord delivered by them. If this hath been our case, though our worldly projects have been all frustrated, let us cease caring about it; for the Lord hath given us that which is infinitely better.—Scott.

CHAP. X. SAUL ANOINTED KING.—Ver. 1. In the conversation of the preceding evening and of that morning, Samuel had doubtless given Saul all needful information preparatory to this significant ceremony; and probably attended with exhortations, counsels, and prayers.—The priests were anointed to their office, as types of Christ, and as implying their need of the communication of the Holy Spirit, to furnish them for their sacred work; and for the same reason the kings also were anointed. In performing this sacred rite, Samuel assured Saul of the Lord's choice of him to be king of Israel, and of his own hearty concurrence: and the kiss denoted affection and subjection to him as the LORD's anointed.—The law is silent as to the anointing of kings: but it seems to have been an ancient custom, Judg. ix. 8: and when prophets conformed to it by divine command, it obtained the force of a law.—Scott.

SAUL AMONG THE PROPHETS.—His prophesying was publicly taken notice of, ver. 11, 12. He was now among his acquaintance, who, when they saw him among the prophets, called one another to come and see a strange sight. This would prepare them to accept of him as a king, though one of themselves, when they had seen how God had advanced him to the honour of a prophet. The seventy elders prophesied before they were made judges, Numb. xi. 25. Now, 1. They all wondered to see Saul among the prophets. "What is this that is come to the son of Kish?" Though this school of the prophets was near his father's house, yet he had never associated with them, nor showed them any respect, perhaps had sometimes spoken slightly of them; and now to see him prophesying among them, was a surprise to them, as it was long after, when his namesake in the New Testament preached that gospel which he had before persecuted, Acts ix. 21. Where God gives another heart, it will soon show itself. 2. One of them, that was wiser than the rest, asked, "'Who is their father,' or instructor? Is it not God? Are they not all taught of him? Do they not all owe their gifts to him? And is he limited? Cannot he make Saul a prophet as well as any of them if he pleases?" Or, "Is not Samuel their father?" Under God, he was so; and Saul had now lately been with him, which by his servant he might know. No marvel for him to prophesy, who lay last night under Samuel's roof. 3. It became a proverb, commonly used in Israel, when they would express their wonder at a bad man's either becoming good, or, at least, being found in good company, "Is Saul among the prophets?" Note, Saul among the prophets is a wonder to a proverb. Let not the worst be despaired of, yet let not an external show of devotion, and a sudden change for the present, be too much relied on; for Saul among the prophets was Saul still.

SAUL'S ELECTION.—Samuel presents him to the people, and they accept of him. He needed not mount the bench or scaffold to be seen; when he stood upon even ground with the rest, he topt them all, was seen above them all, for he was taller than any of them by "head and shoulders," ver. 23. "Look you," said Samuel, "what a king God has chosen for you, just such a one as you wished for; 'there is none like him among all the people,' that has so much majesty in his countenance, and such a graceful stateliness in his mien; he is in the crowd like a cedar among the shrubs. Let your own eyes be judges, is he not a brave and gallant man?" The people hereupon signified their approbation of the choice, and their acceptance of him; they "shouted and said, Let the king live;" that is, "Let him long reign over us, in health and prosperity." Subjects were wont to testify their affection and allegiance to their prince, by their good wishes, and those turned (as our translation does this) into addresses to God, Ps. lxxii. 15: "Prayer shall be made for him continually," Ps. xx. 1. Samuel had told them they would soon be weary of their king, but, in the mind they are now in, they will never be so: "Let him live."

THE REGAL CONSTITUTION.—Samuel settles the original contract between them, and leaves it upon record, ver. 25. He had before told them "the manner of the king," chap. viii. 11, how he would abuse his power; now he tells them "the manner of the kingdom," or rather the law, or judgment, or constitution of it; what power the prince might challenge, and the utmost of the property the subject might claim. He fixed the land-marks between them, that neither might encroach upon the other; let them rightly understand one another at first, and let the agreement remain in black and white, and that will preserve a good understanding between them ever after. The learned Bishop Patrick thinks he now repeated and registered what he had told them, chap. viii. 11, of the arbitrary power their kings would assume; that it might hereafter be a witness against them, that they had drawn the calamity upon themselves, for they were warned what it would come to, and yet they would have a king. The convention was dissolved when the solemnity was over; "Samuel sent every man to his house."

brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you:

19 And [k]ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations; and ye have said unto him, Nay, but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the LORD [l]by your tribes, and by your thousands.

20 And when Samuel had [m]caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin[s] was taken.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken: and when they sought him, he could not be found.

22 Therefore they [n]enquired of the LORD further, if the man should yet come thither. And the LORD answered, Behold, he hath [o]hid himself among the stuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, [p]he was higher than any of the people, from his shoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel said to all the people, [q]See ye him whom the LORD hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted, and said, [t]God save the king.

25 Then Samuel told the people [r]the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book,[t] and laid it up before the LORD. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his own house.

26 ¶ And Saul also went home to [a]Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, [b]whose hearts God had touched.

27 But the [u]children of Belial said, How shall this man save us? and they despised him, and [x]brought him no presents. But [y]he held his peace.

CHAP. XI.

Nahash offereth them of Jabesh-gilead a reproachful condition, 1; they send to Saul, and are delivered, 4. Saul confirmed king, 12.

THEN [a]Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against [b]Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, [c]Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, [d]On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that [e]I may thrust out all your right eyes,[1] and lay it for [f]a reproach upon all Israel.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, [g]Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee.

4 ¶ Then came the messengers to [s]Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people [h]lifted up their voices, and wept.

5 And, behold, Saul came [i]after the herd [2]out of the field; and Saul said, [j]What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh.

6 And the [k]Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and [l]his anger was kindled greatly.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and [m]hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, [n]Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And [o]the fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out [t]with one consent.

8 And when he numbered them in [p]Bezek, [q]the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.

9 And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by that time the sun be hot, ye shall have [z]help. And the messengers came and shewed it to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad.

10 Therefore the men of Jabesh said, [r]To-morrow we will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you.

11 And it was so [s]on the morrow, that Saul put the people [t]in three companies; and they came into the midst of the host in the [u]morning watch, and [x]slew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, [y]so that two of them were not left together.

12 ¶ And the people said unto Samuel, [z]Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? bring the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul said, [a]There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to-day [b]the LORD hath wrought salvation in Israel.

14 ¶ Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and [c]let us go to Gilgal, and [d]renew the kingdom there.[3]

15 And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king [e]before the LORD in Gilgal; and [f]there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings before the LORD; and there Saul and all the men of Israel [g]rejoiced greatly.

[1] The reason why Nahash thrust out their right eyes was, not only to bring a reproach on Israel, as himself declares, but also to disable them from serving in war; for, as the manner of fighting in those days was chiefly with bow and arrow, sword and shield, the loss of the right eye made them incapable of either. Yet this barbarous king thought it not proper to put out both their eyes, for then he would have made them less serviceable to himself as slaves, and less able to pay him the tribute which he expected.—STACKHOUSE.

Here were no votes past, nor, for aught that appears, so much as a motion made, for the raising of money to support the dignity of their new elected king; if therefore he afterward think fit to take what they do not think fit to give, (which yet it was necessary that he should have,) they must thank themselves. They went every man to his house, pleased with the name of a king over them, and "Saul also went home to Gibeah," to his father's house, not puffed up with the name of a kingdom under him. At Gibeah, he had no palace, no throne, no court, yet thither he goes. If he must be a king, as one mindful of the rock out of which he was hewn, he will make his own city the royal city, nor will he be ashamed (as too many are when they are preferred) of his mean relations. Such a humble spirit as this puts a beauty and lustre upon great advancements.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Many are employed in outward services to the Lord's people who have not the unction of his sanctifying grace; yet the most eminent Christians and ministers must honour and obey God's authority in them.—The attentive believer, comparing the dispensations of Providence with the word of God, will perceive his hand in the most ordinary concerns of life, as fulfilments of the Scripture, answers of prayer, and evidences of the Lord's peculiar kindness.—A superior care in common life, swallows up an inferior one; and the tender parent ceases from anxiety about his property, when solicitous for the welfare of his son. Children therefore should take heed not to distress such kind friends: and we are also reminded, that a due concern about eternal things would moderate our care about the interests of this life.—Many changes may take place in the language, conduct, and disposition of him who is not born of God: another man he may become, and yet not a new creature; another heart he may have, but not a holy heart: he may be qualified for ruling or preaching; and yet not be "made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light;" nay, he may prophesy and work miracles, and yet be a child of the devil.—Sudden changes are generally to be suspected: but when we consider who makes the Christian, and the prophet, we need not be offended, should we number among professors or preachers of the gospel, some ungodly Saul of our former acquaintance; for true conversion makes so great a change in a man's character, that former friends can scarcely believe him to be the same; whether they admire and [illegible] or despise and hate it.—When we depend on the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we [illegible] our general conduct as circumstances require, and act with humble con[illegible] in [illegible] situations, being assured that "God is with us:" but we should [illegible] to his authority and wonder, and carefully [illegible] Ammonites totally routed; he had now the day before him to complete his victory in; and so complete a victory it was that they which remained, after a great slaughter, were scattered so that "two of them were not left together" to encourage or help one another. We may suppose that Saul was the more vigorous in this matter, 1. Because there was some alliance between the tribe of Benjamin and the city of Jabesh-gilead. That city had declined joining with the rest of the Israelites to destroy Gibeah, which was then punished as their crime, but, perhaps, was now remembered as their kindness, when Saul of Gibeah came with so much readiness and resolution to relieve Jabesh-gilead. Yet that was not all; two-thirds of the Benjamites that then remained, were provided with wives from that city, Judg. xxi. 14, so that most of the mothers of Benjamin were daughters of Jabesh-gilead, for which city, Saul, being a Benjamite, had therefore a particular kindness; and we find they returned his kindness, chap. xxxi. 11, 12. 2. Because it was the Ammonites' invasion that induced the people to desire a king, (so Samuel says, chap. xii. 12,) so that if he had not done his part in this expedition, he had disappointed their expectations, and had for ever forfeited their respect.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—God, in providence, will make way for those whom he hath designed and prepared for usefulness: nor shall any repent of humbly waiting in obscurity and honest industry, till he is pleased to call them forth; for only pride and impatience can conclude that the Lord hath lighted a candle to leave it under a bushel. The reproach of the gospel, the distresses of God's people, and the insulting triumphs of their enemies, should not only excite our sympathizing sorrows, but most decisive exertions in our several stations, yea, our warm and generous indignation. Magistrates in all cases should be sparing of the lives of their subjects, and only punish them in their property, if that can be made effectual. When zeal for the glory of God and love for the brethren, prompt men to earnest and vigorous efforts, and when he is pleased to concur, great effects are speedily produced; but in critical junctures, ordinary measures of despatch are unmeaning. Deliverance in extreme distress is doubly welcome, and it is often vouchsafed to the true Christian; but the destruction which commonly [illegible] the wicked in the height of their triumphs and security is inexpressible. Humility and clemency add superior lustre to the most splendid actions; [illegible] his enemies when he has them in his power obtains the noblest victory. [illegible] the praise of illustrious [illegible] to God, a man acquires the most [illegible] Lord delighteth [illegible] the cause of those who are [illegible] not please [illegible] yet to silence those who [illegible]

CHAP. XII.

Samuel testifieth his integrity 1; he reproveth the people of ingratitude, 6; he terrifieth them with thunder in harvest-time, 16; but comforteth them in God's mercy, if they will fear the Lord, 20.

AND Samuel said unto all Israel, Behold, [a]I have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye said unto me, and [b]have made a king over you.

2 And now, behold, the king [c]walketh before you: and [d]I am old and greyheaded; and, behold, my [e]sons[1] are with you: and [f]I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day.

3 Behold, here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before [g]his anointed: [h]whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any [*]bribe to [†]blind mine eyes therewith? and [i]I will restore it you.

4 And they said, [k]Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand.

5 And he said unto them, [l]The LORD is witness against you, and [m]his anointed is witness this day, that [n]ye have not found ought [o]in my hand. And they answered, He is witness.

6 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, [p]It is the LORD that [‡]advanced Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now therefore stand still,[2] that I may [q]reason with you before the LORD of all the [r]righteous acts of the LORD, which he did [s]to you and to your fathers.

8 When [t]Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers [u]cried unto the LORD, then the LORD [x]sent Moses and Aaron, which [y]brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and [z]made them dwell in this place.

9 And when they [a]forgat the LORD their God, [b]he sold them into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor, and into the hand [c]of the Philistines, and [d]into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them.

10 And [e]they cried unto the LORD, and said, We have sinned, because we have forsaken the LORD, and have served [f]Baalim and Ashtaroth: but now [g]deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee.

11 And the LORD sent [h]Jerubbaal, and [i]Bedan,[3] and [k]Jephthah, and [l]Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every side, and ye dwelled safe.

12 And when ye saw that [m]Nahash the king of the children of Ammon came against you, ye said unto me, [n]Nay; but a king shall reign over us: [o]when the LORD your God was your king.

13 Now therefore [p]behold the king [q]whom ye have chosen, and whom ye [r]have desired! and, behold, the LORD hath set a king over you.

14 If [s]ye will fear the LORD, and serve him, and obey his voice, and not rebel against the [*]commandment of the LORD, then shall both ye and also the king that reigneth over you [†]continue following the LORD your God:

15 But if [t]ye will not obey the voice of the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD, then shall the hand of the LORD be against you, as it was [u]against your fathers.

16 Now therefore [x]stand and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes.

17 Is it [y]not wheat harvest[4] to-day? [z]I will call unto the LORD, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see that [a]your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king.

18 ¶ So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD [b]sent thunder and rain that day: and all the people greatly [c]feared the LORD and Samuel.[5]

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, [d]Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.

20 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, [e]Fear not: ye have done all this wickedness: yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

21 And [f]turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after [g]vain things, which [h]cannot profit nor deliver; for they are vain.

22 For [i]the LORD will not forsake his people [k]for his great name's sake: because it [l]hath pleased the LORD to make you his people.

23 Moreover as for me, [m]God forbid that I should sin against the LORD [‡]in ceasing to pray for you: but [n]I will teach you [o]the good and the right way:

24 Only [p]fear the LORD, and serve him [q]in truth with all your heart: for [r]consider [s]how great things he hath done for you.

25 But [t]if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both [u]ye and your king.

universally acknowledged as the Lord's anointed King, with songs of triumph and praise; as yet, before the mercy-seat he receives the submissions and pleads the cause of rebels, who are unwilling that he should reign over and save them; but shortly, before his righteous tribunal, he will condemn to everlasting ruin all those who persist in contempt of him and opposition to him.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. SAMUEL'S INTEGRITY.—Ver. 1. Now observe, 1. What it is that Samuel here acquits himself from. (1.) He had never, under any pretence whatsoever, taken that which was not his own, ox nor ass; had never distrained their cattle for tribute, fines, or forfeitures, nor used their service without paying for it. (2.) He had never defrauded those with whom he dealt, nor oppressed those that were under his power. (3.) He had never taken bribes to prevent justice, nor was ever biassed by favour or affection, to give judgment in a cause against his conscience. 2. How he appeals to those that had slighted him concerning it; "'Here I am; witness against me,' if you have any thing to lay to my charge; do it now 'before the Lord, and the king,' the proper judges." He puts honour upon Saul, by owning himself accountable to him, if he had been guilty of any wrong. Upon this appeal he is honourably acquitted; he did not expect that they should do him honour at parting, though he well deserved it, and therefore mentioned not any of the good services he had done them, for which they ought to have applauded him, and returned him the thanks of the house; all he desired was, that they should do him justice, and that they did, ver. 4, readily owning, (1.) That he had not made his government oppressive to them, nor used his power to their wrong. (2.) That he had not made it expensive to them; "'Neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand,' for the support of thy dignity." Like Nehemiah, he did "not require the bread of the governor," Neh. v. 18; had not only been righteous, but generous; had "coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel," Acts xx. 33. This honourable testimony borne to Samuel's integrity, is left upon record to his honour, ver. 5; "The Lord is Witness," who searcheth the heart, "and his anointed is witness," who trieth overt acts; and the people agree to it, "He is witness."—Henry.

WITNESS FROM HEAVEN.—Ver. 16—19. Even rain was uncommon during the wheat-harvest, and doubtless this thunderstorm was very violent. Having been predicted and called for, it formed an awful attestation of Samuel's word, and was entirely suited to produce conviction and alarm in the consciences of the people. Being, therefore, terrified with the displays of the Divine power, in answer to Samuel's prayers, and perceiving how much he was honoured by God; they were afraid of some immediate judgments, such as were inflicted on their forefathers for rebelling against Moses and Aaron: and they earnestly begged of him to pray for them. They likewise acknowledged that they had heinously sinned in desiring a king. It should here be observed, that their guilt did not consist in preferring the authority of kings to any other kind of government; but in rebelliously and ungratefully determining to be governed in a different manner than that which God himself had chosen for them. And if afterwards, when God had expressly appointed David to rule over them, the people had required a change of government, and wanted again to be ruled by judges as their fathers had been; they would have been guilty of a similar rebellion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The honour rendered to those who are concluding their course differs widely from the applause and congratulation which many receive, when they first step forth before the public eye. This indeed often terminates in disgrace and contempt; it is therefore unworthy of our wishes, and ought surely never to move a wise man's envy or discontent; though rendered to others at his expense.—Prosperity in sin is no proof of impunity; and sinners never more need to be warned, than when successful in their undertakings.—But the servants of God, though ill treated, should be careful not to expostulate too much with those by whom they have been injured; but to "reason with them of the righteous acts of the LORD," of his truth and mercy, and of their conduct towards him, for their humiliation.—Our safe and happy state consists in a willing dependence on God, and subjection to him: but we affect independence, and refuse obedience, by which we exchange substantial good for an empty shadow; for the greatest outward prosperity contributes to our felicity, only when it induces us to fear and serve God, and to obey his voice.—Disobedience ensures misery from generation to generation, whatever be our station or circumstances in life: and to continue "following the LORD," as his accepted servants, is the highest privilege which we can enjoy.—The most useful benefactors of mankind, who have spent their lives, and worn out their constitutions, in unceasing labours for the good of others, must not be surprised if they are at length cast off with neglect and ingratitude; but when the perverseness of their brethren prevents them from doing all that good which they desire to do, they should still do all the good that they can. This is a general rule for all: they who cannot rule may teach, and they who cannot teach may pray and set an edifying example; and no provocations should tempt us to sin against God in ceasing to pray for our children, relations, friends, people, fellow-sinners, or even our inveterate enemies. Yet the prayers of the church, and the intercession of Christ, will in the event appear to have been united against impenitent sinners; yea, the elements and the whole creation will shortly be armed against them to their destruction. The belief of this alarming truth should "warn them to flee from the wrath to come," to confess their sins, to obey

SAUL *reigned one year;[1] and when he had reigned two years over Israel,

2 Saul [a]chose him three thousand men of Israel; whereof two thousand were with Saul in [b]Michmash and in mount Beth-el, and a thousand were with Jonathan [c]in Gibeah of Benjamin: and the rest of the people he sent every man to his tent.

3 ¶ And Jonathan smote [d]the garrison of the Philistines that was in †Geba, and the Philistines heard of it. And Saul [e]blew the trumpet throughout all the land, saying, Let the Hebrews hear.

4 And all Israel heard say that Saul had smitten a garrison of the Philistines, and that Israel also ‡was had in abomination with the Philistines. And the people were called together after Saul [f]to Gilgal.

5 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, thirty thousand chariots,[2] and six thousand horsemen, and people [g]as the sand which is on the seashore in multitude: and they came up, and pitched in Michmash, eastward from [h]Beth-aven.

6 ¶ When the men of Israel saw that they were [i]in a strait, (for the people were distressed,) then the people did hide themselves [k]in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

7 And some of [l]the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of [m]Gad and Gilead. As for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people [s]followed him trembling.

8 ¶ And he [n]tarried seven days, according to the set time that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal; and the people were scattered from him.

9 And Saul said, Bring hither a burnt-offering to me, and peace-offerings. And [o]he offered the burnt-offering.

10 And it came to pass, that as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came; and [p]Saul went out to meet him, that he might [t]salute him.

11 ¶ And Samuel said, [q]What hast thou done? And Saul said, Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou camest not within the days appointed,[3] and that the Philistines gathered themselves together at [r]Michmash;

12 Therefore [s]said I, The Philistines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not *made supplication unto the LORD: [t]I forced myself therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel said to Saul, [u]Thou hast done foolishly: [x]thou hast not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever.[4]

14 But [y]now thy kingdom shall not continue: [z]the LORD hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be [a]captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

15 And Samuel arose, and gat him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people that were †present with him, [b]about six hundred men.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people that were present with them, abode in ‡Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philistines encamped in Michmash.

17 ¶ And the spoilers came out of the camp of the Philistines [c]in three companies: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to [d]Ophrah, unto the land of [e]Shual:

18 And another company turned the way to [f]Beth-horon: and another company turned to the way of the border that looketh to the valley of [g]Zeboim toward the wilderness.

19 ¶ Now [h]there was no smith[5] found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears:

20 But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his axe, and his mattock.

21 Yet they had [s]a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and to [l]sharpen the goads.

22 So it came to pass in the day of battle, that [l]there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his son was there found.

23 And the *garrison of the Philistines went out to the [k]passage of Michmash.[6] the gospel, and to desire the prayers and counsels of his ministers. But when sinners are deeply convinced of their guilt and danger, they need encouragement, lest their fear should lead to despondency.—In the day of judgment all those things which men have inordinately loved, and for which they have forsaken God, will be found "vain, and such as cannot profit or deliver," even though they were "the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." Happy then are they, whom the Lord hath pleased to make his people! "he will never leave or forsake them," but will glorify his great name in their eternal salvation. None, however, can know assuredly, that these blessings belong to them, except they attend to "the good and right way, and fear the LORD, and serve him with all their heart:" and if "we consider what great things he hath done for us," especially in the work of redemption, we cannot want either motive or encouragement, or assistance for so doing.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. WAR WITH THE PHILISTINES.—Ver. 3, 4. After Saul had defeated Nahash, and had been confirmed in the kingdom; and after he had joined with Samuel in offering sacrifices, and had obtained the benefit of his prayers; it may be concluded that he ought to have marched directly with his victorious army against the Philistines, who possessed strongholds in the land, and had become very formidable. But it is probable that he was elated with success, pleased with the show of royalty, and disposed to ease and indulgence. Thus the favourable opportunity was lost, the ardour of his followers was suffered to abate, and perhaps some of them were disgusted: and the Philistines, doubtless, learning that a king had been chosen, with a view to deliver Israel from their power, assiduously employed the time given them, in preparing for war, and in weakening and disarming the Israelites. In the meanwhile Jonathan, probably by Saul's command, smote a garrison of the Philistines; so that "Israel was had in abomination by the Philistines," who resented the affront, and were exceedingly exasperated: and when Saul at length sounded the alarm, the people either did not come to him, or they speedily deserted him.—In all these measures Saul seems to have been impolitic: but the Lord intended to chastise the people for their sins, to expose their folly in expecting that a king could save them, and to prepare the way for a glorious deliverance which he intended to effect for them.

SAUL'S IMPIETY.—Ver. 8, 9. According to the direction given, and perhaps repeated, Saul waited for Samuel till the close of the seventh day; but, being impatient of his situation, perhaps displeased with Samuel for not coming sooner; and attributing the people's terror and desertion to his absence, and the want of some token of the Lord's presence; and fearing lest the others also should leave him; he proceeded to offer sacrifices. This was contrary to the express injunctions, which had been laid upon him to wait for Samuel; who, having presented burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, with solemn prayers and supplications, would have shown him how he ought to proceed, in the present difficult emergency, that he might ensure success. As no priest is mentioned, it has been thought that Saul, presuming on his kingly authority, usurped the priesthood also: but this is doubtful. It is certain, however, that he took too much upon him, "and thought it was fit the prophet should wait for the king, rather than the king for the prophet.—He entrenched on the priest's office, or upon that of the prophet, or upon both."—Scott.

SENTENCE OF DEPOSITION.—Samuel found Saul standing by his burnt-offering; but, instead of an answer of peace, was sent to him with heavy tidings, and let him know that "the sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord," much more when he brings it, as Saul did, "with a wicked mind." 1. He shows him the aggravations of his crime; and says to this king, "Thou art wicked;" which it is not for any but a prophet of the Lord to say, Job xxxiv. 18. He charges him with being an enemy to himself and his interest, "Thou hast done foolishly;" and art a rebel to God and his government, "'Thou hast not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God,' that command wherewith he intended to try thy obedience." Note, Those that disobey the commandments of God, do foolishly for themselves. Sin is folly, and sinners are the greatest fools. 2. He reads his doom, ver. 14, "'Thy kingdom shall not continue' long to thee or thy family; God has his eye upon another, 'a man after his own heart,' and not like thee, that will have thy own will and way." The sentence is, in effect, the same with Mene tekel. Only now there seems room left for Saul's repentance, upon which this sentence should have been reversed; but upon the next act of disobedience, it was made irreversible, chap. xv. 29. And now, better a thousand times he had continued in obscurity tending his asses, than to be *en*throned, and so soon *de*throned.

NATIONAL COWARDICE.—How slothful and mean-spirited the Israelites were, that suffered the Philistines thus to impose upon them, and had no thought nor spirit to help themselves. It was reckoned very bad with them, when there was "not a shield or spear found among forty thousand in Israel," Judg. v. 8; and it was no better now, when there was never an Israelite with a sword by his side, but the king and his son; never a soldier, never a gentleman: surely they were reduced to this, or began to be so, in Samson's time, for we never find him with sword or spear in his hand. If they had not been dispirited, they could not have been disarmed, but it was sin that made them naked to their shame.—Henry.

3 And [d]Ahiah,[2] the son of Ahitub, [e]I-chabod's brother, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, the LORD's priest in Shiloh, [f]wearing an ephod. And the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.

4 And between [g]the passages, by which Jonathan sought to go over unto the Philistines' garrison, there was a sharp rock[3] on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.

5 The [†]forefront of the one was situate northward over against Michmash, and the other southward over against Gibeah.

6 And Jonathan said to the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these [h]uncircumcised: [i]it may be that the LORD will work for us: [j]for there is no restraint to the LORD to save by many or by few.

7 And his armourbearer said unto him, [k]Do all that is in thine heart: turn thee; behold, I am with thee according to thy heart.

8 Then said Jonathan, Behold, [l]we will pass over unto these men, and we will discover ourselves unto them.

9 If [m]they say thus unto us, [‡]Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them.

10 But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for the LORD hath delivered them into our hand: and [n]this shall be a sign unto us.[4]

11 And both of them discovered themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said, Behold, the Hebrews come forth [o]out of the holes where they had hid themselves.

12 And the men of the garrison answered Jonathan and his armourbearer, and said, [p]Come up to us, and we will shew you a thing. And Jonathan said unto his armourbearer, [q]Come up after me, for the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Israel.

13 And Jonathan [r]climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armourbearer after him: and they [s]fell before Jonathan; and his armourbearer slew after him.

14 And that first slaughter, which Jonathan and his armourbearer made, was about twenty men, within as it were [§]an half acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plow.

15 ¶ And [t]there was trembling in the host, in the field, and among all the people: the garrison, and [u]the spoilers, they also trembled, and [x]the earth quaked:[5] so it was a very great trembling.

16 And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked; and, behold, the multitude [y]melted away, and they went on [z]beating down one another.

17 ¶ Then said Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and see who is gone from us. And when they had numbered, behold, Jonathan and his armourbearer were not there.

18 And Saul said unto Ahiah, [a]Bring hither the ark of God. For [b]the ark of God was at that time with the children of Israel.

19 And it came to pass, while Saul talked unto the priest, that the [‖]noise that was in the host of the Philistines went on and increased: and Saul said unto the priest, [c]Withdraw thine hand.[6]

20 And Saul and all the people that were with him [*]assembled themselves, and they came to the battle: and, behold, [d]every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture.

21 Moreover [e]the Hebrews[7] that were with the Philistines before that time, which went up with them into the camp from the country round about, even they also turned to be with the Israelites that were with Saul and Jonathan.

22 Likewise all the men of Israel which had [f]hid themselves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philistines fled, even they also followed hard after them in the battle.

23 So [g]the LORD saved Israel that day: and the battle passed over unto [h]Beth-aven.

24 ¶ And the men of Israel were distressed that day: for Saul had adjured the people, saying, [‖]Cursed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that [k]I may be avenged on mine enemies. So none of the people tasted any food.

25 And [‖]all they of the land came to a wood; and there was [m]honey upon the ground.[8]

26 And when the people were come into the wood, behold, the honey dropped; but no man put his hand to his mouth: for [n]the people feared the oath.

27 But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipped it in an honeycomb, and put his hand to his mouth; and [o]his eyes were enlightened.[9]

28 Then answered one of the people, and said, Thy father straitly charged the people with an oath, saying, [p]Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were [†]faint.

29 Then said Jonathan, [q]My father hath troubled the land: see, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey.

son of Saul, who was much fitter than the father to wear the crown. "A sweet imp" (says Bishop Hall) "out of a crab-stock." 1. He resolved to go incognito—"unknown to any one," into the camp of the Philistines; he did not acquaint his father with his design, for he knew he would forbid him; nor the people, for he knew they would all discourage him; and because he resolved not to heed their objections he resolved not to hear them, nor ask their advice, ver. 1, 3. Nor had he so great an opinion of the priest as to consult him; but being conscious of a divine impulse putting him upon it, he threw himself into the mouth of danger, in hopes of doing service to his country. The way of access to the enemies' camp is described, ver. 4, 5, to be peculiarly difficult, and their natural entrenchments seemed impregnable, yet that does not discourage him; the strength and sharpness of the rocks do but harden and whet his resolutions. Great and generous souls are animated by opposition, and take a pleasure in breaking through it. 2. He encouraged his armour-bearer, a young man that attended him, to go along with him in this daring interprise; ver. 6, "'Come, and let us' put our lives in our hands, 'and go over to the' enemies' 'garrison,' and try what we can do to put them into confusion." See whence he draws his encouragements. (1.) "They are uncircumcised, and have not the seal of the covenant in their flesh as we have. Fear not, we shall do well enough with them, for they are not under the protection of God's covenant as we are, cannot call him theirs as we can, by the sign of circumcision." If such as are enemies to us are also strangers to God we need not fear them. (2.) "God is able to make us two victorious over their unnumbered regiments. 'There is no restraint to the Lord,' no limitation to the Holy One of Israel, but it is all one to him, to 'save by many or by few.'" This is a truth easily granted in general, that it is all alike to Omnipotence, what the instruments are by which it works, and yet it is not so easy to apply it to a particular case; when we are but few and feeble, then to believe that God can not only save us, but save by us, this is an instance of faith, which, wherever it is, shall obtain a good report. Let this strengthen the weak and hearten the heartless; let it be pleaded with God for the enforcing of our petitions, and with ourselves for the silencing of our fears, "It is nothing with God to help, whether with many or with them that have no power," 2 Chron. xiv. 11.—Henry.

SAUL'S IMPATIENCE.—Ver. 16—23. This confusion in the camp of the Philistines being observed by the sentinels of Saul's army; and none being absent from the camp of Israel but Jonathan and his armour-bearer, no doubt the people were greatly astonished; and Saul prepared to consult the Lord whether he ought to attack the Philistines or no. His impatient spirit, however, could no more wait for Ahiah's answer than for Samuel's arrival, but perceiving the commotion still increasing, he hastily determined to march against the enemy; though he might justly have questioned, whether the Lord, who had begun the work without him, would accept of his assistance. At least there could be no need of such haste. It pleased the Lord indeed to employ Saul's army, as well as the deserters and fugitives, who joined in crushing the Philistines; yet Saul himself met with a very humiliating proof, that the Divine interposition was not vouchsafed on his account. Probably the ark of the covenant was brought into the field on this occasion. Though some think that the coffer, or chest, in which the ephod and breast-plate were kept, is meant.

HIS RASH CURSE.—Ver. 24—34. The absolute prohibition of all food to the soldiers for the whole day, was very impolitic; though Saul might properly have cautioned them not to waste their time about food, on penalty of his displeasure. But to accompany this prohibition with that awful curse, by which the enemies of God were devoted to utter destruction, was profane and rash in the extreme; and it was the more inexcusable, in that he did not say, "that the LORD may avenge Israel on his enemies," but "that I may be avenged on mine enemies." The people, fearing the curse, abstained, not only from the spoil of the Philistines, but likewise from the honey which was laid in their way, and with which they might have refreshed themselves without loss of time, and thus have been enabled to have made a much greater slaughter of the Philistines: and in the evening, being almost fainting with labour and hunger, some of them were tempted hastily to kill the cattle which they had taken and to eat the flesh with the blood, directly contrary to the law, until they were restrained by Saul's authority. In the meanwhile, Jonathan, being ignorant of the curse, and almost ready to faint with fatigue, had eaten a little honey, by which he was sensibly and visibly revived, so that his eyes, which had been dim and languishing, were enlightened and looked lively; yet he thus found himself caught in a snare, and exposed to the most imminent danger of being put to death.—Scott.

JONATHAN'S SIN OF IGNORANCE.—Jonathan fell under the curse of ignorance. He heard not the charge his father had given; for, having bravely forced the lines, he was then following the chase, and therefore might justly be looked upon as exempted from the charge and not intended in it. But it seems it was taken for granted, and he himself did not object against it afterward, that it extended to him though absent upon so good an occasion. He, not knowing any peril in it, took up a piece of a honeycomb, upon the end of a staff and sucked it, ver. 27, and was sensibly refreshed by it; "his eyes were enlightened," which began to grow dim through hunger and faintness; it made his countenance look pleasant and cheerful, for it was such as a stander-by might discern, ver. 29, "See how mine eyes have been enlightened." He thought no harm, nor feared any, till one of the people acquainted him with the order, and then he found himself in a snare. Many a good 30 How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to-day of the spoil of their enemies which they found? for [r]had there not been now a much greater slaughter among the Philistines?

31 ¶ And they smote the Philistines that day from Michmash to [s]Aijalon:[10] and the people were very faint.

32 And the people [t]flew upon the spoil, and took sheep, and oxen, and calves, and slew them on the ground: and the people [u]did eat them with the blood.[11]

33 Then they told Saul, saying, Behold, the people sin against the LORD, in that they eat with the blood. And he said, Ye have [‡]transgressed: roll a great stone[12] unto me this day.

34 And Saul said, Disperse yourselves among the people, and say unto them, Bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his sheep, and slay them here, and eat; and sin not against the LORD in eating with the blood. And all the people brought every man his ox [§]with him that night, and slew them there.

35 ¶ And Saul [v]built an altar unto the LORD: [‖]the same was the first altar that he built unto the LORD.

36 And Saul said, [x]Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light, and [y]let us not leave a man of them. And they said, Do whatsoever seemeth good unto thee. Then [z]said the priest, Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 ¶ And Saul asked counsel of God, [a]Shall I go down after the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel? But [b]he answered him not that day.

38 ¶ And Saul said, [c]Draw ye near hither all the [*]chief of the people: and know and see wherein this sin hath been this day.

39 For, as [d]the LORD liveth, which saveth Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die. But there was not a man among all the people that answered him.

40 Then said he unto all Israel, Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, [e]Do what seemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul said unto the LORD God of Israel, [†]Give a perfect lot. [f]And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people [‡]escaped.

42 And Saul said, Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, [g]Tell me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said, [h]I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and, lo, I must die.

44 And Saul answered, [i]God do so, and more also: for [k]thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.

45 And the people said unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, [l]who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: as the LORD liveth, [m]there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for [n]he hath wrought with God this day. So the people rescued Jonathan, that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own place.

47 ¶ So Saul [o]took the kingdom over Israel, and [p]fought against all his enemies on every side, against Moab, and against the children of [q]Ammon, and against Edom, and against the kings of [r]Zobah, and against the Philistines: and whithersoever he turned himself, he vexed them.[13]

48 And he [§]gathered an host, and [s]smote the Amalekites, and delivered Israel out of the hands of them that spoiled them.

49 ¶ Now the sons of Saul were [t]Jonathan, and Ishui, and Melchi-shua: and the names of his two daughters were these; the [u]name of the first-born Merab, and the name of the younger Michal:

50 And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz: and [x]the name of the captain of his host was [‖]Abner, the son of Ner, Saul's uncle.

51 And [y]Kish was the father of Saul; and Ner the father of Abner was the son of Abiel.

52 And there was sore war against the Philistines all the days of Saul: and [z]when Saul saw any strong man, or any valiant man, he took him unto him.[14]

Samuel sendeth Saul to destroy Amalek, 1; he spareth Agag, and the best of the spoil, 8. Samuel killeth Agag, 32.

SAMUEL also said unto Saul, [a]The LORD sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel: now therefore [b]hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the LORD.

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [c]I remember that which [d]Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way, when he came up from Egypt.

3 Now go and smite Amalek,[1] and [e]utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but [f]slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, [g]ox and sheep, camel and ass.

4 And Saul gathered the people together, son has been thus entangled and distressed, more ways than one, by the rashness of an inconsiderate father. Jonathan, for his part, lost the crown he was heir to, by his father's folly, which, it may be, this was an ill omen of.

DETECTION OF JONATHAN.—Jonathan was discovered by lot to be the offender. Saul would have lots cast between himself and Jonathan on the one side, and the people on the other, perhaps, because he was as confident of Jonathan's innocency in this matter, as of his own, ver. 40. The people, seeing him in a heat, durst not gainsay any thing he proposed, but acquiesced, "Do as seemeth good unto thee." Before he cast lots, he prayed that "God would give a perfect lot;" ver. 41, that is, make a full discovery of this matter, or, as it is in the margin, that he would show the innocent. This was with an air of impartial justice. Judges should desire that truth may come out, whoever may suffer by it. Lots should be cast with prayer, because they are a solemn appeal to Providence, and by them we beg of God to direct and determine us; Acts i. 24; for which reason some have condemned games that depend purely upon lot or chance, as making too bold with a sacred thing. Jonathan at length was taken, ver. 42, Providence designing hereby to countenance and support a lawful authority, and to put an honour upon the administration of public justice in general, reserving another way to bring off one that had done nothing worthy of death. Jonathan ingenuously confesses the fact, and Saul, with an angry curse, passes sentence upon him. Jonathan denies not the truth, nor goes about to conceal it, only he thinks it hard that he must "die for it," ver. 43. He might very fairly have pleaded his invincible ignorance of the law, or have insisted upon his merit, but he submitted to the necessity with a great and generous mind, "God's and my father's will be done:" thus he showed as much valour in receiving the messengers of death himself, as in sending them among the Philistines. It is as brave to yield in some cases as it is in other cases to fight.

HIS DELIVERANCE.—The people rescued Jonathan out of his father's hands, ver. 45. Hitherto they had expressed themselves very observant of Saul, what seemed good to him they acquiesced in, ver. 36, 40; but when Jonathan is in danger, Saul's word is no longer a law to them, but with the utmost zeal they oppose the execution of his sentence, "'Shall Jonathan die?' That blessing, that darling of his country? Shall that life be sacrificed to a punctilio of law and honour, which was so bravely exposed for the public service, and to which we owe our lives and triumphs? No, we will never stand by and see him thus treated, whom God delights to honour." It is good to see Israelites zealous for the protection of those whom God has made instruments of public good. Saul had sworn that Jonathan should die, but they oppose their oath to his and swear he shall not die; "As the Lord liveth, there shall not" only not his head, but not "a hair of his head fall to the ground;" they did not rescue him by violence, but by reason and resolution; and Josephus says, they made their prayer to God that he might be loosed from the curse. They plead for him, that "he has wrought with God this day;" that is, "he has owned God's cause, and God has owned his endeavours, and therefore his life is too precious to be thrown away upon a nicety." We may suppose Saul had not so perfectly forgotten the relation of a father, but that he was willing enough to have Jonathan rescued, and well pleased to have that done which yet he would not do himself; and he that knows the heart of a father, knows not how to blame him. The design against the Philistines is quashed by this incident; ver. 46, "Saul went up from following them," and so an opportunity was lost of completing the victory. When Israel's shields are clashing with one another, the public safety and service suffer by it.—Henry.

OPPORTUNITY LOST.—The people judged rightly, that the guilt was contracted by Saul, and that the rebuke was intended for him and not for Jonathan; and therefore they rescued him by whom God had given them this extraordinary deliverance, from the hands of his severe father. Saul could not but desire the life of his son; yet considering him as decidedly preferred before himself, both by the Lord and Israel; knowing that Jonathan's deliverance was a severe reproof of his rashness, and perhaps apprehending, as he had abundant cause to do, that his repeated curses would light on his own head, he returned home apparently dissatisfied and displeased. Thus the opportunity of completing the destruction of the Philistines was lost; nor could it be expected, that an expedition which was begun and conducted so very ill, should terminate without some evident tokens of the Divine displeasure against Saul; though the Lord's love to Israel was displayed in an unparalled manner, by the faith and courage of his pious son Jonathan. Through Saul's misconduct, and as if in answer to his imprecations, Jonathan was excluded from the kingdom, and slain with him by the Philistines, when "the LORD did unto him," as he intended to have done to his son, "and more also;" having indeed devoted him to utter destruction.—Scott.

SAUL'S ARMY.—We see 1. How he levied his army: "when he saw any strong valiant man," that was remarkably fit for service, "he took him unto him," ver. 52, as Samuel had told them the manner of the king would be; chap. viii. 11, and if he must have a standing army, it was his prudence to fill it up with the ablest men he could make choice of. 2. How he employed his army; he guarded the country against the insults of its enemies on every side, and prevented their incursions, ver. 47, 48.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. SAUL'S COMMISSION AGAINST AMALEK.—God had an ancient quarrel with the Amalekites, for the injuries they did to his people Israel, when he brought and numbered them in [h]Telaim, [i]two hundred thousand footmen, and ten thousand men of Judah.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and [*]laid wait in the valley.

6 ¶ And Saul said unto [k]the Kenites, [l]Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for [m]ye shewed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites.

7 ¶ And Saul [n]smote the Amalekites from [o]Havilah[2] until thou comest to [p]Shur, that is over against Egypt.

8 And he took [q]Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and [r]utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword.

9 But Saul and the people spared Agag,[3] and [s]the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of [†]the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly.

10 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, saying,

11 It [t]repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is [u]turned back from following me, and [x]hath not performed my commandments. And [y]it grieved Samuel; and [z]he cried unto the LORD all night.

12 ¶ And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to [a]Carmel, and, behold, [b]he set him up a place,[4] and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul: and Saul said unto him, [c]Blessed be thou of the LORD: [d]I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

14 And Samuel said, [e]What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

15 And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: [f]for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, [g]to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

16 Then Samuel said unto Saul, [h]Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on.

17 And Samuel said, [i]When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and [j]the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?

18 And the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy [k]the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until [‡]they be consumed.

19 Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst [l]fly upon the spoil, and [m]didst evil in the sight of the LORD?

20 And Saul said unto Samuel, [n]Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and [o]have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites.

21 But [p]the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

22 And Samuel said, [q]Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to [r]obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.

23 For [s]rebellion is as the sin of [5]witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry: because [t]thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, he hath also rejected thee from being king.

24 ¶ And Saul said unto Samuel, [u]I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words: because [x]I feared the people,[6] and [y]obeyed their voice.

25 Now therefore, I pray thee, [z]pardon my sin, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD.

26 And Samuel said unto Saul, [a]I will not return with thee: for [b]thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

28 And Samuel said unto him, [c]The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and [d]hath given it to [e]a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou.

29 And also [f]the [†]Strength of Israel[6] [g]will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent.

30 Then he said, I have sinned: yet [h]honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, [i]that I may worship the LORD thy God.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worshipped the LORD.

them out of Egypt; we have the story, Exod. xvii. 8, &c., and the crime is aggravated, Deut. xxv. 18, he basely "smote the hindmost of them, and feared not God;" God then swore that he would have "war with Amalek from generation to generation," and that, in process of time, he "would utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek;" that is the work that Saul is now appointed to do, ver. 3, "'Go and smite Amalek.' Israel is now strong, and the measure of the iniquity of Amalek is now full; now go and make a full riddance of that devoted nation." He is expressly commanded to kill and slay all before him, both "man and woman, infant and suckling," and not spare them out of pity; "ox and sheep, camel and ass," and not spare them out of covetousness. Note, 1. Injuries done to God's Israel, will certainly be reckoned for sooner or later, especially the opposition given them when they are coming out of Egypt. 2. God often bears long with those that are marked for ruin. The sentence past is not executed speedily. 3. Though he bear long, he will not bear always. The year of recompense for the controversy of Israel, will come at last. Though divine justice strikes slow, it strikes sure. 4. The longer judgment is delayed, many times the more severe it is when it comes. 5. God chooses out instruments to do his work, that are fittest for it. This was bloody work, and therefore Saul must do it, that was a rough and severe man.—Henry.

HIS PARTIAL COMPLIANCE.—Ver. 8, 9. The Lord had devoted all the Amalekites, together with their substance, to utter destruction, as a solemn sacrifice to his justice: and the commandment given to Saul, concerning the execution of this sentence, was express and particular; and, probably intended as a test of his disposition to obey or disobey God.—But while neither he nor his soldiers were induced to mitigate the severity of the injunction, by sparing any of the women or children; he, perhaps in complaisance to royalty, or to grace his victory, spared the king of Amalek; and the people, doubtless by his concurrence, covetously reserved the best of the cattle and substance, destroying only the refuse. Saul's conduct was evidently the effect of a proud rebellious spirit.—Many Amalekites escaped at this time, probably without his fault; and we read of them afterwards as a numerous people.—Scott.

HIS APOLOGY.—Saul insists upon his own justification against the charge, ver. 15. The fact he cannot deny, the sheep and oxen were brought from the Amalekites. But 1. It was not his fault, for "the people spared them;" as if they durst have done it without the express orders of Saul, when they knew it was against the express orders of Samuel. Note, Those that are willing to justify themselves, are commonly very forward to condemn others, and to lay the blame upon any rather than take it to themselves. Sin is a brat that nobody cares to have laid at their doors. It is a sorry subterfuge of an impenitent heart that will not confess its guilt, to lay the blame on those that were either tempters or partners, or only followers in it. 2. It was with a good intention: "It was 'to sacrifice to the Lord thy God:' he is thy God, and thou wilt not be against any thing that is done, as this is, for his honour." This was a false plea, for both Saul and the people designed their own profit in sparing the cattle: but if it had been true, it had been frivolous, for God hates robbery for burnt-offering; God appointed these cattle to be sacrificed to him in the field, and therefore will give to those no thanks that bring them to be sacrificed at his altar; for he will be served in his own way, and according to the rule he himself has prescribed. Nor will a good intention justify a bad action.—Henry.

TRUE PIETY.—Ver. 22. Submission to the authority of God must be essential to true religion under every dispensation: but there is a great difference betwixt the submission of a holy, and that of a sinful creature. External obedience, even to moral precepts, is good, only when it springs from a willing internal submission to the Divine authority. To profess a belief of the gospel is good only when it arises from submission to the Divine teaching, to the justice of the condemnation under which sinners are concluded, and to the wisdom, suitableness, and grace of the method of salvation there revealed. All instituted worship derives its obligation from the express appointment of God, from the honour which it renders to his name, from the disposition of the worshipper, and from the grace and spiritual blessings which are communicated by it. Sacrifices especially declared the desert of the offender, and typified the sufferings of the Saviour: their value resulted entirely from the appointment of God; and they were not acceptable, except offered in obedience to him, and with a penitent, believing, and pious mind. When therefore they were substituted in the place of true piety, or trusted in as meritorious; when the means were used to compensate for the neglect of the end, and the sign was exalted into the place of the thing signified; they became an abomination, however costly and numerous they were.—Had Saul offered thousands of bullocks and rams, from his own herds and flocks, exactly according to the Divine ritual, in an impenitent and self-confident disposition, God would have abhorred them: how much more then, when the animals to be sacrificed were spared, in direct disobedience to his express command!—Samuel did not therefore mean to exalt one part of external religion by depreciating another, as many seem to suppose; but to show that a right state of the heart is essential to the acceptable performance of every service.

AGAG.—Ver. 32, 33. Agag affected the stateliness and splendour of a monarch, as if he would overawe the aged prophet: and he spake either as one who deemed himself in no danger of death, seeing he had escaped the sword of a conquering king, and could have nothing to fear from Samuel: or, as having got over the fear of death, and as

CHAP. XVI.

Samuel, sent by God under pretence of a sacrifice, cometh to Beth-lehem, 1; his human judgment is reproved, 6; he anointeth David, 11.

AND the LORD said unto Samuel, [a]How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, [b]seeing I have rejected him from reigning over Israel? Fill thine [c]horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to [d]Jesse the Beth-lehemite: for I have provided me a king among his sons.

2 And Samuel said, [e]How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the LORD said, Take an heifer *with thee, and say, [f]I am come to sacrifice [1] to the LORD.

3 And [g]call Jesse to the sacrifice, [h]and I will shew thee what thou shalt do: and thou shalt [i]anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee.

4 And Samuel did that which the LORD spake, and came to Beth-lehem. And the elders of the town [j]trembled at his [†]coming, and said, [k]Comest thou peaceably?

5 And he said, Peaceably: I am come to sacrifice unto the LORD: [l]sanctify yourselves, [2] and come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, when they were come, that he looked on [m]Eliab, and said, [n]Surely the LORD's anointed is before him.

7 But the LORD said unto Samuel, [o]Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the LORD [p]seeth not as man seeth; for man [q]looketh on the [‡]outward appearance, but the LORD looketh [r]on the heart.

8 Then Jesse called [s]Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

9 Then Jesse made [t]Shammah to pass by. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

10 Again, Jesse made [u]seven of his sons to pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, The LORD hath not chosen these.

11 ¶ And Samuel said unto Jesse, Are here all thy children? And he said, [x]There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Send and fetch him: for we will not sit [§]down till he come hither.

determined to meet it with intrepidity. He was indeed the chief person who ought to have been slain, both as the head of the devoted nation, and for his own cruelties; and therefore "Samuel hewed him to pieces before the LORD," as a sacrifice to his justice. Thus the prophet, who was of a lenient spirit, and prayed all night for Saul, did not hesitate to execute that sentence of God upon his condemned criminal, which Saul, who afterwards proved himself exceedingly cruel, had not done.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. JESSE'S FAMILY.—Eliab the eldest was privately presented first to Samuel, probably, none being present but Jesse only, and Samuel thought he must needs be the man; ver. 6, "Surely this is the Lord's anointed." The prophets themselves, when they spake from under the divine direction, were as liable to mistake as other men; as Nathan, 2 Sam. vii. 3. But God rectified the prophet's mistake, by a secret whisper to his mind, ver. 7, "Look not on his countenance." It was strange that Samuel, who had been so wretchedly disappointed in Saul, whose countenance and stature recommended him as much as any man's could, should be so forward to judge of a man by that rule. When God would please the people with a king, he chose a proper man; but when he would have one after his own heart, he should not be chosen by the outside; men judge by the sight of the eyes, but God does not, Isa. xi. 3, "The Lord looks on the heart." When Eliab was set aside, Abinadab and Shammah, and, after them four more of the sons of Jesse, seven in all, were presented to Samuel, as likely for his purpose, but Samuel, who now attended more carefully than he did at first to the divine direction, laid them all by. "The Lord has not chosen these," ver. 8—10. Men dispose of their honours and estates to their sons, according to their seniority of age, and priority of birth, but God does not. "The elder shall serve the younger." Had it been left to Samuel, or Jesse, to make the choice, one of these had certainly been chosen; but God will magnify his sovereignty, in passing by some that were most promising, as well as in fastening on others that were less so. David at length was pitched upon. He was the youngest of all the sons of Jesse; his name signifies beloved, for he was a type of the beloved Son.

DAVID SELECTED.—The Lord told Samuel, in his ear, (as he had done, chap. ix. 15,) that this was he whom he must anoint, ver. 12. Samuel objects not to the meanness of his education his youth, or the little respect he had in his own family; but, in obedience to the divine command, took his horn of oil and "anointed him," ver. 13, signifying thereby, 1. A divine designation to the government, after the death of Saul, of which hereby he gave him a full assurance. Not that he was at present invested with the royal power, but it was entailed upon him, to come to him in due time. 2. A divine communication of gifts and graces, to fit him for the government, and make him a type of him who was to be the Messiah, the anointed One, who received the Spirit not by measure, but without measure.—Henry.

EVIL SPIRIT ON SAUL.—Ver. 15—23. Saul's courtiers evidently perceived the change which had taken place in their master, and ascribed it to the right cause; though their language seems less accurate than that of the historian; the original words being, "an evil spirit of God, meaning one whom God permitted to trouble Saul. The device proposed by them might be very proper for soothing the melancholy of Saul, and calming his passions, but the cause of his malady lay much deeper; and it would have been better counsel, if they had persuaded him to send for Samuel to converse with him, and pray for him. The hand of the Lord was, however, manifest in thus bringing David to court. After his anointing, he had in various ways signalized himself, so that he was much noticed; and especially his skill in playing on the harp was remarked by some person who attended on Saul. Thus he was introduced to him, and his solemn sacred music was far more suitable to the case than more amusing strains would have been. He came to Saul with a very high character which he did not disgrace; he was useful to him, and for a time beloved by him; and yet, when Saul no longer wanted him, he returned back to his flocks as contented as ever, and was soon forgotten at court.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Our most disinterested sorrow may be so excessive, as to imply rebellion against the righteous will of God; and he will then rebuke us, as well as encourage us under our distresses. We ought not inconsolably to mourn for such as the Lord hath rejected, but should rather rejoice in those whom he is calling forth to usefulness; and no partial affection should interfere with present duty. The most eminent believers are not entirely superior to the fear of man, when dangerous services are assigned them. But the Lord will inwardly strengthen and outwardly protect them; and, without immediate revelation, he can, by his word and Spirit, show them, step by step, what they ought to do. The guilty conscience trembles at a message from heaven, yet the ministers of Christ come peaceably, proposing salvation through the sacrifice of a Redemer, and speaking terror to none, except to those who neglect so great salvation. There is a preparation of heart required for receiving this atonement, as well as for attending on divine ordinances; the instruction, converse, and prayers of faithful ministers, are very useful in both cases, to those who desire to profit by them; and parents ought not needlessly to permit their children to miss such favourable opportunities.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. GOLIATH.—Concerning this champion, observe, 1. His prodigious size. He was of the sons of Anak, who at Gath kept their ground in Joshua's time, Josh. xi. 22, and kept a race of giants there, of which Goliath was one, and, it is probable, one of the of Elah, and [t]set the battle in array against the Philistines.

3 And the Philistines stood on a mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side: and there was a valley between them.

4 ¶ And there went out a champion [2] out of the camp of the Philistines, named [o]Goliath [f]of Gath, [g]whose height was six cubits and a span.

5 And he had an helmet of brass upon his head, and he was [z]armed with a coat of mail; and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

6 And he had greaves of brass [3] upon his legs, and a [3]target of brass between his shoulders.

7 And [h]the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam, and his spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron: and one bearing a shield went before him.

8 And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? Am not I a Philistine, and ye [i]servants to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and [k]serve us.

10 And the Philistine said, [l]I defy the armies of Israel this day; [m]give me a man, that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine, they were [n]dismayed, and greatly afraid.

12 ¶ Now [o]David was the son of that [p]Ephrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whose name was Jesse; and he had [q]eight sons: [4] and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

13 And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle: and [r]the names of his three sons that went to the battle were Eliab the first-born, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third [s]Shammah.

14 And David was [t]the youngest: and the three eldest followed Saul.

15 But David went and [u]returned from Saul to feed his father's sheep at Beth-lehem.

16 And the Philistine drew near morning and evening, and presented himself [v]forty days.

17 And Jesse said unto David his son, [x]Take now [5] for thy brethren an ephah of this [y]parched corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren;

18 And [z]carry these ten [1]cheeses unto the captain of [*]their thousand, and [a]look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge. [6]

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

20 ¶ And David rose up early in the morning, and [b]left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him; and he came to the [†]trench, as the host was going forth to the [‡]fight, and shouted for the battle.

21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army.

22 And David left [§]his carriage [7] in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and [l]saluted his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name, out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake [c]according to the same words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled from [*]him, and were [d]sore afraid.

25 And the men of Israel said, Have ye seen this man that is come up? surely to defy Israel is he come up: and it shall be, that the man who killeth him, [e]the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his father's house [f]free in Israel. [8]

26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the [g]reproach from Israel? for who is this [h]uncircumcised Philistine, that he should [i]defy the armies of the living God?

27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, [k]So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 ¶ And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and [l]Eliab's anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and [m]with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? [n]I know thy pride, [9] and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle.

29 And David said, [o]What have I now done? Is there not a cause?

30 ¶ And he turned from him toward another, and spake after the same [†]manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul; and he [‡]sent for him.

32 ¶ And David said to Saul, [p]Let no largest. He was in length "six cubits and a span," ver. 4. The learned Bishop Cumberland has made it out that the Scripture-cubit was about twenty-one inches, (above three inches more than our half-yard,) and a span was half a-cubit, by which computation, Goliath wanted but eight inches of four yards in height, eleven feet and four inches. A monstrous stature, and which made him very formidable, especially if he had strength and spirit proportionable. 2. His armour; art, as well as nature made him terrible. He was well furnished with defensive armour, ver. 5, 6. "A helmet of brass on his head, a coat of mail," made of brass plates laid over one another, like the scales of a fish; and because his legs would lie most within the reach of an ordinary man, he wore brass boots, and a large corselet of brass about his neck. The coat is said to weigh five thousand shekels, and a shekel was half an ounce avoirdupois. A vast weight for a man to carry, all the other parts of his armour being proportionable. But some think it should be translated, not the weight of the coat, but the value of it was five thousand shekels; so much it cost. His offensive weapons were extraordinary, of which his spear only is here described, ver. 7. It was like a weaver's beam; his arm could manage that which an ordinary man could scarcely heave. His shield only, which was the lightest of all his accoutrements, was carried before him by his esquire, probably, for state; for he that was clad in brass, little needed a shield. 3. His challenge. The Philistines having chosen him for their champion, to save themselves from the hazard of a battle, he here throws down the gauntlet, and bids defiance to the armies of Israel, ver. 8—10. He came into the valley that lay between the camps, and his voice, probably, being as much stronger than other people's, as his arm was, he cried so as to make them all hear him, "Give me a man that we may fight together." He looks upon himself with admiration, because he was so much taller and stronger than all about him; his heart (says Bishop Hall) nothing but a lump of proud flesh. He looks upon Israel with disdain, because they had none among them of such a monstrous bulk, and defies them to find a man among them, bold enough to enter the lists with him. (1.) He upbraids them with their folly in drawing an army together, "'Why are ye come to set the battle in array?' How dare you oppose the mighty Philistines?" Or, "Why should the two armies engage, when the controversy may be sooner decided, with only the expense of one life, and the hazard of another?" (2.) He offers to put the war entirely upon the issue of the duel he proposes; "If your champion kill me, we will be your servants; if I kill him, you shall be ours." This (says Bishop Patrick) was only a bravado, for no nation would be willing thus to venture its all upon the success of one man, nor is it justifiable; notwithstanding Goliath's stipulation here, when he was killed, the Philistines did not stand to his word, nor submit themselves servants to Israel.

DAVID.—How very pious David was. His speech savours nothing of ostentation, but God is all in all in it, ver. 45—47. 1. He derives his authority from God. "'I come to thee,' by warrant and commission from heaven, 'in the name of the Lord,' who has called me to, and anointed me for, this undertaking; who, by his universal providence, is the 'Lord of hosts,' of all hosts; and therefore, has power to do what he pleases; and, by the special grace of his covenant, is 'the God of the armies of Israel,' and therefore has engaged, and will employ, his power for their protection, and against thee who hast impiously defied them." The "name of God" David relied on, as Goliath did on his sword and spear. See Ps. xx. 7, cxviii. 10, 11. 2. He depends for success upon God, ver. 46. David speaks with as much assurance as Goliath had done, but upon better ground: it is his faith that says, "'This day will the Lord deliver thee into my hand;' and not only thy carcass, but the carcasses of the hosts of the Philistines, shall be given to the birds and beasts of prey." 3. He devotes the praise and glory of all to God. He did not, like Goliath, seek his own honour, but the honour of God; not doubting but by the success of this action, (1.) All the world should be made to know that "there is a God," and that the "God of Israel" is the one only living and true God, and all other pretended deities are vanity and a lie. (2.) All Israel, (whom he calls not "this army," but "this assembly," or church, because they were now religiously attending the "goings of their God and King," as they used to "in the sanctuary,") all Israel "shall know that the Lord saveth not with sword and spear," ver. 47, but can when he pleases, save without either, and against both, Ps. xlvi. 9. David addresses himself to this combat rather as a priest that was going to offer a sacrifice to the justice of God, than as a soldier that was going to engage an enemy of his country.

DAVID'S VICTORY.—Goliath was in no haste, because in no fear, but confident that he should soon at one stroke cleave his adversary's head; but while he was preparing to do it solemnly, David did his business effectually, without any parade; he slang a stone which hit him in the forehead, and, in the twinkling of an eye, fetched him to the ground, ver. 49. He knew there were famous slingers in Israel, Judg. xx. 16, yet was either so forgetful or presumptuous, as to go with the beaver of his helmet open, and thither, to the only part left exposed, not so much David's art, as God's providence, directed the stone, and brought it with such force that it sunk into his head, notwithstanding the impudence with which his forehead was brazened. See how frail and uncertain life is, even then when it thinks itself best fortified, and how quickly, how easily, and with how small a matter, the passage may be opened for life to go out and death to enter. Goliath himself "has not power over the spirit to retain the spirit," Eccl. viii. 8. Let not the strong man glory in his strength, nor the armed man in his armour. See how God resists the man's heart fail because of him: [q]thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, [r]Thou art not able to go against this Philistine, to fight with him: [s]for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear,[10] and took [t]a lamb out of the flock:

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and [u]smote him, and slew him.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and [v]this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing [w]he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David said moreover, [x]The LORD that delivered me[11] out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, [y]Go, and the LORD be with thee.

38 ¶ And Saul [z]armed David with his armour, and he put an helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it.[12] And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David [a]put them off him.

40 And he took his [b]staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the *brook, and put them in a shepherd's †bag which he had, even in a scrip, and his sling was in his hand: and he drew near to the Philistine.

41 And the Philistine came on, and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked about, and saw David, [c]he disdained him: for he was but [d]a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

43 And the Philistine said unto David, [e]Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine [f]cursed David by his gods.

44 And the Philistine said to David, [g]Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then said David to the Philistine, [h]Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee [i]in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast [k]defied.

46 This day [l]will the LORD ‡deliver thee into mine hand; and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give the [m]carcases of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that [n]all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

47 And all this assembly shall know that the LORD [o]saveth not with sword and spear: for [p]the battle is the LORD's, and he will give you into our hands.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that [q]David hasted, and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and [r]smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; [s]but there was no sword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took [t]his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith.[13] And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they [u]fled.

52 ¶ And [x]the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines, until thou come to the [y]valley, and to the gates of Ekron. And the wounded of the Philistines fell down by the way to Shaaraim, even unto Gath, and unto Ekron.

53 And the children of Israel returned from chasing after the Philistines, and [z]they spoiled their tents.

54 ¶ And David [a]took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem; but he put his armour in his tent.[14]

55 ¶ And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said unto Abner, the captain of the host, Abner, [b]whose son is this youth? And Abner said, As thy soul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.

56 And the king said, Enquire thou whose son the stripling is.

57 And as David returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul, [c]with the head of the Philistine in his hand.

58 And Saul said to him, Whose son art thou, thou young man?[15] And David answered, [d]I am the son of thy servant Jesse, the Beth-lehemite.

[15] It may seem extraordinary that Saul should know nothing of David, who had so very lately attended on him at his court. It should be observed, however, that Saul does not ask who David himself is, for he and those about him perhaps sufficiently knew his person; but what Saul really asks is, Whose son is David? which he and Abner might well forget. If this be observed, all difficulty respecting the order of events in these two chapters ceases at once.—WELLS.

[d] 12; xvi. 18, 19.

proud, and pours contempt upon those that bid defiance to him and his people. None ever hardened his heart against God, and prospered. One of the rabbins thinks that when Goliath said to David, "Come, and I will give thy flesh to the fowls of the air," he drew up his head so hastily, that his helmet fell off, and so left his broad forehead a fair mark for David. To complete the execution, he drew Goliath's own sword, a two-handed weapon for David, and with it "cut off his head," ver. 51. What need had David to take a sword of his own? His enemy's sword shall serve his purpose, when he has occasion for one. God is greatly glorified, when his proud enemies are cut off with their own sword, and he makes "their own tongues to fall upon them," Ps. lxiv. 8. David's victory over Goliath was typical of the triumphs of the Son of David over Satan and all the powers of darkness, whom he "spoiled, and made a show of them openly," Col. ii. 15; and we, through him are "more than conquerors." 3. The defeat of the Philistines' army hereupon. They relied wholly upon the strength of their champion, and therefore, when they saw him slain, they did not, as Goliath had offered, throw down their arms, and surrender themselves servants to Israel, ver. 9, but took to flight, being wholly dispirited, and thinking it to no purpose to oppose one before whom such a mighty man was fallen: "they fled," ver. 51, and this put life into the Israelites; they "shouted and pursued them," ver. 52, (David, it is probable, leading them on in the pursuit,) even to the gates of their own cities. In their return from the chase, they seized all their baggage, plundered their tents, ver. 53, and enriched themselves with the spoil. 4. David's disposal of his trophies, ver. 54. He brought the head of the Philistine to Jerusalem, to be a terror to the Jebusites, who held the stronghold of Zion: it is probable that he carried it in triumph to other cities; "his armour he laid up in his tent;" only the sword was preserved behind the ephod in the tabernacle, as consecrated to God, and a memorial of the victory to his honour, chap. xxi. 9. 5. The notice that was taken of David. Though he had been at court formerly, yet, having been for some time absent, ver. 15, Saul had forgotten him, being melancholy and mindless, and little thinking that his musician should have spirit enough to be his champion; and therefore, as if he had never seen him before, he asked whose son he was. Abner was a stranger to him, but brought him to Saul himself, ver. 57, and he gave a modest account of himself, ver. 58. And now he was introduced to the court with much greater advantages than before; in which he owned God's hand performing all things for him.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Those who would serve God, must be endued with patience, meekness, and self-denial; and they must learn to bear neglect, contempt, and ingratitude; to be laborious, faithful, and obedient: to shun observation and ostentation; to walk by faith, and to wait the Lord's time for every promised or expected mercy; not putting themselves forward, till it be undeniably evident that there is a cause.—In times of general formality and lukewarmness, every degree of zeal which implies a readiness to go further, or venture more, in the cause of God, than others do, will be censured as pride and ambition; and by none more than near relations and negligent superiors: and such censures will seldom be unmingled with unjust insinuations, and attempts to blacken a man's character. But conscious integrity, and confidence in God, united with meekness, wisdom, and perseverance, will carry the believer through, and raise him above, such discouraging opposition: and they who would do good, should not multiply words in defence of their own characters; but avoid whatever may needlessly exasperate, prolong contention, or foment envy; and be satisfied with appealing to the consciences and common sense of impartial persons, that time and circumstances require their exertions.—The hope of being an instrument of good, and of being accepted by the Lord, will animate the faithful servant of God in every undertaking; and the expectation of a reward from man, or the fear of human censure, will be with him a very inferior consideration. If we improve our experience of the Lord's faithfulness, love, and power, in former seasons of danger and difficulty, it will inspire confidence in the prospect of future conflicts; and on some occasions it may be referred to for the satisfaction of others: and to be engaged against the acknowledged enemies of God and his church, in all cases is a proper ground of encouragement. In the service of our common Lord we are not all qualified to handle the same weapons, or to fill up the same stations: none should therefore be set up in all things as models, nor ought any of us indiscriminately to imitate the most approved characters.—Rules and methods which are useful and natural to one man, may prove encumbrances to another: and we do best, when we cultivate our own peculiar talent, taking hints from every body, and not attempting exact conformity to any. But faith and prayer, and truth and righteousness, "the whole armour of God," and "the mind which was in Christ," are equally needful for all his servants.—The curses of wicked men are no more to be feared, than their power; as they will at length rebound upon themselves, and their proud self-confidence will surely be confounded. But they who trust in the Lord, and simply seek his glory, shall never be ashamed: in their hands the feeblest means shall be successful, and before them the most formidable opposition shall come to nothing. The event of every conflict of the church of God against her enemies, will undeniably evince, "that the LORD saveth not with sword and spear; for the battle is the LORD's, and he will give it into our hands;" and this shall tend to make known his glory throughout the earth.—Human favour is of small value, for men soon forget those who have been most useful to them; and they alone are happy who enjoy the favour of him, who never forgets or forsakes

A. M. 2944.—B. C. 1060.

AND it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that [a]the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul[1] of David, and Jonathan [b]loved him as his own soul.

2 And Saul [c]took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his father's house.

3 Then Jonathan and David [d]made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul.

4 And Jonathan [e]stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

5 ¶ And David went out whithersoever Saul sent him, and [*]behaved himself [f]wisely: and Saul set him over [g]the men of war, and he was accepted in the sight of all the people, and also in the sight of Saul's servants.

6 ¶ And it came to pass as they came, when David was returned from the slaughter of the [†]Philistine, that [h]the women came out of all the cities of Israel, singing and dancing,[2] to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with [‡]instruments of musick.

7 And the women [i]answered one another as they played, and said, [k]Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and [l]the saying [§]displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: [m]and what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul [n]eyed David from that day and forward.

10 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that [o]the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he [p]prophesied[3] in the midst of the house; and David [q]played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

11 And Saul [r]cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. [s]And David avoided out of his presence twice.

12 ¶ And Saul was [t]afraid of David, because [u]the LORD was with him, and was [v]departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul [x]removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thousand; and [y]he went out and came in before the people.[4]

14 And David [l]behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and [z]the LORD was with him.

15 Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved himself very [a]wisely, he was afraid of him.

16 But [b]all Israel and Judah loved David, because he went out and came in before them.

17 ¶ And Saul said to David, Behold my elder daughter Merab, [c]her will I give thee to wife: only be thou [*]valiant for me, and fight [d]the LORD's battles. For Saul said, [e]Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.

18 And David said unto Saul, [f]Who am I? and what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son-in-law to the king?

19 But it came to pass at the time when Merab Saul's daughter should have been given to David, that she was given unto [g]Adriel the [h]Meholathite to wife.

20 ¶ And Michal Saul's daughter [i]loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing [†]pleased him.

21 And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be [k]a snare to him, and that [l]the hand of the Philistines may be against him. Wherefore Saul said to David, Thou shalt [m]this day be my son-in-law in the one of the twain.[5]

22 ¶ And Saul [n]commanded his [o]servants, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore be the king's son-in-law.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I am [p]a poor man, and lightly esteemed?

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, [‡]On this manner spake David.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any [q]dowry, but an hundred [r]foreskins[6] of the Philistines, [s]to be avenged of the king's enemies. But Saul [t]thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law: and [u]the days were not [§]expired.

27 Wherefore David arose and went, he and [v]his men, and [x]slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 ¶ And Saul [y]saw and knew that the LORD was with David, and that Michal Saul's daughter loved him.

29 And Saul was [z]yet the more afraid of David; and [a]Saul became David's enemy continually.

30 Then the princes of the Philistines [b]went forth: and it came to pass, after they went forth, that David [c]behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; so that his name was much [l]set by.

the meanest of his true people.—Finally, in David's victory over the champion of the Philistines, we may see a faint shadow of the Redeemer's victory over Satan, who for ages had defied the armies of the living God, and from the fall of Adam to the coming of Christ, found no one able in his own strength to stand against him: but Jesus overcame him on his own ground, and foiled him with his own weapons, and still goes on by his despised gospel to pursue the victory; while all the hosts of the true Israel join in his conquests, and share the benefits; and they shall ere long meet in heaven, to celebrate his triumphs with everlasting songs of praise.—Scott.

CHAP. XVIII. JONATHAN'S LOVE TO DAVID.—Ver. 1. The modesty, piety, and faith of David were so congenial to the character of Jonathan, that they attracted his cordial esteem and affection; so that the most endeared friendship subsisted between them from that time without the least interruption, notwithstanding Saul's envy and malice; and though Jonathan knew that David was anointed to be king, and that he himself was excluded. This disinterested friendship was the effect of that grace of God, which produces in all true believers "one heart and soul," and causes them to delight in each other's converse and comfort; yet similarity of disposition, and the coincidence of the extraordinary services, which, in the courage of faith they had performed, served to render their reciprocal affection peculiarly fervent and intimate.

SAUL'S JEALOUSY.—Ver. 6—9. After the death of Goliath, and the consequent rout of the Philistines, Saul, and David with him went to several of the cities of Israel. "I suppose Saul and the whole court thought fit to honour David, by accompanying him to Jerusalem when he carried Goliath's head thither."—[Bp. Patrick.] In all places, however, to which they came, the women, according to the custom of the times, went forth to meet them with instruments of music, and singing an ode composed on the occasion. In this no injustice was done, or affront offered, to Saul, yet the language employed might have given umbrage to a mind less propense to envy and suspicion than that of Saul. Accordingly, he was greatly displeased; and, perceiving how David increased in popularity, he concluded that God was about "to rend the kingdom from him, and to give it to a neighbour of his, who was better than he," chap. xv. 28. Perhaps he was also informed that Samuel had anointed David, and favoured his interest; so that he began to look upon him with a jealous and malignant eye.—Scott.

SAUL AN ASSASSIN IN PURPOSE.—Ver. 10, 11. He took this opportunity to endeavour the death of David. A sword in a madman's hand is a dangerous thing, especially such a madman as Saul was, that was mad with malice. Yet he had a javelin or dart in his hand, with which he projected and endeavoured to slay David; not in a sudden passion, but deliberately: "I will smite David to the wall with it;" with such a desperate force did he throw it. Justly does David complain of his enemies, that they hated him with "a cruel hatred," Ps. xxv. 19. No life is thought too precious to be sacrificed to malice. If a grateful sense of the great service David had done to the public could not assuage Saul's fury, yet one would think he should have allowed himself to consider the kindness he was now doing to himself, relieving him, so as no one else could, against the worst of troubles. Those are possessed with a devilish spirit indeed, that render evil for good. Compare David, with his harp in his hand, aiming to serve Saul, and Saul, with his javelin in his hand, aiming to slay David; and observe the sweetness and usefulness of God's persecuted people, and the brutishness and barbarity of their persecutors. "The blood-thirsty hate the upright, but the just seek his soul," Prov. xxix. 10. David happily avoided the blow twice, namely, now, and afterwards, chap. xix. 10. He did not throw the javelin at Saul again; he withdrew, not fighting, but flying, for his own preservation.

DAVID—THE KING'S SON-IN-LAW.—When it was proposed to him to be son-in-law to the king, he once and again received the proposal with all possible modesty and humility. When Saul proposed his eldest daughter to him, ver. 18, he said, "Who am I, and what is my life?" When the courtiers proposed the younger, he took no notice of the affront Saul had given him in disposing of the elder from him, but continued in the same mind, ver. 23, "Seemeth it a light thing to you to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I am a poor man and lightly esteemed?" He knew Michal loved him, and yet did not offer to improve his interest in her affections, for the gaining of her without her father's consent, but waited till it was proposed to him. And then see, 1. How highly he speaks of the honour offered him, "To be son-in-law to the king!" Though the king was but an upstart, in his original as mean as himself, in his management no better than he should be, yet, being a crowned head, he speaks of him and the royal family with all due respect. Note, Religion is so far from teaching us, that it does not allow us to be rude and unmannerly. We must "render honour to whom honour is due." 2. How humbly he speaks of himself. "Who am I?" This did not proceed from a mean, abject, sneaking spirit, for when there was occasion, he made it appear that he had as high a sense of honour as most men; nor was it from his jealousy of Saul, (though he had reason enough to fear a snake under the green grass,) but from his true and deep humility. "Who am I? A poor man, and lightly esteemed!" David had as much reason as any man to value himself. He was of an ancient and honourable family of Judah, a comely person, a great statesman and soldier; his achievements were great, for he had won Goliath's head and Michal's heart: he knew himself destined by the divine counsels to the throne of Israel, and yet, "Who am I, and what is my life?"

CHAP. XIX.

Jonathan discloseth his father's purpose to kill David, 1; he persuadeth his father to reconciliation, 4. Saul's malicious rage breaketh out again, 8. Michal's stratagem to save David, 12.

AND [a]Saul spake to Jonathan his son,[1] and to all his servants, that they should kill David.

2 But Jonathan Saul's son [b]delighted much in David: and [c]Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself:

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and [d]what I see, that I will tell thee.

4 ¶ And Jonathan [e]spake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king [f]sin against his servant, against David;[2] because he hath not sinned against thee, and [g]because his works have been to thee-ward very good:

5 For he did [h]put his life in his hand, and [i]slew the Philistine, and the LORD [k]wrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice: wherefore then wilt thou [l]sin against innocent blood, to slay David [m]without a cause?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul [n]sware, As the LORD liveth, [o]he shall not be slain.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan shewed him all those things: and Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence [p]as *[4]in times past.

8 ¶ And there was war again: and [q]David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter; and they fled from [t]him.

9 And [r]the evil spirit from the LORD was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand: and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul [s]sought to smite David even to the wall with the javelin; but [t]he slipped away out of Saul's presence, and he smote the javelin into the wall: and David fled, and escaped that night.

11 ¶ Saul also [u]sent messengers unto David's house, [v]to watch him, and to slay him in the morning:[3] and Michal David's wife told him, saying, If thou save not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain.

12 ¶ So Michal [x]let David down through a window: and he went, and fled, and escaped.

13 And Michal took [z]an image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster, and covered it with a cloth.

14 And when Saul sent messengers to take David, [y]she said, He is sick.

15 And Saul sent the messengers again to see David, saying, [z]Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may slay him.

16 And when the messengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster.

17 And Saul said unto Michal, [a]Why hast thou deceived me so, and sent away [b]mine enemy, that he is escaped? And Michal answered Saul, [c]He said unto me, Let me go; [d]why should I kill thee?

18 ¶ So David fled, and escaped, and came [e]to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

19 And [f]it was told Saul, saying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

20 And Saul [g]sent messengers to take David: and[h] when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, and Samuel standing as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also prophesied.

21 And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise: and Saul [i]sent messengers again the third time, and they [k]prophesied also.

22 Then went he also to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu: and he asked, and said, Where are Samuel and David? And one said, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

23 ¶ And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and [l]the Spirit of God was upon him also, and he went on, and prophesied,[4] [m]until he came to Naioth in Ramah:

24 And he [n]stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and [$]lay down naked[5] all that day, and all that night. Wherefore they say, [o]Is Saul also among the prophets?

CHAP. XX.

David consulteth with Jonathan for his safety, 1; their covenant renewed by oath, 11. Saul, missing David, seeketh to kill Jonathan, 24.

AND David fled [a]from Naioth in Ramah, and came and said before Jonathan, [b]What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my sin before thy father, that he seeketh my life?

2 And he said unto him, [c]God forbid; thou shalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing, either great or small, but that he will [*]shew it me: and why should my father hide this thing from me? It is not so.

Note, It well becomes us, however God has advanced us, always to have low thoughts of ourselves. "He that humbleth himself, shall be exalted." And if David thus magnified the honour of being son-in-law to the king, how should we magnify the honour of being sons (not in law, but in gospel) to the King of kings! "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us!" Who are we, that we should be thus dignified! When the slaying of an hundred Philistines was made the condition of David's marrying Saul's daughter, he readily closed with it, ver. 26. "It pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law" upon those terms; and before the time given him for the action was expired, he doubled the demand, and slew two hundred, ver. 27.—Henry.

CHAP. XIX. JONATHAN'S PRUDENCE.—Jonathan took pains to pacify his father and reconcile him to David. The next morning he ventured to commune with him concerning David, ver. 3; not that night, either because he observed Saul to be drunk, and not fit to be spoken to, or because he hoped that, when he had slept upon it, he would himself revoke the order, or because he could not have an opportunity of speaking to him till morning. His intercession for David was, 1. Very prudent. It was managed with a great deal of the meekness of wisdom; and he showed himself faithful to his friend by speaking good of him, though he was in danger of incurring his father's displeasure by it. A rare instance of valuable friendship! He pleads, (1.) The good services David had done to the public, and particularly to Saul; "His work has been to thee-ward very good," ver. 4. Witness the relief he had given him against his distemper with his harp; and his bold encounter with Goliath, that memorable action, which did, in effect, save Saul's life and kingdom: he appeals to himself concerning that, "Thou thyself sawest it, and didst rejoice." In that, and other instances, it appeared that David was a favourite of Heaven and a friend to Israel, as well as a good servant to Saul, for by him "the Lord wrought a great salvation for all Israel;" so that to order him to be slain, was not only base ingratitude to so good a servant, but a great affront to God, and a great injury to the public. (2.) He pleads his innocency: though he had formerly done many good offices, yet if he had now been chargeable with any crimes, it had been another matter, but "he has not sinned against thee," ver. 4; his "blood is innocent," ver. 5, and if he be slain, it is without cause. And Jonathan had therefore reason to protest against it, because he could not entail any thing upon his family more pernicious than the guilt of innocent blood. 2. His intercession, being thus prudent, was prevalent. God inclined the heart of Saul to hearken to the voice of Jonathan. Note, We must be willing to hear reason, and to take all reproof and good advice even from our inferiors; parents from their own children. How forcible are right words!—Henry.

DAVID'S WIFE.—Ver. 12—17. Michal's fidelity to her husband was commendable: nay, if the cause had been more doubtful, it would have been her duty to unite with him, while no harm was intended Saul, and David merely aimed to preserve his life. Her stratagem also to gain time, was allowable: but her direct falsehood in excusing herself to Saul, had not even the excuse of necessity; and it was very injurious to David's reputation. The whole account illustrates the savage cruelty of Saul, who, it seems, could not be satisfied with the death of his faithful servant, unless he had the satisfaction of slaying him with his own hands: and it shows likewise the extreme danger to which David's life was exposed.—Scott.

SAUL AGAIN AMONG THE PROPHETS.—See the benefit of religious societies, and what good impressions may be made by them on minds that seemed unapt to receive such impressions. And where may the influence of the Spirit be expected, but in the congregation of the saints? He magnified his power over the spirits of men. He that made the heart and tongue, can manage both to serve his own purposes. Balaam prophesied of the happiness of Israel, whom he would have cursed; and some of the Jewish writers think these messengers prophesied of the advancement of David to the throne of Israel. Saul himself was seized with the spirit of prophecy, before he came to the place. One would have thought that so bad a man as he had been in no danger of being turned into a prophet; yet, when God will take this way of protecting David, even Saul is no sooner come (as Bishop Hall expresses it) within smell of the smoke of Naioth, but he prophesies, as his messengers did, ver. 23. He stripped off his royal robe and warlike habiliments, because they were either too fine, or too heavy, for this service, and fell into a trance, as it should seem, or into a rapture, which continued all that day and night. The saints at Damascus were delivered from the rage of the New Testament Saul, by a change wrought on his spirit, but of another nature from this. This was only amazing, but that sanctifying. This for a day, that for ever. Note, Many have great gifts, and yet no grace; prophesy in Christ's name, and yet are disowned by him, Matth. vii. 22. Now the proverb recurs, "Is Saul among the prophets?" See chap. x. 12. Then it was different from what it had been, but now contrary. He is rejected of God, and actuated by an evil spirit, and yet "among the prophets."—Henry.

CHAP. XX. INTERCOURSE OF JONATHAN AND DAVID.—Ver. 1, 2. While Saul was detained at Naioth, David hastily repaired to Jonathan, to confer with him on the state of his affairs: but Jonathan was disposed to attribute his father's attempts against David to distemper, or to sudden sallies of passion, rather than to a fixed purpose of murdering him. After Saul had sworn not to slay David, it may be supposed he had said no more

3 And David [d]sware moreover, and said, Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he saith, Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved: but truly, [e]as the LORD liveth, and [f]as thy soul liveth, there is [g]but a step between me and death.

4 Then said Jonathan unto David, [†]Whatsoever thy soul [‡]desireth, I will even do it for thee.

5 And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the [h]new moon,[1] and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat: but let me go, [i]that I may hide myself in the field unto the third day at even.

6 If thy father at all miss me, then say, David earnestly asked leave of me that he might run to [k]Beth-lehem his city: for there is a yearly [§]sacrifice there for all the family.

7 If he say thus, [‖]It is well; thy servant shall have peace: but if he be [m]very wroth, then be sure that [n]evil is determined by him.

8 Therefore thou shalt [o]deal kindly with thy servant; for [p]thou hast brought thy servant into a covenant of the LORD with thee:[2] notwithstanding, [q]if there be in me iniquity, slay me thyself; for [r]why shouldest thou bring me to thy father?

9 And Jonathan said, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, [s]then would not I tell it thee?

10 Then said David to Jonathan, Who shall tell me? or what if thy father [t]answer thee roughly?

11 ¶ And Jonathan said unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan said unto David, [u]O LORD God of Israel, when I have [‖]sounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be good toward David, and I then send not unto thee, and [*]shew it thee;

13 [v]The LORD do so and much more to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will shew it thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace: and [x]the LORD be with thee, as [y]he hath been with my father.

14 And thou shalt not only while yet I live shew me [z]the kindness of the LORD,[3] that I die not:

15 But also [a]thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever: no, not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan [†]made a covenant with the house of David, saying, [b]Let the LORD even require it at the hand of David's enemies.

17 And Jonathan caused David to swear again, [‡]because he loved him: [c]for he loved him as he loved his own soul.

18 ¶ Then Jonathan said to David, To-morrow is the [d]new moon: and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be [§]empty.

19 And when thou hast stayed three days, then thou shalt go down [‖]quickly, and come to the place where thou didst [e]hide thyself [*]when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone [†]Ezel.

20 And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof,[4] as though I shot at a mark.

21 And, behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and [‡]no hurt; as [f]the LORD liveth.

22 But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the LORD hath sent thee away.

23 And as touching [g]the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold, [h]the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

24 ¶ So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the [i]king sat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king sat upon his seat, [j]as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall: and Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place was empty.

26 Nevertheless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, [k]he is not clean; surely he is not clean.[5]

27 And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day[6] of the month, that David's place was empty: and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, [l]Wherefore cometh not [m]the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday, nor to-day?

28 And Jonathan [n]answered Saul, David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Bethlehem:

29 And he said, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and [o]my brother, he hath commanded me to be there: and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren. Therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

30 Then [p]Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, [‡]Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman,[7] do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?

31 For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom: wherefore now [q]send to Jonathan on that subject, though he confided all his other affairs to him; and therefore Jonathan could scarcely believe that he harboured such base designs: and perhaps he had not heard of Saul's late violent attempt against David. Ver. 3. David solemnly called God to witness, that in criminating Saul, he did not go upon doubtful surmises; and that it was as certain in itself as that "the LORD lived," and to him, as Jonathan could be of his own existence, that a design was formed against his life; which constrained him to renounce the service of Saul, and consult his own safety. Ver. 5—7. David suggested this expedient, to convince Jonathan of Saul's intentions, and to show that he was forced into the measures which he afterwards adopted. Saul still regarded the externals of religion, and at the new moons entertained his family and chief officers at a feast upon a sacrifice. Hitherto David had filled his place there; but on this occasion he purposed to be absent, to make trial of Saul: for, as he was evidently destitute of affection for him, if he were very angry, it must arise from his being deprived of an opportunity to do him mischief. It may be supposed that David was invited to an annual family-sacrifice at Bethlehem: the excuse was sufficient; Saul being out of the way, Jonathan was competent to allow David's absence, and he engaged to return on the third day before even, to learn the result. In the meanwhile he purposed to conceal him in the fields about Bethlehem. Ver. 8. At Jonathan's instance, he and David had entered into a covenant in the name of JEHOVAH, being ratified by a solemn appeal to him, for their mutual encouragement in worshipping him and promoting his glory. David seems to have had some jealousy, lest Jonathan should warp from his constancy; especially lest the envenomed tongue of slander should injure him in his friend's esteem. "If," says he, "I am guilty of any great offence which violates our covenant, such as treason against Saul, slay me thyself, but betray me not to thy father." This was finely conceived, to touch the tenderest feelings of Jonathan's heart. Ver. 12, 13. In speaking to David, Jonathan appealed to God for his sincerity, and called on him to avenge his perfidy, if he betrayed his friend. Jonathan knew that Samuel had anointed David, and believed that he would certainly be king: and he had no thoughts of opposing the purpose of God, but rejoiced that so pious and able a person was chosen to reign over Israel; and prayed that the Lord might be with him, as he had been with Saul. For, as it became a dutiful son, he drew a veil over his father's misconduct, and only adverted to his former good management and success. Ver. 14—17. The original may be rendered, "Wilt thou not, if I be then alive; (namely, when David should mount the throne;) "wilt thou not show the kindness of the LORD, that I die not? But also, thou wilt not," &c.—It has been too common in disputed successions, for the reigning prince to clear the title of his own family, by cutting off all competitors: Jonathan therefore prudently proposed to extend the personal covenant, before made with David, to their posterity also. He readily renounced all pretensions to the kingdom; and only desired, that he and his descendants might be numbered among the friends of David and his family, when all his enemies had been destroyed.—When we consider David's distress, Saul's enmity, and Jonathan's prospects, we can never sufficiently admire the strength of his faith, and the force of his disinterested love! It is observable that Jonathan did not desire that the Lord should require it of David or his posterity, if any failure took place, but "at the hand of David's enemies."—Scott.

THEIR DEVICE.—Jonathan settles the method of intelligence, and by what signs and tokens he would give him notice how his father stood affected toward him. He would be missed the first day, or at least the second day, of the new moon, and would be inquired after, ver. 18. On the third day, by which time he would be returned from Bethlehem, he must be at such a place, ver. 19, and Jonathan would come toward that place with his bow and arrows to shoot for diversion, ver. 20; would send his lad to fetch his arrows, and if they were shot short of the lad, David must take it for a signal of safety, and not be afraid to show his head, ver. 21; but if he shot beyond the lad, it was a signal of danger, and he must shift for his safety, ver. 22. This expedient he fixed upon, lest he should not have the opportunity, which yet it proved he had, of talking with him, and making the report by word of mouth.

RAGE OF SAUL.—Saul breaks out into a most extravagant passion, and rages like a lion disappointed of his prey. David was out of his reach, but he falls foul upon Jonathan for his sake, ver. 30, 31; gave him base language, not fit for a gentleman, a prince, to give to any man, especially his own son, heir apparent to his crown, a son that served him, the greatest stay and ornament of his family, before a deal of company, at a feast, when all should be in good humour, at a sacred feast, by which all irregular passions should be mortified and subdued; yet he does in effect call him, 1. A bastard: "Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman:" that is, according to the foolish and filthy language of men's brutish passion now-a-day, Thou son of a whore. He tells him he was born "to the confusion of his mother;" that is, he had given the world cause to suspect that he was not the legitimate son of Saul, because he loved him whom Saul hated, and supported him who would be the destruction of their family. 2. A traitor; "Thou son of perverse rebellion," so the word is; that is, "Thou perverse rebel." At other times, he reckoned no counsellor or commander that he had more trusty and well-beloved than Jonathan; yet now, in his passion, he represents him as dangerous to his crown and life. 3. A fool: "Thou hast chosen the son of Jesse" for thy friend "to thine own confusion," for while he lives, "thou shalt never be established."

32 And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, [r]Wherefore shall he be slain? [s]what hath he done?

33 And Saul [t]cast a javelin at him[8] to smite him: [u]whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David.

34 So Jonathan arose from the table [v]in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the second day of the month: for [x]he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

35 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field [y]at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he said unto his lad, [z]Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow *beyond him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, [a]Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

39 But the lad knew not anything: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

40 And Jonathan gave his †artillery[9] unto ‡his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city.

41 ¶ And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the south, [b]and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times: [c]and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until [d]David exceeded.

42 And Jonathan said to David, [e]Go in peace, §forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the LORD, saying, The LORD be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever. [f]And he arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

THEN came David to [a]Nob to [b]Ahimelech[1] the priest: and Ahimelech was [c]afraid at the meeting of David, and said unto him, Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?

2 And David said unto Ahimelech the priest, [d]The king hath commanded me a business, and hath said unto me, Let no man know any thing of the business whereabout I send thee, and what I have commanded thee: and I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.

3 Now therefore what is *under thine hand? give me five loaves of bread in mine hand, or what there is *present.

4 And the priest answered David, and said, There is no common bread[2] under mine hand, but there is [f]hallowed bread; [g]if the young men have kept themselves at least from women.

5 And David answered the priest, and said unto him, Of a truth women have been kept from us about these three days, since I came out, and [h]the vessels of the young men are holy, and the bread is [i]in a manner common, [†]yea, though it were sanctified this day in the vessel.

6 So the priest [k]gave him hallowed bread: for there was no bread there but the shewbread, that was taken from before the LORD, to put [l]hot bread in the day when it was taken away.

7 Now a certain man of the servants of Saul was there that day, [m]detained before the LORD; and his name was [n]Doeg, an Edomite, the chiefest of [o]the herdmen that belonged to Saul.

8 ¶ And David said unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thine hand spear or sword? for I have neither brought my sword nor my weapons with me, because the king's business required haste.

9 And the priest said, [p]The sword of Goliath[3] the Philistine, whom thou slewest in [q]the valley of Elah, behold, it is here wrapped in a cloth [r]behind the ephod: if thou wilt take that, take it: for there is no other save that here. And David said, There is none like that; give it me.

10 ¶ And David arose, and [s]fled that day for fear of Saul, and went [t]to ‡Achish the king of Gath.

11 And [u]the servants of Achish said unto him, Is not this David [v]the king of the land? did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

12 And David [x]laid up these words in his heart, and was [y]sore afraid of Achish the king of Gath.

13 And he [z]changed his behaviour[4] before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands, and [§]scrabbled on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard.

14 Then said Achish unto his servants, Lo, ye see the man [‖]is mad: wherefore then have ye brought him to me?

15 Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow to play the madman in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?

Jonathan indeed did wisely and well for himself and family to secure an interest in David, whom Heaven had destined to the throne; yet, for this, he is branded as most impolitic. It is good taking God's people for our people, and going with those that have him with them; it will prove to our advantage at last, however for the present it may be thought a disparagement, and a prejudice to our secular interest. It is probable Saul knew that David was anointed to the kingdom, by the same hand that anointed him. and then, not Jonathan, but himself, was the fool, to think to defeat the counsels of God. Yet nothing will serve him but David must die, and Jonathan must fetch him to execution. See how ill Saul's passion looks, and let it warn us against the indulgence of any thing like it in ourselves. Anger is madness, "and he that hates his brother, is a murderer."

PARTING OF THE TWO FRIENDS.—Let us look at the most sorrowful parting of these two friends, who, for aught that appears, never came together again but once, and that was by stealth "in a wood," chap. xxiii. 16. 1. David addressed himself to Jonathan with the reverence of a servant rather than the freedom of a friend; he "fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times," as one deeply sensible of his obligations to him for the good services he had done him. 2. They took leave of each other with the greatest affection imaginable, with kisses and tears; they wept on each other's necks; "till David exceeded," ver. 41. The separation of two such faithful friends was equally grievous to them both, but David's case was the more deplorable; for when Jonathan was returning to his family and friends, David was leaving all his comforts, even those of God's sanctuary, and therefore his grief exceeded Jonathan's; or, perhaps, it was because his temper was more tender, and his passions stronger. 3. They referred themselves to the covenant of friendship that was between them, both of them comforting themselves with that in this mournful separation. "We have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord," for ourselves and our heirs, that we and they will be faithful and kind to each other from generation to generation." Thus while we are at home in the body and absent from the Lord, this is our comfort, that he has "made with us an everlasting covenant."—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. STRAITS OF DAVID.—Ver. 3—6. It seems wonderful that David should not be able to procure bread for himself and his few attendants! but when Saul's rooted malice was made known, every one would be afraid or indisposed to entertain him. The necessity, however, was real and urgent, and Ahimelech supposed that in such a case they might eat the show-bread, provided they were prepared in the same manner as the Israelites had been for receiving the law from mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 15, David having therefore satisfied him in this respect, and assured him that the young men were ceremonially clean, as well as holy in their general character, (as the words seem to imply;) and having pleaded that the bread was now in a manner common, as other loaves had been placed upon the table in their stead; he gave them some of it, and they did eat.—Jesus Christ, in vindicating his disciples from the charge of breaking the Sabbath, has also vindicated David in this matter: which proves that the positive institutions of religion may be dispensed with, when the preservation of life, or any other urgent necessity, requires it. "It is a small thing to say, it is lawful for us to eat the bread removed from the table: it would be lawful for us, in this extreme hunger, even to eat the bread now sanctified on the table, if there were no other."—[Kimchi in Whitby.]

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When in earthly courts a favourite falls, in general it is very rapidly; for out of fickleness, envy, malice, ambition, or fear, almost every one deserts or opposes him; disregarding the most unsullied reputation, eminent services, or personal obligations. It is therefore "better to trust in the LORD, than to put any confidence in princes." "Oppression maketh even a wise man mad;" and few conduct themselves in extreme difficulties without taking some manifestly false step: we should therefore "watch and pray, that we may not enter into temptation;" and especially seek that strength of faith in God, which may overcome the fear of man.—Ingenious falsehoods often promise present security; but they insure future disgrace and disquietude: and no impositions are more foolish and prejudicial than those which some men practise, in seeking counsel and comfort from the ministers of Christ.—Urgent necessity will justify us in neglecting the rituals of religion: but we ought always to attend on holy things, in holiness of body and soul, and with a mind as abstracted from all earthly objects as possible.—The true believer is glad to go to the courts of the Lord, is reluctant to quit them, and mourns when confined from them: but the time-serving hypocrite is dragged to, and detained in, God's service, from secular motives, and is often forming schemes of wickedness when he seems to be worshipping. What wonder, then, that "his sacrifice is an abomination to the LORD?"—The remembrance of former mercies not only revives gratitude, but inspires fresh confidence and courage: and the word of God is that "sword of the Spirit," concerning which, in all temptations and conflicts, we may well say, "There is none like it."—In this world we must pass from one danger to another, and often meet with terror where we seek security; and those very honours of which men are ambitious, expose them to manifold disadvantages and perils: nor can we expect our situation to be better, while the best of characters are so inconsistent and defective. But we may "trust the LORD at all times;" he will

CHAP. XXII.

Men resort to David at Adullam, 1. Doeg accuseth Ahimelech, 9. Saul commandeth to kill the priests, 11. Abiathar escapeth to David, 20.

DAVID [a]therefore departed thence, and escaped to [b]the cave Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

2 And every one that was [c]in distress, and every one that was [*]in debt, and every one that was [†]discontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became [d]a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 ¶ And David went thence to [e]Mizpeh of Moab: and he said unto [f]the king of Moab,[1] [g]Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, [h]till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was [i]in the hold.

5 ¶ And the prophet [j]Gad said unto David, Abide not in the hold;[2] [k]depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David departed, and came into the forest of Hareth.

6 ¶ When Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that were with him, (now Saul abode in Gibeah under a [‡]tree in Ramah, having his [l]spear in his hand, and all his servants were standing about him;)

7 Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites; will [m]the son of Jesse [n]give every one of you fields and vineyards,[3] and make you all [o]captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds;

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is none that [§]sheweth me [p]that my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, or sheweth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

9 ¶ Then answered [q]Doeg the Edomite, which was set over the servants of Saul, and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to Ahimelech the son of Ahitub.

10 And [r]he enquired of the LORD for him, and [s]gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine.

11 ¶ Then the king [t]sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, [u]thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, [l]Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said unto him, [v]Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast enquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, And [x]who is so faithful among all thy servants as David, which is [y]the king's son-in-law, and [z]goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thine house?

15 Did I then begin to enquire of God for him? be it far from me:[4] let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father: [a]for thy servant knew nothing of all this, [*]less or more.

16 And the king said, [b]Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, [c]thou, and all thy father's house.

17 ¶ And the king said unto the [†]footmen that stood about him, Turn, and [d]slay the priests of the LORD; because their hand also is with David, and because they knew when he fled, and did not shew it to me. But the servants of the king [e]would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the LORD.

18 And the king said to Doeg, Turn thou, and fall upon the priests. And [f]Doeg the Edomite turned, and [g]he fell upon the priests, and slew on that day [h]fourscore and five persons that did wear [i]a linen ephod.

19 And [j]Nob,[5] the city of the priests, smote he with the edge of the sword; both [k]men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

20 ¶ And [l]one of the sons of Ahimelech the son of Ahitub, named Abiathar, [m]escaped,[6] and fled after David.

21 And Abiathar shewed David that Saul had slain the LORD's priests.

22 And David said unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would surely tell Saul: [n]I have occasioned the death of all the persons of thy father's house.

23 Abide thou with me, fear not: for [o]he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life: [p]but with me thou shalt be in safeguard.

CHAP. XXIII.

David, inquiring of the Lord, rescueth Keilah, 1. God sheweth him Saul's coming, and the treachery of the Keilites, 7; he escapeth from Keilah, 13, to Zeph, 14, to Maon, 25.

THEN they told David, saying, Behold, the Philistines fight against [a]Keilah,[1] and they [b]rob the threshing-floors.[2]

2 Therefore David [c]enquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go and smite these Philistines? And the LORD said unto David, Go, and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah.

supply our wants, and never forsake us, notwithstanding our lamented infirmities: he will not leave the lives of his people in the hands of their enemies, nor their souls in disconsolation: and the more simply we depend on him and obey him, the more comfortably and surely we shall walk through this troublesome world, to that "rest which is reserved for the people of God."—Scott.

CHAP. XXII. ADULLAM.—Here David began to raise forces in his own defence, ver. 2. He found by the late experiments he had made, that he could not save himself by flight, and therefore was necessitated to do it by force; wherein he never acted offensively, never offered any violence to his prince, nor gave any disturbance to the peace of the kingdom, but only used his forces as a guard to his own person. But whatever defence his soldiers were to him, they did him no great credit, for the regiment he had was made up not of great men, or rich men, or stout men, no nor good men, but men "in distress, in debt, and discontented," men of broken fortunes and restless spirits, that were put to their shifts, and knew not well what to do with themselves. When David had fixed his head quarters in the cave of Adullam, they came and enlisted themselves under him to the number of about four hundred. See what weak instruments God sometimes makes use of by which to bring about his own purposes. The Son of David is ready to receive distressed souls, that will appoint him their Captain, and be commanded by him. He took care to settle his parents in a place of safety; no such place could he find in all the land of Israel, while Saul was so bitterly enraged against him, and all that belonged to him for his sake; he therefore goes with them to the king of Moab, and puts them under his protection, ver. 3, 4.

DOEG INFORMER AND EXECUTIONER.—The most bloody tyrants soon find out instruments of their cruelty as barbarous as themselves; Doeg is no sooner commanded to fall upon the priests, than he does it willingly enough, and, meeting with no resistance, slays with his own hand (for aught that appears) on that same day eighty-five priests that were of the age of ministration, between twenty and fifty, for they "wore a linen ephod," ver. 18, and perhaps appeared at this time before Saul in their habits, and were slain in them. This (one would think) was enough to satiate the most bloodthirsty; but the horseleech of persecution still cries "Give, give." Doeg, by Saul's orders no doubt, having murdered the priests, went to their city Nob, and put all to the sword there, ver. 10, "men, women, and children," and the cattle too. Barbarous cruelty, and such as one cannot think of without horror! Strange, that ever it should enter into the heart of man to be so impious, so inhuman! we may see in this, 1. The desperate wickedness of Saul when the Spirit of the Lord was departed from. Nothing so vile, but they may be hurried to it, who have provoked God to give them up to their heart's lusts. He that was so compassionate as to spare Agag and the cattle of the Amalekites, in disobedience to the command of God, could now, with unrelenting bowels, see the priests of the Lord murdered, and nothing spared of all that belonged to them. For that sin, God left him to this. 2. The accomplishment of the threatenings long since pronounced against the house of Eli; for Ahimelech and his family were descendants from him. Though Saul was unrighteous in doing this, yet God was righteous in permitting it: now God performed against Eli that at which the ears of them that heard it must needs tingle, as he had told him that he would "judge his house for ever," chap. iii. 11—13. No word of God shall fall to the ground. 3. This may be considered as a great judgment upon Israel, and the just punishment of their desiring a king before the time God intended them one. How deplorable was the state of religion at this time in Israel!—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Oppression often forces men into measures to which they were entirely averse, and deprives the community of the services of its most useful members: yet the Lord amidst all dangers preserves his people for their appointed work. He can promote their good by the most contemptible and meanest instruments: and the Son of David receives all who come to him, however vile and miserable: he changes them all into a holy people, and employs them in his service; and they who would reign with him must be contented first to suffer with him.—True piety increases and purifies natural affection; and teaches men, however occupied or distressed, to be tender of their aged parents; and to be more ready to meet hardship or danger themselves, than to expose them to it.—In all our difficulties we should wait till we know what "God will do for us;" seeing none of our enemies can go further than he is pleased to permit them: we should therefore guard against excessive fear, venture readily into any place whither duty calls us, and, without yielding to resentment or despondency, persevere in looking out for opportunities of usefulness.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIII. DAVID'S ANXIETY TO KNOW THE DIVINE WILL.—David consulted with God concerning his own preservation. He knew by the information brought him that Saul was plotting his ruin, ver. 9, and therefore applies himself to his great Protector for direction. No sooner is the ephod brought him, than he makes use of it, "Bring hither the ephod." We have the Scriptures, those lively oracles, in our hands, let us take advice from them in doubtful cases; "Bring hither the Bible." David's address to God, upon this occasion, is, 1. Very solemn and reverent. Twice he calls God, the "Lord God of Israel," and thrice he calls himself his "servant," ver. 10, 11. Those that address God, must

3 And David's men said unto him, [d]Behold, we be afraid here in Judah: how much more then if we come to Keilah against the armies of the Philistines?

4 Then David enquired of the LORD [e]yet again. And the LORD answered him and said, Arise, go down to Keilah; [f]for I will deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philistines, and brought away[1] their cattle, and smote them with a great slaughter. So David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

6 And it came to pass, [g]when[2] Abiathar the son of Ahimelech fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with [h]an ephod[3] in his hand.

7 ¶ And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul said, [i]God hath delivered him into mine hand; for [j]he is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars.

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to besiege David and his men.

9 ¶ And David [k]knew that Saul secretly practised mischief against him; and he said to Abiathar the priest, [l]Bring hither the ephod.

10 Then said David, O LORD God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, to [m]destroy the city for my sake.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O LORD God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. [n]And the LORD said, He will come down.

12 Then said David, Will the men of Keilah *deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the LORD said, [o]They will deliver thee up.

13 ¶ Then David and his men, which were about [p]six hundred, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbare to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderness in strong holds, and remained in [q]a mountain in the [r]wilderness of Ziph. And [s]Saul sought him every day, [t]but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

16 And Jonathan Saul's son arose, and went to David into the wood, and [u]strengthened his hand in God.[4]

17 And he said unto him, [x]Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father [y]shall not find thee; and [z]thou shalt be king over Israel, and [a]I shall be next unto thee; and [b]that also Saul my father knoweth.

18 And [c]they two made[5] a covenant before the LORD: and David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

19 ¶ Then came up [d]the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, saying, Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds in the wood, in the hill of [e]Hachilah, which is [†]on the south of [‡]Jeshimon?

20 Now therefore, O king, come down according to [f]all the desire of thy soul to come down; and [g]our part shall be to deliver him into the king's hand.

21 And Saul said, [h]Blessed be ye of the LORD; for ye have compassion on me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know and see his place where his [§]haunt is, and who hath seen him there: for it is told me that he dealeth very subtilely.

23 See therefore, and [i]take knowledge of all the lurking places where he hideth himself, and come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you: and it shall come to pass, if he be in the land, that [k]I will search him out throughout all [l]the thousands of Judah.[6]

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderness of [m]Maon, in the plain on [n]the south of Jeshimon.

25 Saul also and his men went to seek him. And they told David: wherefore he came down [l]into a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and [o]David made haste to get [p]away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

27 ¶ But [q]there came a messenger[7] unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for [r]the Philistines have *invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place [†]Selahammahlekoth.

29 ¶ And David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds at [s]En-gedi.[8] know their distance, and who they are speaking to. 2. Very particular and express. His representation of the case is so, ver. 10, "Thy servant has certainly heard on good authority," (for he would not call for the ephod upon every idle rumour,) "that Saul has a design upon Keilah;" he does not say, "to destroy me," but, "to destroy the city" (as he had lately done the city of Nob) "for my sake." He seems more solicitous for their safety than for his own, and will expose himself any where, rather than they shall be brought into trouble by his being among them. Generous souls are thus minded. His queries upon the case are likewise very particular. God allows us to be so in our addresses to him; "Lord, direct me in this matter, about which I am now at a loss." He does indeed invert the due order of his queries, but God in his answer puts him into method. That question should have been put first, and was first answered, "Will Saul come down, as thy servant has heard?" "Yea," says the oracle, "he will come down; he has resolved it, is preparing for it, and will do it, unless he hear that thou hast quitted the town." "Well, but if he do come down, will the men of Keilah stand by me in holding the city against him, or will they open him the gates, and deliver me into his hand?" If he had asked the men (that is, the magistrates or elders) of Keilah themselves, what they would do in that case, they could not have told him, not knowing their own minds, nor what they should do when it came to the trial, much less which way the superior vote of their council would carry it; or they might have told him they would protect him, and yet afterward have betrayed him; but God could tell him infallibly: "When Saul besieges their city, and demands of them that they surrender thee into his hands, how fond soever they now seem of thee, as their saviour, they will deliver thee up, rather than stand the shock of Saul's fury." Note, (1.) God knows all men better than they know themselves, knows their strength, what is in them, and what they will do, if they come into such and such circumstances. (2.) He therefore knows not only what will be, but what would be if they were not prevented; and therefore knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and how to render to every man according to his works.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—In difficult circumstances we shall find the unbelief of our professed helpers a very discouraging hinderance: but the most effectual way of answering their objections, and securing their assistance, is to refer them to the precepts and promises of God.—No ties of honour, gratitude, or affection, can secure the heart, under powerful temptations: nay, we none of us know how we should act if assailed by the terrors of impending death, and left without the immediate support of divine grace. He who made the human heart, can alone estimate its deceitfulness: we ought not therefore to confide in our own resolutions, or in the assurances of others; but depend on the Lord to guide and keep us: and if we meet with evil treatment, we need not wonder, and ought not to revile or murmur.—The kindness of those friends, whom he raises up where we could least expect them, may well countervail the malice of our enemies, and the ingratitude and fickleness of those whom we have served. And if the converse of one friend can, at one interview, occasion comfort and strength to our hearts; what may not be expected from the continual supports, and daily visits, and powerful love, of the sinner's Saviour, the believer's covenanted Friend? And what will heaven be, where perfect universal friendship reigns, without interruption, separation, or alloy? Let us then continually seek the renewed ratification of the covenant of grace, and cultivate the friendship of the Lord and of his people. Our most rational and pleasing expectations of another kind may be frustrated; all other unions must be dissolved; but here disappointment and disunion can have no place for ever. The influence of wickedness, in those who fill exalted stations, widely and fatally diffuses itself among their inferiors: many will pay court to them, by aiding their sinful purposes; nay, some will pride themselves in resembling them in their vices! and those only will be treated as friends, who in fact are their most destructive enemies. They therefore who are thus distinguished, have additional reasons for bridling their passions, and exercising themselves unto godliness; lest they should occasion the ruin of multitudes, and thus aggravate their own condemnation.—The language of piety, separate from its substantial effects, can only amuse and deceive those who hear, and those who use it.—Malice is ever restless and tormenting; and though disappointed, it still hopes for success; but numbers, power, rage, and subtlety can never destroy those whom God protects. His methods of preserving his people are unnumbered. He sometimes leads them into the most imminent danger, to endear their deliverance, and to increase the torment of their persecuting foes. And he can employ one enemy, contrary to his intention, to deliver us from another still more formidable; or he can fill the hands of persecutors with other work, so that they are constrained to postpone their malicious purposes. But we must not expect much comfort in this evil world, which uses the best of men in so base a manner, and which once "crucified the Lord of glory." We should therefore study to pass through it as pilgrims; and to leave it as they who are departing to a better, that is, a heavenly country.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. DAVID'S MAGNANIMITY.—David "cut off the skirt of Saul's robe," but soon repented that he had done that: "his heart smote him" for it, ver. 5, though it did Saul no real hurt, and served David for a proof that it was in his power to have killed him, ver. 11; yet, because it was an affront to Saul's royal dignity, he wished he had not done it. Note, It is a good thing to have a heart within us, smiting us for sins tines, that [b]it was told him, saying, Behold, David is in [c]the wilderness of En-gedi.

2 Then Saul took [d]three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and [e]went to seek David and his men upon [f]the rocks of the wild goats.

3 And he came to the sheepcotes by the way, where was a cave; and Saul went in [g]to cover his feet: and [h]David and his men remained in the sides of the cave.

4 And [i]the men of David said unto him, Behold[1] the day of which the LORD said unto thee, Behold, [j]I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee. Then David arose, and cut off the skirt of [†]Saul's robe privily.

5 And it came to pass afterward, that [k]David's heart smote him,[2] because he had cut off Saul's skirt.

6 And he said unto his men, [l]The LORD forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the LORD's anointed, to stretch forth mine hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

7 So David [‡]stayed his servants with these words, and [m]suffered them not to rise against Saul. But Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way.

8 ¶ David also arose afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, [n]My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, [o]David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself.

9 And David said to Saul, [p]Wherefore hearest thou men's words, saying, Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have seen, how that the LORD had delivered thee to-day into mine hand in the cave: and some [q]bade me kill thee: but mine eye spared thee; and I said, I will not put forth mine hand against my lord; for he is [r]the LORD's anointed.

11 Moreover, my father, see, yea, see the skirt of thy robe in my hand: [s]for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and see, that there is [t]neither evil nor transgression in mine hand, and I have not sinned against thee; yet [u]thou huntest my soul to take it.

12 The [x]LORD judge between me and thee, and the LORD avenge me of thee: but [y]mine hand shall not be upon thee.

13 As saith the proverb of the ancients, [z]Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked;[3] but mine hand shall not be upon thee.

14 After whom is [a]the king of Israel come out? after whom dost thou pursue? [b]after a dead dog, [c]after a flea.

15 The LORD therefore [d]be judge, and judge between me and thee, and see, and [§]plead my cause, and deliver me out of thine hand.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, when David had made an end of speaking these words unto Saul, that Saul said, [e]Is this thy voice, my son David? And [f]Saul lifted up his voice and wept.

17 And he said to David, [g]Thou art more righteous than I: for [h]thou hast rewarded me good,[4] whereas I have rewarded thee evil.

18 And thou hast shewed this day how that thou hast dealt well with me: forasmuch as when [i]the LORD had [‖]delivered me into thine hand, thou killedst me not.

19 For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? wherefore [j]the LORD reward thee good for that thou hast done unto me this day.

20 And now, behold, [k]I know well that thou shalt surely be king, and that the kingdom of Israel shall be established in thine hand.

21 [l]Swear now therefore unto me by the LORD, that [m]thou wilt not cut off my seed after me, and that thou wilt not destroy my name out of my father's house.

22 And David sware unto Saul. And Saul went home; but [n]David and his men gat them up unto [o]the hold.

that seem little; it is a sign that conscience is awake and tender, and will be the means of preventing greater sins. He reasons strongly both with himself and with his servants, against doing Saul any hurt. 1. He reasons with himself, ver. 6; "The Lord forbid that I should do this thing." Note, Sin is a thing which it becomes us to startle at, and to resist the temptations to, not only with resolution, but with a holy indignation. He considers Saul now, not as his enemy, and the only person that stood in the way of his preferment, for then he would be induced to hearken to the temptation, but as God's anointed, that is, the person whom God had appointed to reign as long as he lived, and who, as such, was under the particular protection of the divine law; and as his master, to whom he was obliged to be faithful. Let servants and subjects learn hence to be dutiful and loyal, whatever hardships are put upon them, 1 Pet. ii. 18. 2. He reasons with his servants. "He suffered them not to rise against Saul," ver. 7. He would not only not do this bad thing himself, but he would not suffer those about him to do it. Thus did he render good for evil to him from whom he had received evil for good; and was herein both a type of Christ, who saved his persecutors, and an example to all christians, not to be "overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good." He follows Saul out of the cave, and though he would not take the opportunity to slay him, yet he wisely took the opportunity, if possible, to slay his enmity, by convincing him that he was not such a man as he took him for.—Henry.

SAUL'S RELENTING.—Ver. 16—22. These forcible words, and his generous behaviour, produced a temporary conviction in Saul's mind of David's excellency, the righteousness of his cause, and the certainty of his advancement; and consequently that himself was very culpable, and in a ruinous path. Probably he was in some measure convinced of these things at other times; but they now more deeply affected him; nor could he suppress his emotion, or refuse to acknowledge his convictions. Instead therefore of attempting to destroy David, as he intended, his malice was arrested, and he both spoke well of him, foretold his establishment on the throne, and begged of the Lord to reward him for sparing his life; and he owned that he should not have behaved thus, if David had been in his power. Under this conviction Saul desired of David the security of an oath, that he would not, when king, extirpate his posterity; and David was willing thus to bind himself to his duty; but he did not ask Saul to swear to him, that he would no more seek his life; knowing that he did not duly regard the obligation of an oath: nor would he trust himself with him, being aware how little such transient appearances could be depended on.—Saul's conduct in persecuting David, even when convinced of his excellency, and that he would be advanced to the throne, illustrates the behaviour of the scribes and priests in their determined enmity to Christ, notwithstanding they could not resist the wisdom of his words, deny the reality of his miracles, or at all impeach his character.
